

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

CONTAINING

THE PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

SIXTY-THIRD CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

VOLUME L.

WASHINGTON

1913

~~11
75
set~~

~~D. OF D.
FEB 27 1914~~

SURPLUS - 1
LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
DUPLICATE

VOLUME L, PART VI.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,
SIXTY-THIRD CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

1914

SENATE.

MONDAY, September 22, 1913.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

LAWS OF HAWAII (S. DOC. NO. 189).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of the senate journal of the regular session of the Seventh Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, together with a copy of the laws of the Territory of Hawaii, passed by the Legislature of Hawaii at its regular session in 1913, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MYERS. I present resolutions adopted by the Trades and Labor Council of Butte, Mont., which I ask may be printed in the Record and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas a condition of affairs has come about in the copper-mining industry in northern Michigan that is no longer tolerable to the mine workers of that district; and

Whereas the workers have gone out on strike for eight hours, a minimum wage of $3 per day for underground workers, a flat increase of 35 cents per day for surface workers, and for recognition of their union; and

Whereas these very reasonable demands of the workers have been received by the mine owners with contemptuous refusal, and by the importation of private detectives recruited from the criminal elements of New York City slums, who are commissioned as deputy sheriffs in Michigan, ostensibly for the preservation of the peace, but really for the purposes of provoking disturbances of the peace and to break the strike; and

Whereas in the further interests of the mine owners, and to intimidate the striking workers, and to defeat their laudable endeavors to improve their economic conditions, and to secure for themselves and their children the full enjoyment and rights of free laboring men in a land pledged to the principle of freedom and equal rights, the officials of the State of Michigan have sent into the strike district the armed militia of the State, thus using the political power reposed in them by all the people for the purpose of oppressing and coercing some of the people, namely, the striking mine workers; and

Whereas the said deputies and militiamen, in pursuit of the ends for which they have been sent thither, have done and are doing deeds of violence abhorrent to every sense of honor and justice, deeds which under the civil law would render them liable to criminal prosecutions and imprisonment: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the delegates of the Trades and Labor Council of Butte, Mont., do denounce and condemn the owners and managers of the Boston Coppers for their conscienceless and inhuman treatment of their employees, and especially for their arrogant and brutal treatment of the protesting and striking workers and their families.

Resolved, That we emphatically condemn the State and county officials of Michigan for prostituting their political positions and power for the economic advantage and benefit of those powerful capitalist interests and to the economic disadvantage, the moral hurt, and the social degradation of the humble and weak workers.

Resolved, That we call upon the United States Senators and Members of Congress from Montana to demand and to vote for a congressional investigation of the strike in question; be it further

Resolved, That inasmuch as the management of Boston Coppers has conclusively demonstrated its incapacity and inability to conduct that industry in a manner which is socially beneficial and have proved themselves incapable of recognizing the rights of their employees and of the general public it is our serious and emphatic conviction that the time has arrived when those properties should be taken over by the Federal Government and operated by the Government for the benefit of the whole people; and be it further

Resolved, That we pledge to our striking fellow workers in Michigan the moral and material support of this body and its affiliated organizations till their struggle for juster, humaner, and more righteous conditions has been won. And we call upon the several bodies affiliated in this council to contribute liberally in support of the striking miners and that if necessary special assessments on their respective memberships be levied to furnish funds to assist the striking miners while they are out and till victory crowns their efforts.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the United States Senators and the Congressmen from Montana, to the Western Federation of Miners, and to the public press.

H. L. DAVIS,
E. R. TORREY,
L. J. DUNCAN,
Committee on Resolutions.

Mr. MYERS. I present resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of Butte, Mont., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions.

BUTTE, MONT., September 14, 1913.

We, the citizens of Butte, in mass meeting assembled:

Whereas working conditions in the copper-mining district of the State of Michigan have become so intolerable that the workers have at last revolted; and

Whereas a strike of practically all of the men in the copper fields now exists; and

Whereas the management of the copper properties have refused to arbitrate or treat with their employees, thus proving their inefficiency to be in control of this mighty modern industry; and

Whereas Sheriff Cruse, of Houghton County, and Gov. Ferris, of the State of Michigan, have so far placed aside the prerogatives of their respective offices and aided and abetted the mining managements in their efforts to break the strike; and

Whereas "by their deeds shall ye know them," we, the citizens of Butte, do in unmeasured terms censure and condemn these officials, who, chosen to protect each and all alike, have arrayed themselves with the masters as against the persons who made their positions possible; and

Whereas hideous crimes, and even murder, are the means employed to force the employees back to a state of servitude: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the citizens of Butte, Mont., in mass meeting assembled do condemn in unmeasured terms the lawless acts perpetrated upon our brothers and sisters in the State of Michigan; and be it further

Resolved, That we call upon the honorable Congress of the United States to proceed with a congressional investigation, that the true facts as they exist may be made public and remedial legislation applied, to the end that our fellow workers may enjoy the rights and liberties guaranteed to all persons by our Federal Constitution; and be it further

Resolved, That the chairman of this meeting be empowered, and is so ordered, to immediately transmit to the honorable Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Montana the sentiment of the citizens of this community as embodied in these resolutions; and be it further

Resolved, That inasmuch as the management of the "Boston Coppers" have, through their oppressive methods, proven themselves utterly unfit to control and manage such a vast public trust that we are firmly of the opinion that the time has come for the Federal Government to assume full charge of these properties; and be it further

Resolved, That we, the citizens and unionists of Butte, Mont., pledge to the strikers of Michigan our moral and financial support; and be it

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be given to the public press and copies sent to the strikers in Michigan.

Respectfully submitted,

F. A. BIGELOW,
BERT RILEY,
H. H. SMITH,
Resolution Committee.

Mr. JONES presented a memorial adopted by John Barlow Camp, No. 6, United Spanish War Veterans, Department of Washington and Alaska, remonstrating against the proposed change in the United States flag, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THOMAS LITTLE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2666) for the relief of Thomas Little, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 3126) to correct the military record of A. M. Weller (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GRONNA:

A bill (S. 3127) granting an increase of pension to Linnie C. Hawkins (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURTON:

A bill (S. 3128) for the relief of Lewis M. Miller; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3129) granting an increase of pension to William Wilson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 3130) granting certain lands of the Colville Indian Reservation, Wash., to the Washington Historical Society; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A bill (S. 3131) granting an increase of pension to John W. Chapman; and

A bill (S. 3132) granting a pension to Sarah E. Murray; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL (H. R. 7898).

Mr. GALLINGER (for Mr. PENROSE) submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $15,000 for completion of the inspection house of the Philadelphia immigration station at Gloucester City, N. J., intended to be proposed to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also (for Mr. PENROSE) submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $30,000 for the construction of one high-explosive loading shop at the Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa., intended to be proposed to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MYERS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for the employment of 12 additional clerks in the General Land Office, Interior Department, intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

POSTMASTER AT VALLEY CITY, N. DAK.

Mr. McCUMBER. I submit a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 182) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be directed to transmit to the Senate all papers, reports, and other information on file in his office relating to the removal of W. H. Pray as postmaster at Valley City, N. Dak.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KERN. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being objection, the resolution will lie over.

THE BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY (S. DOC. NO. 190).

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, in a speech which I made last Monday I asked leave, which was granted, to print a circular issued by Messrs. Oxnard and Cutting in 1899 relating to the beet-sugar industry. I now ask leave to have that circular printed as a public document instead of inserting it in the RECORD as a part of my speech.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I rise in this presence to express my regret that a great metropolitan newspaper, in its effort at self-advertising, should have gone so far outside the bounds of propriety and good taste as to endeavor to belittle the Secretary of State of the United States. I am frank to say that I am a friend and admirer of William J. Bryan, and have been since I first met him, when he was a Member of Congress, some years ago. I have seen nothing thus far to shake my confidence in him. I deem him a patriot and a statesman. So long as the public business is not neglected, his time is his own, and no one has dared to charge. Something has been said of "fixed charges." I do not know just what may have been meant, but I do know that a few years ago Mr. Bryan was maintaining and educating two boys from Japan, and to-day I believe he is educating three or four young men; it seems to me these may readily be construed as "fixed charges." Mr. President, I have never spoken with Mr. Bryan on this subject. He needs no defense from me or any other man. He will live in history and in the memories of the American people long after his puny detractors have been forgotten.

In this connection I cut from yesterday's Washington Post a little clipping regarding the matter of the vacation of Presidents, which I desire that the Secretary shall read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Presidents all have been accustomed to spend considerable time away from the capital. While this practice has from time to time aroused feeble protest from the public, never but once in the history of the Nation has it received official criticism in Congress. The Democratic House in the administration of President Grant passed a resolution of inquiry calling upon the President to inform Congress what executive acts were performed by him while away from Washington. The resolution was introduced for partisan purposes and drew no response from the President. In fact, the question served as more or less of a boomerang to those who made it.

The presidential vacation began with Washington, who in the eight years of his occupation of the office, spent 181 days on private business or rest away from the seat of government in Philadelphia. The country did not at that time offer the same inducements to travel that now exist, and a journey back to Mount Vernon required considerable time, and President Washington was in point of fact more remote from the center of political affairs than his successors have been, with the exception of President Adams, who spent 1 year and 20 days in his New England home, when Congress was not in session.

Jefferson took 796 days to himself while President. Monroe was out of Washington nearly one-third of the time of his administration. Jackson served two terms and took more than a year and a half out of his time. From Jackson to Lincoln it was customary for the Presidents to visit their homes in summer or to pass the interval between Congresses at some point other than the capital.

By reason of the war, it was more necessary for Lincoln to keep in touch with the seat of government than any other President. His excursions were not further from the capital than Richmond or Fortress Monroe and the battlefield of Gettysburg. Lincoln did not return to his native or adopted State while President.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed and the calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

Senate resolution No. 19, to authorize the allowance of an additional clerk to Senators having less than three was announced as the first business in order on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

Senate resolution No. 65, directing the Committee on Foreign Relations to report to the Senate certain information relative to employees in the Diplomatic and Consular Service of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 834) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order, and the Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women.

Mr. GALLINGER. First let the bill be acted upon that is being read.

Mr. ASHURST. I beg pardon. I withdraw the request for the present.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ASHURST and Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey addressed the Chair.

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon. I did not know there was anything special to be brought up. I thought the Senate was on the calendar.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. With the Senator's permission, I feel very much interested in House bill 7377—

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. A bill has been partly read, and it ought to be concluded or else displaced by some motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unless the motion for an executive session is insisted upon, the reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

Mr. BACON. I will inquire what the bill is.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is an omnibus pension bill on the calendar.

Mr. REED. An omnibus pension bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. So called.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to the present consideration of all bills on the calendar this morning.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator, then, objects to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator from North Carolina objects to the consideration of any further bills.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. This is a very little bill and will take no time.

Mr. GALLINGER. To shorten this matter, inasmuch as a pension bill has been objected to, I shall object to the consideration of any further bills on the calendar. It may as well be understood.

Mr. OVERMAN. I said I would object to the consideration of all bills on the calendar.

Mr. REED. Possibly the Senator from New Hampshire thought I objected to the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; the Senator from North Carolina objected.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not object because it is a pension bill, but I do not think we ought to take up any bills on the calendar at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know anything about this bill, but I shall object to all bills on the calendar being considered this morning.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. That objection being made, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next at 12 o'clock m.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate adjourn.
The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, September 25, 1913, at 12 o'clock m.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate September 22, 1913.

SOLICITOR FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.
Joseph W. Folk, to be Solicitor for the Department of State.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, September 22, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, our heavenly Father, we thank Thee for the visible and invisible forces without and within, which are ever moving us onward and upward to larger life and nobler achievements. May we be more susceptible to those influences, that with firm and steadfast steps we may march forward to the goal of perfected manhood, in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, September 18, 1913, was read and approved.

ELECTION TO THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move the election of Mr. MITCHELL, of Massachusetts, to fill a vacancy on the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] moves the election of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MITCHELL] to fill a vacancy on the Committee on the Judiciary. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL WEDNESDAY.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next, and that business called on Calendar Wednesday may be in order on Thursday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet next Thursday, and that business in order next Wednesday as on Calendar Wednesday shall be in order on Thursday. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the first part of the gentleman's request.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The only reason I ask that is that there are some bills on the calendar that may come up on Wednesday. We could adjourn until Wednesday, but the conference report on the tariff bill will not be ready until Thursday. I do not want to bring Members of the House in on Wednesday and on Thursday both. I thought the Members would have a longer time if the House adjourned until Thursday.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I am not in favor of accommodating the business of the House to the orders of the Democratic caucus any further, and I give notice to the gentleman that even if this request is granted, it will require a quorum to pass any of these bills on Thursday as of Calendar Wednesday. I object to the latter part of the request.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will ask the gentleman from Alabama to change that to Wednesday. There are certain bills on the Union Calendar which can not be reached unless we get to them on Calendar Wednesday. A number of Members, including myself, have stayed here all the session and have not been absent at all, and we desire to have those bills considered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

Mr. MURDOCK. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Alabama, will there probably be an opportunity to vote on the tariff conference report on Friday?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is what the gentleman has in mind at present?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes. I do not think there will be an opportunity. I am not sure. I think the earliest date on which the conferees can possibly report back will be Thursday, but I do not know.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then the conference report will go over for 24 hours?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Wednesday? There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] I have 10 minutes in which to address the House on the currency question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELDER] asks unanimous consent that when the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] concludes his remarks to-day he shall have 10 minutes in which to address the House upon the subject of the currency. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, I see that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. GUERNSEY] is anxious to bring up a matter that ought to be privileged.

The SPEAKER. It is privileged. There is no question on earth about that, but the Chair proposes to get through with these routine matters in a short time.

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the certificate of election of the gentleman from the third district of Maine. [Applause on the Republican side.] The Chair has examined the certificate and finds it correct, so there is no use to waste time in reading it. The gentleman will come forward.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present Hon. JOHN A. PETERS, recently elected a Member of the House from the third district of Maine. [Applause on the Republican side.] Mr. PETERS appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELDER] for 10 minutes in which to address the House after the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] concludes his remarks?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that the speech is to be on the currency bill.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Is it coupled with unanimous consent to have the currency bill brought back here and reconsidered?

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. PAYNE. It is simply to give the gentleman an opportunity to state his views?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. I think I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a communication written by George B. Wing, of Cleveland, Ohio, printed in the Cleveland Plain Dealer of Thursday, July 24, 1913. I will state that the article is on the Mexican question, but that there is absolutely nothing inflammatory in it or anything that is calculated to disturb anybody.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call my colleague's attention to the fact that repeated objections have been made to the printing in the RECORD of these effusions on various subjects by people who are not Members of the House, and which subjects are not related to any debate or public matter being considered by the House; and that being a matter which I believe is justly criticized in a great many quarters, I object, without any personal objection to the article that the gentleman has in mind.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD generally.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. I object to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELDER] to-day I be given 15 minutes to discuss a resolution which I have introduced to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMSON] asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELDER] he may have 15 minutes in which to discuss a resolution he has introduced, the subject not being stated.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman what is the nature of the resolution?

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is a resolution covering certain oil-land cases.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia objects.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes some time to-day before the House adjourns.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say to the gentleman from Michigan that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELDER] have secured unanimous consent to address the House for a matter of 50 minutes this morning. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMSON] asked leave to address the House for 15 minutes. That request was objected to. This is a one-sided proposition, and I shall object to future requests of this kind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] is not upon this side.

Mr. MURDOCK. That does not make any difference. We are going to play square or not at all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas objects.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of sweet wine and pure food. This relates to California, and it is a matter pending in this House and in the Senate to-day.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we even up things and get into good humor by allowing two standpatters and one bull moose to speak for 10 minutes on some harmless subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to that request.

The SPEAKER. That would put the Chair in the position of having to decide what is a harmless subject. Does the gentleman from New York object?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice the gentleman from Georgia wants the opposition to speak on some harmless matter only.

Mr. MURDOCK. I think the addresses will be harmless.

Mr. PAYNE. I think that is true, and I suppose that refers to the address to be made on the currency question, as that is no longer before the House; but I shall object to any such speeches being made this morning as those to which the gentleman from Alabama refers.

Mr. MURDOCK. But the gentleman from New York had his opportunity and he did not object.

Mr. PAYNE. What opportunity?

Mr. MURDOCK. He had an opportunity to object to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELDER] addressing the House.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course I had the opportunity. The gentleman from Kansas can not instruct me upon that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I object; and I demand the regular order.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. LENROO, for two weeks, on account of illness in his family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—PUBLIC BUILDING AT DEFIANCE, OHIO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request, which the Clerk reported:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
September 19, 1913.

Mr. ANSBERRY asks leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of H. R. 16076, public building at Defiance, Ohio, Sixtieth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. There is so much confusion it is difficult for the Chair to hear Members when they address the Chair. The reason so many corrections were made to the Journal this morning was because of a similar uproar during the time the vote was being taken on Thursday last, when it was next to impossible for the tally clerk to correctly hear the responses of Members. What is the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I first desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, can a Member of Congress who is not present at the sessions of the Congress present a request of the character just reported by the Clerk?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he can. He can get somebody to do it for him.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Without an opportunity to investigate this matter, I object.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Florida will withdraw his objection. The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. ANSBERRY, has been abroad for his health for some time, and this request was undoubtedly made by his secretary, who is looking after Mr. ANSBERRY's business as best he can during his absence.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] that he make the request himself.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Florida insists upon his objection, I wish to make that request myself.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, on the statement of the gentleman from Ohio I shall withdraw my objection, but I want to say this: I know the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] has been sick, and that is the reason he is not here, but bills have been introduced by Members of Congress who were not in Washington at all, and I do not think that is a proper procedure.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is not.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I simply wanted to know whether or not a Member who is at his home or somewhere else can introduce a bill in this House.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I insist on the regular order, which I demanded some time ago.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD—

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] demands the regular order. The Clerk will call the committees.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. What is the routine business of the House?

The SPEAKER. Well, the routine business of the House is such as asking leave to do this, that, and the other, communications which are addressed to the Speaker which are really intended for the House, or communications addressed to the House.

Mr. MURDOCK. Well, I call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that on a previous day unanimous consent was asked and granted that after the routine business of the House had been disposed of on Monday the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] should address the House for 40 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] which the Clerk read? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia for 40 minutes.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to find the House this morning in an unusually good humor, and I am very sorry that any Member has interposed an objection to anybody addressing the House upon some harmless subject. The remarks which I wish to submit to the House this morning will necessarily involve for a short period of time a discussion of the recent banking and currency bill. The reason I propose to discuss briefly one feature of the banking and currency bill is because of the fact that I could not secure enough time during the regular discussion of this bill to intelligently present my views upon this subject to the House.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I would not inflict myself upon the Members of this body at this particular time were it not for the fact that I believe the most troublesome proposition in the recent currency bill confronting the Democratic membership of this House was the retirement of the bonds securing national bank notes bearing 2 per cent interest and the refunding of this bonded indebtedness of the United States Government.

As a general rule, public men who reach the Halls of Congress are ignorant to a degree of technical banking and currency. So far as I am concerned, when the discussion of this great measure was begun in the Democratic caucus I plead my absolute ignorance of the banking and currency question, but I do believe that the able arguments made by those who have devoted much time and study to this great question have very greatly enlightened the general membership of this House and that now we are in a position to calmly and coolly discuss the proposition to which I desire to call your attention.

As a sincere believer in currency reform and as a member of the party committed to the passage of a currency bill at this session, I feel that I am justified in stating that only a matter of the greatest importance to the interests of the country at large would justify a discussion by me, after this bill has passed from a further consideration by the House, of a plan by which the Government can refund the present 2 per cent bonds used to secure national bank notes at the same rate of 2 per cent and without imposing an additional 1 per cent burden on the Government by increasing that rate as proposed in the bill.

In discussing the matter which I shall bring to your attention I wish it to be understood that I am not in any sense suggesting an amendment to the bill which has already passed the House and which is now under consideration by the Senate. I am suggesting that there is a method by which the outstanding seven hundred and fifty millions of 2 per cent bonds can be absolutely removed as a factor in our currency structure and can be refunded by being distributed among the masses of the people. I am suggesting a plan by which the Government can refund these securities at 2 per cent instead of at 3 per cent as proposed, and I am making this suggestion in the belief that when it is fully understood and appreciated by the gentlemen who have devoted so much time and intelligent thought to the study of this question they will be impressed with the value of the idea and of the plan and will hereafter, with their greater wisdom and experience in this particular line, formulate such additional legislation as will enable our Government to maintain its present high credit and continue to borrow money when it is needed on a 2 per cent basis rather than on a 3 per cent basis.

There is no legislation, not even excepting the tariff bill, in which every individual in the United States is so vitally interested as in legislation affecting and involving the circulating medium of our country. The principles underlying our financial structure must be sound because every daily business transaction of every man, woman, and child in the United States is going to be adversely affected if a mistake is made and if an unsound principle is adopted.

Since the panic of 1893 the people of the United States have almost universally been convinced that our Government was confronted with the most inadequate and faulty financial system of any of the great Governments of the world. This impression was confirmed by the unfortunate experience of the country during the panic of 1907, and there has been a constant and growing demand that the fundamental plan of the whole system be changed in some way so as to relieve us from the danger of these constantly recurring financial upheavals. Both parties have recognized the necessity of some change. Under the Republican administration a currency commission was appointed which studied the question exhaustively. Under the Democratic administration now in power a reform is to be actually accomplished, and the people are naturally expecting that with all the time and study that have been given to the subject a currency system shall be inaugurated which will prove adequate to our needs, which will make impossible a recurrence of the former lamentable conditions, and which will be a model among the systems of the world.

I believe that in the bill which has been passed by this House and which in a short time will be written upon our statute books we have met and overcome the principal objections and difficulties which experience has demonstrated were incident to the old system, but owing to conditions which no man could control we have been confronted in the consideration of this question with the debt of the Government held largely by the banks, we have recognized the necessity and justice of providing for this debt, either by payment or refunding, and in order to meet this obligation in a spirit of absolute justice and fairness we have even been willing to increase the rate of interest on this Government debt so as to see that the creditors of the United States were absolutely satisfied and received one hundred cents for every dollar which they had loaned us. We have done this because no one has suggested a practical method by which these obligations could be paid with money secured on better terms. I take it that no man within the sound of my voice, whatever may be his interest, would object to a plan for refunding the Government's obligations at 2 per cent instead of at 3 per cent if he could be convinced that it is practicable to do this, and if a workable plan for accomplishing this result can be offered.

In consequence I have felt it my duty not only to the constituency which I represent but as a patriotic citizen of this country to call the attention of Congress to a matter which has only recently been brought to my attention, and to insist on a consideration of a method of meeting one of our greatest and gravest dangers in financial matters and of placing our Government's credit on a basis which is fundamentally right and which has heretofore been impossible of achievement because of the lack of facilities for carrying it into effect.

After the War between the States the United States Government was confronted with a debt of approximately $4,000,000,000, and was suffering from an impaired credit necessarily consequent to the tremendous strain that had been placed upon its resources. In order to sustain that credit a most ingenious system was devised and has since been continuously operated, with the result that our Government has enjoyed a wonderful credit and has been able to borrow on the most advantageous terms, but with the further result that an inordinate influence upon the Government has been made possible by the concentration in the hands of a few institutions and a few individuals of a major portion of the Government's outstanding obligations.

Under our financial system the national banks, organized under Federal charter and operating under the supervision and control of the National Government with all the consequent prestige, have been allowed to issue currency secured by the deposit of Government bonds. As a matter of fact, in order to create a market for these Government bonds the national banks having a capital of over $150,000 have been required to invest $50,000 of their capital, and banks having a capital of not over $150,000 have been required to invest not less than one-fourth of their capital in Government bonds; and as an offset to this requirement have been permitted to issue money in the shape of national bank notes against these bonds so purchased, provided the bonds were deposited with the Treasurer of the United States as security for such circulation. By this means a national bank was required by law to purchase Government bonds and could practically then have the power to issue and circulate money up to the extent of the par value of the bonds so purchased so that the bank was substantially reimbursed for the money invested in the bonds.

The result of such a system has necessarily been to create a strong demand for the bonds and to lower the rate of interest paid by the Government on these obligations. In addition, the demand created by the banks for these bonds, which they could use as a basis of circulation and which they could purchase substantially without cost to themselves, has reduced the interest rate on the bonds to such an extent that the great mass of the people have been in effect precluded from becoming the owner of Government securities. Consequently to-day we find that there are approximately $750,000,000 par value of United States Government bonds bearing 2 per cent interest and a total bonded debt of $1,044,852,814.76 held by the great banking institutions of this country and used as a basis of currency. We also find that a United States Government bond is a practically unknown investment among the great masses of the people. I believe I could state, without fear of successful contradiction, that in this country not one man in one thousand has ever laid eyes upon a United States Government bond, and that these bonds are substantially unknown among the general public as an investment for their surplus funds.

There is another and equally important effect of this condition. Whenever the Government needs to borrow money and proposes to sell its bonds, the question immediately arises as to whether the bonds to be issued shall carry the circulation privilege. That is to say, whether the new bonds can be purchased by the banks and used as a basis for additional circulation. If the circulation privilege is not attached to the proposed new bonds, it is immediately conceded that the omission of this privilege must be offset by a higher interest rate. This question was raised and discussed in connection with the issue of the Philippine bonds and of the Panama Canal bonds, and it will be immediately seen that under these circumstances the fixing of a price at which any new bonds issued can be sold and the rate of interest which they are to bear can practically be dictated by the holders of the outstanding twos unless the new bonds contain this circulation privilege.

It will hardly be denied that the man who owns the debts of John Doe can exercise an enormous and possibly a controlling influence over John Doe. I believe it is equally true that one man or set of men who control an overpowering majority of the obligations of a government can perhaps exercise an unfair and an undesirable influence over the operations of that government. Whether such power is exercised or not need not be considered. The fact that the power exists is a sufficient reason for seeking a remedy.

Not only is the foregoing true, but under our peculiar financial system we have been confronted with the fact that the national bank notes were practically the only form of paper which could be inflated or contracted as business needs might require. Our gold certificates can only be issued against the actual deposit of the gold in the Treasury, and in times of stress gold disappears and, consequently, no inflation of the gold certificates can take place. Our silver certificates are issued only against actual deposits of the silver and, while they can be reissued, an increase of the volume of these certificates is prohibited by law. Our greenbacks are of a fixed amount, and, while they can be reissued, the volume can not be increased. Consequently any increase of the circulation must come from an increase of national-bank notes.

Until the act of May 30, 1908, national-bank notes could only be issued against the security of Government bonds. Consequently the ability to increase our currency in times of stress depended to a large extent upon the volume of Government bonds that were outstanding. We were in the anomalous position that if the Government paid off its bonded debt the circulation available for the business transactions of the country would be so reduced as to paralyze these business transactions.

It is true that under an act passed May 30, 1908, as a measure of temporary relief it was provided that national-bank notes might be issued against the security of bonds other than Government bonds, but my information is that not a dollar of currency has ever been issued under the terms of this act, and, consequently, for the purposes of this discussion it may be disregarded.

The Democratic Party has recognized in the fullest sense the danger that exists in this bond-secured circulation. It is pledged to a reform of the currency, and it proposes to change the basis of our circulation so that the volume of the circulation will not depend upon the amount of debt that the Government owes. It has now pending a bill to reform the currency and to base the circulating medium upon something more flexible than the Government debt and to remove the constantly threatening danger that must exist where no inflation of the available money can be made except concurrently with an inflation of the national debt.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. I think the gentleman stated that none of the 2 per cent bonds which are received for national-bank issues are in the hands of the masses of the people.

Mr. HOWARD. I said practically none. They are on deposit in the Treasury; of course, the law requires them to be deposited in the Treasury before the issue of the currency can take place.

Mr. FORDNEY. The rate of interest is so small that it is not attractive to the people.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman tell me where the 4 per cents are now which were issued during Mr. Cleveland's last administration? If I am correct in my information, not one dollar of those 4 per cents are held by any citizen of the United States. Will the gentleman explain why?

Mr. HOWARD. Well, I do not know what disposition was made of the Cleveland bonds.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will state that they were sold to the Rothschilds, all of them, and brought a premium of $30,000,000 in round numbers.

Mr. HOWARD. That only demonstrates the fact in relation to the Government's credit, that when it issues 4 per cent bonds when no national-bank circulation privilege is carried with the bonds, then the bonds, of course, increase in value as far as the interest coupons are concerned.

Mr. FORDNEY. What rate of interest would the gentleman suggest at which a Government bond should be issued that would be attractive to the masses of the people in the United States?

Mr. HOWARD. I will say that if the gentleman will sit right there and listen to me for about 15 minutes longer I will show the gentleman what class of bonds ought to be issued to attract the people to buy them.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will listen to the gentleman with a great deal of interest.

Mr. HOWARD. In this connection I wish to illustrate my point by reference to a most peculiar condition which arose during the panic of 1907. At that time there existed or was created a remarkable stringency in the money market. It seemed impossible to secure currency sufficient to perform the ordinary functions of business. The currency disappeared or was locked up and banks with an enormous volume of assets were faced with ruin unless additional cash could be provided.

At that time the United States Government was enjoying a most remarkable credit. Its 2 per cent bonds were selling above par. It could obtain money on a lower interest basis than could any nation of the civilized world. The effect of the stringency in the currency market was to increase the price of its bonds because every national bank in the country was anxious to secure Government bonds so that it could place them with the Treasurer of the United States and issue currency against them. The very conditions of the financial system then existing increased the value of the low interest-bearing security issued by the Government, while other securities usually recognized as being first class could not be disposed of at any figure, and while ordinary business requirements could not be met.

Mr. FORDNEY. Tell the House, if you please, what advantage a national bank could obtain by issuing money in 1907 by purchasing 2 per cent bonds at a premium and getting par for them in national-bank notes.

Mr. HOWARD. The question answers itself.

Mr. FORDNEY. It does not, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Let me answer the question of the gentleman from Michigan first. The banks all took their money that was issued by the Government, and they paid only 102 for the bonds from the Government, if the Government had any to sell, and at that time some of the banks in the city of New York paid as high as 25 per cent for gold.

Now, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. Is there any provision of law that requires the banks to own the bonds? Is it not a fact that the records of the Treasury Department show that there are now on deposit at least $40,000,000 of bonds to secure their circulation of Government deposits and that the records on the face show that they are borrowed, one bank having borrowed as much as one and one-half million of dollars of these bonds? What I want to know is if there is any law requiring them to purchase them?

Mr. HOWARD. As I understand, the only thing the Treasury of the United States requires of a bank is, first, that the bond carry with it the circulating privilege and, second, that that bond, carrying with it the circulating privilege, is on deposit in the vaults of the United States Treasury as security for the issue. That is my understanding of the system by which the national banks have secured currency.

Moreover, at that time the Government was in possession of a large amount of cash. In fact, so much was locked up in the Treasury that the Secretary of the Treasury, in order to relieve the situation, deposited millions of this cash held by the Government in the various banks throughout the country.

Now, let it be understood that at this time the Government needed no additional money. It had so much money in its vaults that the Secretary of the Treasury proceeded to place these millions of this money in the banks so as to relieve the situation. Moreover, the Government 2 per cent bonds were selling well above par and were in great demand, and if the Government had really needed additional money it could have readily borrowed the money in any needed amount at 2 per cent per annum.

But the banks had to have additional Government bonds to be used as a basis for increasing the national-bank-note circulation, and as a net result of this remarkable situation the United States Government authorized the issue and sale of $50,000,000 of one-year certificates of indebtedness, bearing 3 per cent interest. Of this amount, approximately $16,000,000 was actually issued and was used very largely by the banks as a basis of additional bank-note circulation.

It will be seen at once that in 1907, under this system, the Government, having all the money that it needed and having a practically unlimited credit on a 2 per cent basis, was yet forced to issue its obligations on a 3 per cent basis, or at a 50 per cent increase over the rate of interest which it had been paying, in order to create a security to be delivered to the banks so that they could issue additional bank-note circulation against the same and thereby meet an imperative need for additional currency.

The foregoing will serve as an actual illustration of the dangers incident to a bond-secured circulation and to the fact that our financial structure is in dire need of remodeling and reorganization.

But coming down to more recent times, we are again confronted with difficulties arising out of the control of such a large portion of the Government debt by the national banks, which in turn are apparently controlled by a very few individuals, as shown in the recent Money Trust investigation.

I make the assertion that one of the most serious questions that has been considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency has been the question of the disposition of the outstanding $750,000,000 of Government twos. At present the national banks hold these obligations and issue currency against them. Any reform of the currency must necessarily involve the issuing of money on some basis other than on the security of these bonds. The banks holding these bonds contend, and contend properly, that if the circulation privilege is withdrawn from the bonds the value of the same will be greatly depreciated, the banks will be forced to sell the bonds at far less than their par value, and the banks will have to suffer an enormous loss on account of this depreciation in a security which they have been compelled to buy.

I wish to be distinctly understood as recognizing the justice of a certain portion of the claims made by the banks. I think that the Government should unquestionably in some way take care of these bonds at par. The banks should be reimbursed for the money which they have invested in these bonds under the laws which have been heretofore in existence. The circulation privilege should be withdrawn from the bonds and the bonds should be refunded in such a way that it will be hereafter impossible for any set of men to use the ownership of these bonds as a lever to compel the Government to be in any way bound by their views any more than by the views of any other class of citizens in passing legislation affecting all the people. May it not be true that the recent depression of these bonds to a figure below par has had a disturbing effect upon the judgment of our National Congress in legislating on currency matters? Certainly I think that some method of handling these obligations of the Government should be devised which will make it forever hereafter impossible for any set of men to exercise or attempt to exercise any control in the councils of the Nation by depressing the value of Government securities and affecting the Government's credit.

Now, if I am right in my premises; if it is true that a bond-secured circulation is a mistake, as the Democratic Party thinks it is; if it is true that these obligations of the Government must be deprived of their circulating privilege and must be removed as a factor in controlling the financial affairs of the Nation; if it is true that holders of these bonds are entitled to receive par for the same; if it is true that the Government must refund these obligations in some way, which will remove them hereafter forever as a menace to our financial system or to the impartial consideration by Congress of matters of general interest to the country; then I submit that the following is the only way in which this desired end can be obtained.

A Government debt is not a bad thing. The fact that the citizens of a country own its obligations is by many people claimed to be a strong aid to the stability of the Government issuing those obligations. It gives to the people holding the obligations a direct stake in the Government.

Moreover, in modern times it is practically impossible to conceive of a government which will not have to use its credit and will not have at times to borrow money to meet its necessities. Credit is as essential to a government as it is to a business man. As our Government depends upon the consent of a majority of the people it may be said that the credit of the United States Government is the combined credit of all of its people and that the combined mass of the people so using their combined credit in the shape of Government bonds should be able to borrow from any and all individuals composing that Government who wish to invest their money in Government obligations.

But a Government debt in order to be of value to the Government must be distributed among the people. No man would attempt to claim that a Government debt could be of advantage to the Government if that debt is to be held by one individual or by a small coterie of individuals. The experience of mankind justifies the statement that the ideal and only desirable method of placing a Government debt is to place it in small and varying amounts among the great masses of the people. A Government debt of a billion dollars held or controlled by 10 individuals gives to those 10 individuals an inordinate, unreasonable, and improper influence in the affairs of the Government and presents no corresponding advantage.

Consequently, I maintain that no method of refunding the Government debt or of taking care of the $750,000,000 of outstanding 2 per cent bonds now held by the banks can solve the difficulty or can afford permanent relief unless the method provides for the distribution of this volume of indebtedness in small and varying amounts among the great masses of the people. The ideal condition would be a condition under which practically every adult citizen of the United States was the owner of a $1, or a $10, or a $50, or a $100 bond of the United States Government. If that were true, then every adult citizen would have a stake in the Government. If that were true, no one man or set of men could control the debt of the Government, because to control the debt would mean to control the majority of the voters; and the consensus of opinion of the majority of the voters is what maintains our governmental functions. If the bonds were so distributed that every man was familiar with and was used to dealing in Government obligations the United States could, when in need of additional funds, borrow directly from the people without asking the leave of any financial institution and without attempting to market its bonds only with the consent of large financiers. It could borrow for its requirements directly from the people who are willing to lend to the Government, who are interested in the Government, who must maintain the Government, and who have the right to buy the obligations of the Government, of which they are an integral part, when the Government has to issue its obligations.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield to my good friend, but my time is drawing to a close, and I am just getting warmed up.

Mr. MURDOCK. We will get the gentleman an extension of time.

Mr. HOWARD. Thank you; then I will yield.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I am very much interested in the gentleman's discussion, and I wanted to ask him, because I think he must have given thought to the subject, to tell me just how he conceives that the holder of Government bonds may exercise what he calls an enormous influence upon the Government?

Mr. HOWARD. Well, I think that is a very easy matter to explain. I will answer that question by asking my friend one. If a farmer in your State owed you $10,000, and you had a mortgage—

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Please state that that is an inconceivable proposition.

Mr. HOWARD. Well, I will say that it is an inconceivable proposition, because I do not think that the gentleman from Michigan or myself, either, ever saw $10,000 in actual money in our lives. But if you held a mortgage on a farm in your State and a farmer owed you $10,000, and that obligation was past due or was coming due shortly, and you wanted that farmer to vote for you, do you think you would have to ask him to do so if he was hard up and would want a little extension of time?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Then the Government would exercise an influence upon the bondholders instead of the bondholders on the Government?

Mr. HOWARD. There is no question about the fact that the holders of the Government debt have wielded an undue influence over the Government of the United States. We have accused J. Pierpont Morgan of doing it, we have accused Rockefeller of doing it, and if they have not done it I say that my predecessors who have held seats on the floor of this House and at the other end of the Capitol are the greatest set of monumental liars who ever lived on the face of the earth. There is no use of arguing that question.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I simply asked the gentleman from Georgia a question so that he might, if possible, out of his abundant reading on the subject, be able to give us some historic instance and not leave the question to conjecture.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman flatters me, and I will answer him as I did his colleague [Mr. FORDNEY]. If he will get my time extended and sit right still, so that I can finish my speech, I will try and explain it to him.

Mr. FORDNEY. I have listened 15 minutes and you have not answered any questions yet to my satisfaction.

Mr. HOWARD. In my experience in the House I have perceived that there are some questions that can never be answered by any human being to the satisfaction of my genial friend from Michigan.

Mr. FORDNEY. Well, has the gentleman attempted to answer them?

Mr. HOWARD. I have attempted to do it, and the gentleman is getting impatient.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HARDY. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I believe in and approve most heartily the project or suggestion that the gentleman is about to make. I introduced about three years ago a bill authorizing the liquidation of this public debt by the sale of small bonds, when we were considering the postal savings-bank legislation. Now, I hope the gentleman will not be interrupted and will be permitted to present thoroughly the scheme he has in mind, for I am sure it is interesting.

Mr. HOWARD. I thank the gentleman. Now, Mr. Speaker, doubtless many of my colleagues would say that up to this point they agree with me theoretically, except the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]. They would grant that the condition which I have pictured is an ideal condition. They would admit that such a condition is the condition which should be brought about, and at the same time would regard me as a theorist and would say that it is impossible to accomplish what I have recommended.

I am frank to say that only within a recent period have I become conversant with a feasible and practicable method of refunding the Government debt at 2 per cent, so that it will be held in small and varying amounts by the great masses of the people, and as soon as I became convinced that it was practicable and that it was feasible to accomplish this I felt it my duty to present the method and means of accomplishing this result to the Members of this body. I not only believe that this can be done, but I believe that it ought to be done. I, moreover, believe that it can be done with the greatest ease through existing machinery within a comparatively short period, and that by placing the control of the Government debt in the hands of the great masses of the people we can forever remove the menace which now confronts us because of the control of the Government's obligations by a few people. I believe that through existing machinery now controlled by the Government, in a way so simple that a 12-year-old child can understand it, the Government obligations can be sold in small and varying amounts to the people at large who are willing to purchase them, who wish to purchase them, and who have heretofore not purchased them because they had no opportunity to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the wonderful credit of the United States now existing on a 2 per cent basis can be continued on that basis. I believe the United States bonds bearing 2 per cent will command and will continue to command par, and that there is absolutely no reason for increasing the rate of interest to 3 per cent. I believe that the refunding of this debt can be accomplished within a reasonable time, so that the banks can be repaid the money invested in these securities, and I believe that by so doing an unlimited market for the sale of Government securities at 2 per cent whenever the Government needs the money can be created and maintained. If it is desirable to attain these objects, then I respectfully ask the attention and consideration of the House of the method by which this end can be accomplished.

The sale of securities or bonds, like the sale of any other object, involves two essential requisites—first, the creation of a security which the people want in the form that they want it; and second, the offering of this security to the people under conditions which will enable them to purchase.

The man who wishes to sell merchandise must first place his merchandise in such shape as to meet the needs and wishes of his prospective purchasers. He must then offer his merchandise for sale at a point or points where it is available to the intending purchaser. If he fails to meet either of these two requirements, his merchandise remains unsold.

In the same way the man who wishes to sell securities must first issue his securities in such shape and form and with such value behind them as will make the people who have money to invest desire to purchase them. He must then offer them for sale at such places or under such conditions that the people can obtain them. The bond house which is endeavoring to float and issue bonds is glad to sell a bond for a thousand dollars to the individual who desires to purchase it. It does not insist that this individual shall purchase $50,000 of bonds or nothing. It recognizes that the small investor wants to buy a small amount of bonds and is entitled to the same consideration and the same treatment as is the large investor who wants to buy a large amount of bonds.

In the same way the United States Government, in order to place its securities among the great masses of the people, must put itself in position first where the man who wishes to buy a dollar bond can secure it with the same ease and under the same conditions as are accorded to the man who desires to buy a million dollars of bonds. It must be prepared to offer to the man who has $7 to invest a security of the face value of $7, and to the man who has $70 to invest a security of the face value of $70, and similarly as to any other amount.

Moreover, the farmer in the remote country district who has never seen a Government bond and who does not know what one looks like or how to proceed in order to purchase it must be afforded an opportunity to buy the bond at a place where he is accustomed to dealing. The bonds must be sold directly to the people in small and varying amounts, through such instrumentality or machinery controlled by the Government as will reach each individual and as will enable the prospective buyer to examine and acquire the intended purchase at a near-by point. In other words, the Government heretofore has been selling its bonds at wholesale through the intervention of the wholesaler. I propose to show you how the Government can sell its bonds at retail without the intervention of any third party. I believe that every Member of this House will agree with me that there has never been a case where the middleman has been eliminated that the process has not resulted to the benefit of the seller and of the buyer.

There is fortunately in existence to-day an instrumentality of the Government which reaches or can reach every man, woman, and child in the United States. Probably few of us appreciate the wonderful and complete way in which our country is covered by the United States post office. No other instrumentality, whether governmental or otherwise, comes into such close, intimate, and direct contact with all the people of all the country as does the post office. The post office is primarily for the people and of the people. The same courtesy, the same attention, the same rules govern the sale of a 1-cent stamp or a post card to the impecunious tramp as govern the sale of $10,000 worth of stamps to the millionaire trust concern. The post office is a place of small transactions. It is a place where no citizen feels embarrassed because of the fact that he is consummating a business transaction involving only 1 cent. It is a place which every citizen visits and visits constantly. It occupies a most intimate relation to every phase of our business and domestic life. It is controlled, owned, and operated exclusively by the Government and offers the machinery through which all the people can be reached. It is the natural medium through which the Government should deal with the great masses of the people.

A little over two years ago there was authorized by Congress the establishment of postal savings banks at the various post offices of the country. These post offices numbered approximately 50,000, and I doubt if many of my colleagues or of the people appreciated that with the passage of the postal savings act there was authorized the greatest and most extensive banking operation ever authorized in the history of the civilized world. Few of us recognized that when that act was passed the machinery of this great organization reaching all the people was made available as a means of safeguarding and accumulating the savings of all the people.

The bankers feared the postal savings. For years they opposed it by every move which could be suggested. When the bill was under consideration the bankers openly led in the opposition of the same. I think it is practically within the knowledge of any man familiar with the conditions concerning the passage of the postal savings act that the act as passed was a compromise and that the conditions imposed upon the operation of the postal savings banks were conditions largely suggested by the banks and were conditions imposed for the purpose and with the intent of hampering the operations of the postal savings banks so as to minimize their importance as competitors of the private banking corporations.

As stated, the postal savings banks have now been in operation slightly over two years. While the establishment of the banks was authorized in each of the existing post offices, these banks have as yet been established in only 12,818 out of 50,000 of these post offices. From the Post Office Department I learn that at present there are in operation 12,818 postal savings banks, distributed among the post offices as follows: Four hundred and eighty-two in offices of the first class, 1,960 in offices of the second class, 5,744 in offices of the third class, 3,965 in offices of the fourth class, and 667 at the different post-office branches and stations; that there are 338,000 depositors in these banks and that the total deposits up to the 30th day of June, 1913, were $37,324,870, or an average of $110.42 per depositor.

It is evident that for an institution offering to receive and care for the savings of the people with the good faith and credit of the United States specifically pledged to secure the repayment of all deposits the postal savings has not been a success. Any financial institution backed by the United States Government, however cumbersome its methods, will operate and will continue to operate, but the postal savings banks are a failure in that they have not grown as they should have grown and in that the result of two years' operation is the pitiful sum of $37,324,870 in 12,818 banks, when it should be easily $500,000,000.

There were in Great Britain, in 1911, 12,370,646 depositors in the postal savings. There were $859,027,319 on deposit. The average deposit in the postal savings in the British Isles is about $70. In 1911 there were in France 5,970,929 depositors, with deposits aggregating $328,890,226, or an average of about $55 for each depositor.

There were in the State of New York on July 1, 1912, 140 savings banks. The deposits in these banks aggregate $1,660,560,190. The average deposit is nearly $400.

If there are 12,000,000 depositors in England in the postal savings, should there not be within a reasonable time an equal number of depositors in the postal savings banks of the United States? With an equal number of depositors and with an average of $400 the postal savings deposits would aggregate four and a half billions of dollars.

I admit that these figures are staggering, and yet I wish to call your attention to the fact that in 635 mutual savings banks in the United States there are approximately $4,000,000,000. If these savings banks, numbering 635, with no Government guaranty behind them, have accumulated $3,762,401,625, what would be the reasonable accumulations of the postal savings system, operating 50,000 banks, with the prestige, credit, and good faith of the National Government behind the system and guaranteeing the repayment of every deposit on demand?

Mr. Speaker, naturally the question arises as to why the volume of deposits in the postal savings during their period of operation has been so small, and from a careful study of the situation I believe I can say without fear of successful contradiction that the postal savings banks up to date have been a failure because of the lack of facilities offered to the people and because the methods of meeting the people's needs in handling their savings have been utterly inadequate and have discouraged rather than encouraged the placing of investment funds with the Government.

The postal savings as it exists to-day is a product of the Republican administration. The postal savings act was passed by a Republican House and a Republican Senate and approved by a Republican President. It is ostensibly an act passed in the interests of the people. As a matter of fact, the act which was passed differed from the act which was proposed by the Senate committee which originally presented the bill as widely as it is possible for two acts to differ. As a matter of fact, the Republican Party, which passed this act, was unable to resist the dominating influence of the money power, and the conditions and requirements of the postal savings act and the limitations surrounding the handling of the people's savings were, in my judgment, purposely involved and made unreasonably burdensome so as to prevent the growth of this institution and to conserve the interests of the great financial institutions which had so materially assisted the party which passed this bill.

I think, without exception, in the countries of the world where postal savings systems are in operation the ultimate disposition of the savings is by investment in the public debt or in Government bonds of the country receiving the savings. Naturally, such an ultimate disposition of the savings of the United States was in the minds of Congress who passed the postal savings act. In their effort to carry out this purpose the question of so using the postal savings was discussed, but the banks by their opposition to the whole system succeeded in securing a provision that 65 per cent of all the deposits on which the Government paid 2 per cent should be redeposited in the local banks at 2½ per cent, thereby leaving only 30 per cent of the total as available for investment in Government securities with a 5 per cent cash reserve to meet current demands. It is an interesting commentary of the shortsightedness of these institutions that they should have hampered the operations of this great machinery for accumulating the savings of the people when such a large percentage of these savings were to be deposited in the local banks in lump sums at a lower rate of interest than those banks were paying their ordinary small depositors. It is a far more interesting commentary on this action when I say to you that under the plan which I propose, not 65 per cent, but 100 per cent of the accumulations in postal savings will be deposited with the local banks by the local post offices, and when I can further say that 100 per cent of these deposits will likewise be invested in bonds of the Government by reason of the fact that I propose to give the investor a Government bond as an evidence of his deposit, as I will hereafter explain.

I will now go into a short discussion of the terms and conditions surrounding the postal savings deposits and depositors under the provisions of the present act, and will take up the method by which I believe that the volume of these deposits can be increased to an enormous aggregate, and by which I believe that the bonded debt of the United States can be refunded into the hands of the people at large.

Prior to the establishment of postal savings banks by the United States Government in the year 1910, these banks had been in existence in the other great countries of the world for a number of years. In all of these countries the deposits in these banks were evidenced by the ordinary pass book similar to the pass books used in the ordinary savings bank.

The pass book had been found a possible but a costly method of evidencing savings deposits. It had been used because no other form or device for evidencing similar deposits had then been worked out. It proved possible on account of the geographical conditions in the various countries which were operating postal savings banks.

The pass book, as is doubtless known to most of the Members of the House, is nothing but a memorandum. It is not the final evidence even of the entries contained in it. Under the pass-book system the only final evidence of a deposit is in the original ledger at the central office of the bank. A depositor may lose his pass book or may fail to have the entries of deposits and withdrawals made therein. This does not affect the obligation of the bank, because the real evidence of the bank's indebtedness is the original entry in the ledger at the central office and the pass book is a mere memorandum.

The method of procedure with the pass book in the postal savings is for the depositor to deliver the money to be deposited at the local post office. The local post office sends in this money to the central post office. The central post office then credits the depositor with the amount of the deposit on its ledger and sends to the postmaster at the post office of issue an acknowledgment of the same, to be delivered to the depositor. The Government is not responsible for the deposit until the entry is made in the general ledger, and the depositor can not hold the Government liable until he receives the acknowledgment from the central office.

Likewise in the case of withdrawals. The depositor goes to the local office and notifies the postmaster that he wishes to withdraw a certain proportion of his deposits. The postmaster furnishes him with a requisition blank or draft, which he fills out and delivers back to the local postmaster. This draft is sent in to the central post office. The central office examines the ledger and, if the party has the amount to his credit, issues a check for the withdrawal sum. This check is then sent to the local postmaster, who in turn delivers it to the depositor, who can then get his money.

It will be seen at once that in England, for instance, where no depositor is more than 24 hours away from the central office, such a method may be practicable and feasible. In the United States a depositor in Alaska would probably have to wait three to six months before he got his money under this system.

Moreover, under the pass-book system each deposit and each withdrawal is entered up on the general ledger and when the interest periods occur it is necessary to compute interest at the given rate on the amount of the deposit. In England, with 12,000,000 depositors, it is necessary to compute interest on each deposit at least once and perhaps oftener in each year, and to credit up the interest to the depositor, thereby involving at least 12,000,000 interest calculations once or oftener during the year and 12,000,000 entries on the ledger. Moreover, each deposit and withdrawal has to be entered up on the ledger. Thereby in carrying out this work of keeping books and calculating interest an enormous force of clerks, aggregating some 4,000 in the British Isles, is employed at the central office, and the duties of these clerks are practically to make the entries in the ledgers and to calculate and credit interest on the deposits.

In considering the establishment of a postal-savings system in the United States and in drawing the postal-savings act Congress showed the effect of its study of the foreign systems by drawing the act as if it were intended to evidence these deposits by a pass book, and yet at the same time they were so thoroughly convinced, on account of the size of the United States and of the geographical conditions confronting them, that the pass book was not feasible; that in section 5 of the bill, after stating that the deposits should be evidenced by a pass book, and after drafting the whole bill on the theory of the pass-book system, they provided that the Postmaster General might, with the approval of the board of trustees, adopt some other device or devices in lieu of the pass book as a means of making and preserving evidences of deposits and withdrawals. When it became necessary to put the proposed system in operation the trustees to whom were submitted the detail of outlining the methods of work at once recognized that it was absolutely impossible to use the pass book in the United States system. As a substitute for the same they adopted as an evidence of deposit certificates of deposit issued in fixed denominations, which obviated some of the objections to the pass book but which were hedged around with such limitations and restrictions as to impair the efficiency of the service and to make it impossible to accomplish the desired result of having the postal-savings system serve the needs of all the people.

The device adopted by the trustees as a method of evidencing these deposits consisted, as stated, of a sheet of paper issued in fixed amounts of $1, $2, $5, $10, $20, $50, and $100. These certificates under the law are delivered to the depositor at the time the deposit is made. The certificate represents the principal sum of the deposit and on the back of this certificate is printed information telling the depositor how much the interest on the face of this certificate will amount to each year. The certificate is payable at the post office of issue only on presentation of this certificate properly indorsed. The interest is payable annually on the presentation of the certificate properly indorsed at the office of issue of the certificate, or else the depositor must execute a power of attorney, must have his signature witnessed by a disinterested person, must sign a receipt, and must forward the power of attorney together with the receipt to the post office of issue in order to collect his interest.

To explain more clearly I will say that if a given party deposits $10 in the post office in New York he will receive therefor a $10 certificate bearing 2 per cent interest. The certificate bears no interest during the calendar month of its deposit, but interest commences to run from the first day of the next month. After the money has been deposited for 12 months the depositor can withdraw 20 cents as interest on the $10 for one year. If in the meantime the depositor has moved to Chicago he must either come back to New York in person to collect this interest or he must obtain from the post office in Chicago a power of attorney and a receipt for the interest, must execute and have properly witnessed the power of attorney, must sign the receipt, and must send the power of attorney with the receipt back to the New York post office in order to get his 20 cents. The depositor can not collect either his principal or his interest anywhere except at the post office which issued the certificate.

No person can have more than one postal-savings account, either at the same office or at different offices, nor can any person deposit more than $100 in any one calendar month, nor can any person have on deposit at any one time more than $500, exclusive of interest.

The man who deposits $10 in the New York post office, if he goes to Chicago can not deposit any money in the Chicago post office. He must send all his deposits back to New York and do business entirely with the New York office. It is apparent that under this system there is a limitation on the amount of any single deposit, a limitation on the total amount of the deposit, a limitation on the place of deposit, a limitation on the place where the deposit is payable, a limitation on the place where the interest is payable, and a very involved method of collecting interest.

In order to encourage savings by the class of people who save their money to meet unexpected needs it is absolutely necessary that every facility for the collection of interest and for the prompt receipt or payment of the principal should be accorded. This system throws every restriction around the collection of interest and discourages accumulation. The ignorant Italian who deposits $10 in New York, moves to Chicago, and finds that he must either return to New York to collect his 20 cents interest or execute a power of attorney and sign a receipt which must be sent to New York in order to collect it will never make another deposit in the postal savings.

Mr. Speaker, I hardly think it is necessary for me to say that with such conditions and limitations imposed upon the operations of the postal-savings banks it is perhaps surprising that the amount deposited is as great as it now is. By using a certificate as an evidence of deposit the Government has lost the one great advantage which the pass book affords, namely, the continuity of account as shown by the pass book. It has not obtained any corresponding advantages. I think I have shown earlier in this discussion that the great item of expense and the most troublesome detail of operation in connection with the postal-savings system relates to the interest. Under the form of certificate adopted no provision is made for interest, and every objection that exists under the pass-book system regarding interest exists under the system adopted by our Government with equal force. I might add that to my mind there can be no conceivable justification for prohibiting a man from lending the Government at 2 per cent more than $100 at any one time or more than $500 altogether, nor can I conceive why a man should be prohibited from placing deposits in the Washington post office and in the New York post office and in every other post office in the country if he wishes to do so, nor can I see why he should be put to such a delay, trouble, and expense to collect his small interest when it is due and when the Government promises to pay it on demand. These are real obstacles. They have prevented, and will continue to prevent, the growth of the system, because the people are not going to place their savings with any institution which makes it difficult for them to withdraw the same.

It is a fair criticism of the system to call attention to what it has cost us to install it. I understand that there has already been appropriated $600,000, and the net result of this appropriation is the installation of the system in one-fourth of the post offices after two years' operation and an average deposit in the post offices where it is installed of $2,900.

Now, it is generally conceded that the best method of evidencing an interest-bearing deposit or any interest-bearing sum of money is by the delivery to the depositor or to the party contributing the money of a coupon obligation or coupon bond. The superiority of the coupon bond or coupon obligation is due to the fact that the certificate is the final evidence of indebtedness as to the principal, and the coupon is the final evidence of indebtedness as to the interest amounts when they fall due. The debt is due to the holder of the instrument. The interest is due to the holder of the coupon. The personality of the holder is immaterial. Therefore individual bookkeeping is eliminated and interest calculations are done away with because the coupons which represent the interest are attached to the obligation at the time of its execution.

To illustrate this distinction I will take the case of a great railroad system which sells $100,000,000 worth of its coupon bonds, with coupons maturing twice each year, to 200,000 people. The bond represents the principal. The coupons represent the interest. The railroad owes the money to the bond or its holder or to the coupon or its holder. It pays the money upon the presentation of the coupons and of the bonds as they mature.

Consequently, because the entire evidence of indebtedness, both as to principal and interest, is in the hands of the creditor the necessity of individual bookkeeping is eliminated. And as the coupons represent the interest the necessity of interest calculations is done away with. The railroad is indifferent as to who holds the bonds or the coupons. It only pays upon the legal presentation of the instruments themselves as they mature. The railroad keeps the whole account under its "bond account" on one page of its ledger.

On the other hand, let us assume a great savings bank in New York City with one hundred millions of deposits divided among 200,000 depositors and paying interest twice each year and its deposits evidenced by the ordinary pass books.

In that case the final evidence of indebtedness is in the ledger at the savings bank. Every deposit and every withdrawal of each individual must be entered up on the ledger to that individual's account. Each account necessitates an interest calculation twice each year, with the consequent liability to error and with the labor incident to the computing of 400,000 interest calculations and entering the same. The bank must necessarily keep 200,000 separate and individual accounts on its ledgers.

Without elaborating as to the advantages of the coupon bond or coupon obligation over any other method of evidencing interest-bearing obligations, it will be seen at once that the coupon form of obligation is a great labor-saving device whenever it can be used in this connection.

It has been heretofore impractical to use a coupon obligation in banking because of the varying amounts of the deposits. Coupon obligations are usually engraved or lithographed for fixed amounts, say $1,000, with coupons attached engraved to represent the specified rate of interest on the face of the obligation. In a bank one depositor will present $7 for deposit; another one $57 for deposit; another one $5,700 for deposit. Consequently the bank, in order to use coupon obligations, would have to carry in stock a separate lot of forms of coupon obligations representing each amount from $1 up. This is obviously impracticable, and because of this difficulty coupon bonds or obligations have not been used in the past as an evidence of deposit.

There should be available for use by the Government in its postal-savings banks a form of coupon obligation which can be issued within one minute for any amount from $1 up, at any rate of interest desired, for any length of time stipulated; and on any terms and conditions. In other words, with forms exactly alike a coupon obligation for $1 or for a million dollars or for any intermediate amount can be issued. In the act of issuing the value and due date of the coupons should be mechanically indicated so that they necessarily correspond correctly to the value and date of deposit of the principal amount. If the obligation is issued for $7 the value of the coupons should be mechanically indicated to correspond to $7, and so with any other amount.

I understand that it is now possible to use a coupon obligation as an evidence of deposit. With one form a coupon obligation can be issued almost instantaneously for any amount. In the act of issuing, the interest calculation is made mechanically and thereby all interest calculations are avoided in the future.

Under the terms and wording of the present postal-savings act this coupon certificate can be used as an evidence of deposit, if approved by the postal-savings trustees. No further legislation is essential, although advisable.

The use of such a device as an evidence of deposit will mean that the depositor at the post office will receive the final evidence of indebtedness, as to both principal and interest, with all the consequent benefits above indicated. The Government will be relieved of the cost, difficulty, and error incident to keeping individual books and of making individual interest calculations. The geographical limitation on postal-savings banks, as above outlined, will be removed. The man who deposits $1 in the postal-savings bank will receive in effect a $1 coupon bond, or obligation, of the Government as an evidence of his deposit. He can collect his interest by tearing off the coupons and cashing them when they fall due anywhere in the world. He can collect his principal at any time by presenting the obligation with any unmatured interest coupons attached. The principal, being payable at the United States Treasury by the United States, can be immediately converted into money anywhere, according to its terms.

The effect of evidencing the postal savings deposits by these coupon obligations would be to deliver to the depositor a coupon certificate of the United States for the amount of his deposit. Thus the man who had $1 to deposit in the postal savings bank would thereby become the purchaser and owner of the coupon bond or obligation of the Government under the same terms and conditions as the man who deposited $10,000 or any larger amount.

Under the postal savings act deposits are payable on demand. These coupon obligations would be payable on demand provided they were presented with all unmatured interest checks or coupons attached; that is to say, if John Doe deposited $10 in a local post office he would receive as an evidence of that deposit the obligation of the Government with three or five interest coupons attached, each for 2 per cent of the principal, or for 20 cents each. He would in effect be the owner of a Government 2 per cent bond, but if he wanted his money the next day, he could present the obligation with all interest checks attached and get back his cash. The first interest check would not be due until a year after the date of deposit. If he presented his certificate within the year, he could get back his principal without interest. If he held the certificate until after a year had expired, he could get 2 per cent interest by delivering up the coupon when it matured and could get his principal by delivering up the certificate.

The effect of using a coupon obligation of the Government as an evidence of postal savings deposits is exactly the same as selling to the people at large Government coupon bonds or obligations in any amount from $1 up, as they desire them, and these obligations would be on sale at every post office.

These obligations would bear 2 per cent interest, payable annually. They would always be worth par, because they are payable on demand by the Government. The holder who could get par for the obligation at the post office would not sell it for less than par to a third party. In the postal savings act the Government has indicated that, in its judgment, 5 per cent of the deposits is a sufficient reserve to meet current demands, and so by maintaining a reserve of 5 per cent of the deposits in the Federal reserve banks the Government could meet all the withdrawals and demands made on the postal savings; could maintain these postal savings certificates or bonds at par, and could, in effect, offer its 2 per cent obligations or bonds for sale to the people at large in small and varying amounts at every post office in the United States. The farmer or mechanic who had $7 which he would like to use in buying a Government bond could buy a bond for $7. He could buy the bond at the post office where he was used to doing business in small amounts.

The use of a coupon obligation as an evidence of deposit would offer to the depositor facilities for collecting both his interest and principal, which can not be afforded under any other known system. It would encourage the great mass of the people to become holders of Government securities in such amounts as they desired. It would enable the Government to borrow needed money from the masses of the people and distribute its debt among the people. It would ultimately eliminate the control of the Government bonded debt by any single man or set of men.

Suppose that this system of evidencing deposits in the postal savings by coupon obligations were adopted by the United States Government. I think it would be reasonable to expect an accumulation of these funds equal to $500,000,000 within two years and a total of billions of dollars of deposits within a very few years. Certainly within a very short time these accumulations from the general public in the postal savings would amount to far more than the $750,000,000 long-term 2 per cent bonds now held by the national banks.

Such accumulation could be readily and easily used to retire the seven hundred and fifty million of outstanding twos. It might be provided that within a year from this time the circulation privilege would be withdrawn from 10 per cent of the holdings of long-term twos, but that each bank could exchange this 10 per cent of its holdings of long-term twos for a similar amount of one-year 2 per cent postal savings certificates, which postal savings certificates would also have the circulation privilege.

If this were done, 10 per cent of the $750,000,000 would at the end of the year be refunded into 2 per cent postal-savings certificates or bonds maturing one year from their date of issue or two years from this time. By the time that this $75,000,000 of postal savings certificates had matured there would be available a sufficient amount of deposits received from the general public to pay off this seventy-five million of one-year postal savings obligations.

The postal savings fund so accumulated would be deposited under the existing law to a large extent with the banks holding these present outstanding long-term twos. Consequently, when the short-term one-year postal savings certificates matured they would be paid off by the Government out of the deposits held by the banks and belonging to the postal-savings funds. If the banks did not present this 10 per cent, or seventy-five million, of postal savings certificates at their maturity, they might be allowed to continue to use them with the circulation privilege, but in that case the bonds would not bear interest, and the result would be that if the bank continued to use these bonds as a basis of circulation it would to that extent be carrying the Government debt without interest or paying the interest for the privilege of the circulation.

Similarly each year 10 per cent, or seventy-five millions, of the outstanding long-term twos could be exchanged for one-year postal savings certificates, which at their maturity would be paid off out of the accumulations in the postal savings banks derived from the great mass of the people.

The ultimate result of this plan would be the retirement of the present long-term twos with their circulation privilege by refunding this debt among the great masses of the people who would hold postal savings certificates bearing 2 per cent interest in small and varying amounts. The Government credit would be maintained at par on a 2 per cent basis, because the Government obligations would be redeemable on demand at par. The Government debt would be held by the great masses of its citizens without any danger of an improper influence being exercised by a few men on account of their holding a large volume of the Government debt.

To accomplish this refunding of Government long-term twos will require some special legislation and perhaps a change in the pending currency bill before such retirement can commence as indicated; but the coupon certificates of deposits can be used without further legislation and without change of the postal savings act as a means of evidencing postal deposits. It should be so used at once, and the accumulation of savings in the postal banks would then soon become commensurate with the dignity and credit of the institution. Out of such accumulated savings the long-term twos can be retired, and special legislation looking toward this can be passed now or at some later date when the results of the use of this coupon obligation as an evidence of deposit has demonstrated the willingness of the people to buy Government obligations in unlimited amount at 2 per cent if offered in varying amounts and if on sale at near-by and familiar places.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of my colleagues to the fact that the total money issued by the United States Government amounted on April 25, 1900, according to the report of the Monetary Commission, to $3,348,323,219, and, according to their statement, about $1,760,000,000 was in the banks of the country and in the Treasury. About $1,587,000,000 was in the pockets of the people and not otherwise accounted for. I agree with Mr. Meyer, the former Postmaster General, in his statement that fully a billion dollars, or approximately one-third of the entire circulation, is hidden away in tin cans, lock boxes, and concealed places and is not available for circulation. This money has never gone into the banks and will never go into the banks, but a great portion of it will go into the postal savings. The people who hold this money want security and are skeptical of banks. They do trust the Government.

With the postal-savings system operating as efficiently as it should operate, there can be no question that a very large proportion of this hidden currency will be restored to circulation, as it properly should be; will be deposited by the post offices in the banks; and will become available for ordinary business needs; but it has been proven to be impossible to bring this money out of its hiding place under the present cumbersome and ineffective system. Some change in method must be adopted. I respectfully submit that the plan which I have suggested offers a method which will give to the depositors and to the people at large the greatest facility for handling their deposits, which will give to the Government a system involving the least machinery, the least expense, and the least danger, and which will incidentally accomplish other results as important as these.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the adoption of this method of evidencing postal savings accounts and of removing the limitations and restrictions which now handicap the system will accomplish four separate and distinct results.

First, it will bring from hiding the greater portion of the hidden money of the country, amounting in round numbers to $1,000,000,000. It will restore this money to circulation and bring it into the channels of business through the banks with which it will be deposited.

Second, it will encourage thrift among the people and will result in the accumulation of an enormous volume of savings available to them to meet the exigencies of old age and to insure a competency when they are unable to work.

Third, it will refund the present outstanding Government bonds at the same rate of interest, namely, 2 per cent. It will take these bonds out of the hands of the great banking institutions and of the small wealthy class and put them in the hands of the great masses of the common people. By placing these bonds with the people and familiarizing them with this security, an unlimited market is created for the future sale of Government securities if the need for the same should arise. It enables the Government to do away with the middleman and borrow money directly from the people in unlimited amount and without paying any commission.

Fourth, under the terms of the postal savings act it will create an enormous aggregation of money which will be "a fund which may be withdrawn for investment in bonds or other securities of the United States, but only by direction of the President and only when, in his judgment, the general welfare and the interests of the United States so require." This means, Mr. Speaker, that in case of war, pestilence, or other great calamity our country will have collected together billions of dollars which, if the exigency ever arises, can be borrowed by the Government to meet its necessities. I could hardly overestimate the essential importance of the accumulation of such a fund to the continuance and stability of our form of institutions. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to continue for 10 minutes longer. Is that enough?

Mr. HOWARD. I would like to get 15 minutes longer. I have been interrupted.

Mr. BARTLETT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to know if the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] is going to follow that up by asking that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMSON] be permitted to speak to-day?

Mr. MURDOCK. I shall do so.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not want to interfere with my colleague, but I want to give notice now that objection will be made to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMSON] speaking to-day upon the resolution he introduced this morning.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman understands that the House is proceeding to-day by unanimous consent. There is no quorum here. And I want to say to the gentleman from Georgia that I do intend to follow up my request that his colleague from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] be allowed to continue with the request that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMSON] may be heard.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to put the gentleman on notice.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] be allowed to continue 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] be permitted to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to couple with that request the additional request that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] be recognized for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] couples with that request the additional request that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then, Mr. Speaker, I couple with that the request that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMSON] be allowed to address the House for 15 minutes on the subject of oil-land leases.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] couples with that the request that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMSON] be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to the latter part of his request. I do so because I want to put the gentleman on notice about it.

The resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMSON] is a resolution of inquiry addressed to the head of the Department of Justice, the Attorney General, and it is very unusual and extraordinary that the proposer of a resolution of inquiry, before it is submitted or considered by a committee or becomes privileged by reason of the expiration of seven days, should be heard upon it in debate.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Let me get through. And the gentleman who introduced the resolution to-day—introduced it this morning—

Mr. MURDOCK. It is not a privileged resolution. The gentleman misconceives it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not misconceive it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. There is nothing more unusual about his proposition than there is about talking on the currency bill after the currency bill has passed.

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, yes; there is.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman could include his argument in his whereases. Does the gentleman object to that? Is the gentleman afraid of publicity?

Mr. BARTLETT. I object to any gentleman introducing a resolution of inquiry to-day, referring it to the committee it belongs to for report, speaking on it to-day. When it is reported, at the expiration of seven days, it will become privileged.

Mr. MURDOCK. No; then it will not become privileged.

Mr. BARTLETT. A resolution introduced to-day, a resolution of inquiry directed to the Department of Justice—

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman from Illinois says it is not privileged—

Mr. BARTLETT. Of course it is not privileged to-day.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then why should the gentleman object to the discussion of it?

Mr. BARTLETT. Because it is not the province of anybody to discuss it when there are no facts before this House upon which anybody could make reply to it. I have never heard it before claimed in the House that a resolution of inquiry could be spoken upon on the day it was introduced.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] himself saw and I saw myself a resolution inquiring into the affairs of the Standard Oil Co. introduced here on one morning and discussed that very morning.

Mr. BARTLETT. That was because everybody was afraid to object to it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is the gentleman afraid of publicity?

Mr. BARTLETT. No; I am not afraid of publicity, although I do not pretend not to be. Some gentlemen pretend not to be, simply for a show.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Does not the gentleman from Kansas recognize that this resolution is in a large measure a political question?

Mr. MURDOCK. What resolution?

Mr. HARDY. This proposed attack on a department of the Government.

Mr. MURDOCK. No. On the contrary it is not, according to my understanding.

Mr. HARDY. I just read it in the newspaper. That is what it looks like to me.

Mr. MURDOCK. The author of it says it has no such tenor, and I do not believe it has.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I shall object—

Mr. MURDOCK. I appeal to the sense of fairness of the gentleman from Georgia. We are having a discussion here. Most of it is harmless—

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. It is largely illuminating. First it proceeds from the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELDER] is to come next. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] has no objection to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] talking about department matters. Now, why not let in the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMSON]. That ought to appeal to the gentleman. He always wants to be fair, and he ought to be fair.

Mr. BARTLETT. I not only always want to be fair, but I try to be. I do not make any pretenses merely for the purpose of attracting public notice either. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is proper that a resolution of inquiry which calls in question certain actions of any of the departments of this Government shall be discussed before the House is somewhat informed of the facts connected with that case. That is the reason why all resolutions of inquiry are required by the rule to be referred to a committee. At the expiration of seven days they may or may not assume the character of privileged resolutions, depending on the matter contained in the particular resolution. I very rarely object, but I shall object to any gentleman introducing a resolution which may call in question the action of a department of this Government and then discussing it the same day it is introduced or until somebody shall have an opportunity to inquire into the facts, so that if proper a reply may be made.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman said he would object to the introduction of a resolution. He can not do that.

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not say that. I said I should object to the introduction and discussion of it on the same day.

Mr. MURDOCK. We have some rights left on this side.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, what is before the House?

The SPEAKER. The request for unanimous consent.

Mr. GARNER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] have both asked unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] be allowed to proceed for 15 minutes. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] coupled with that—threatening to object unless his idea was adopted—the request that the Hon. SAMUEL W. SMITH, of Michigan, have 10 minutes. Then the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] amended his own request by asking that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMSON] have 15 minutes to discuss a proposition concerning oil wells. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. BORLAND. Reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire what subject the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] is going to discuss?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman wishes to discuss departmental methods, a subject in which we are all interested. Your side has had 45 minutes. It is only fair that the gentleman from Michigan have 10 minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. Can not the gentleman give us more light than that?

Mr. STAFFORD. You will be given complete light if you will let the gentleman from Michigan proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, in order to relieve my colleagues from any embarrassment, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and that ends that controversy.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum. I think we ought to have a quorum here to listen to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELDER.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas makes the point of no quorum present, and there is no quorum present.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Speaker, by this motion I am beaten out of the 10 minutes already given me. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. I object.

Mr. BORLAND. I object.

Mr. MURDOCK. I withdraw my point of no quorum.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken; on a division (demanded by Mr. MURDOCK) there were—ayes 43, noes 31.

Mr. MURDOCK. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Tellers were refused, 23 Members, not a sufficient number, seconding the demand.

The motion of Mr. FOSTER was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, September 24, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. FERRIS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8364) to authorize the President to provide a method for opening lands restored from reservation or withdrawal, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 78), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WEBB, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 99) to fix the times and places of holding district court for the district of Arizona, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 79), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CLARK of Florida, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7596) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Beloit, Kans., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 81), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FERRIS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 2727) to create an additional land district in the State of Nevada, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 85), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 125) authorizing the President to appoint delegates to attend the seventh international congress of the World's Purity Federation, to be held in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota, November 7 to 12, 1913, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 80), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. UNDERHILL, from the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, to which was referred the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 17) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make an exhibit at the Sixth National Corn Exposition, to be held at Dallas, Tex., during the month of February, 1914, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 83), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CARLIN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2254) to amend chapter 1, section 13, of the Judicial Code, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 84), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. CHURCH, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 27) to authorize the sale and issuance of patent for certain land to H. W. O'Melveny, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 82), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8322) granting a pension to Mary E. Sweeney; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 6610) granting an increase of pension to Bertha Herder; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 2558) granting a pension to Margaret Cassidy; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 8263) granting a pension to William C. Hathaway; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 2575) granting a pension to Laura Hilgeman; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 2557) granting a pension to Freda Burow; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DEITRICK: A bill (H. R. 8422) regulating the employment of legislative counsel and agents and others who for compensation or reward attempt to secure the passage, defeat, or alteration of legislation before Congress, and for other purposes, and prescribing penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. AUSTIN: A bill (H. R. 8423) to increase the efficiency of the executive civil service; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 8424) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to employ consulting architects in connection with the work of the Supervising Architect's Office, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8425) to cause certain lands to revert to the State of Oregon; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. FRANCIS: A bill (H. R. 8426) providing an additional appropriation for the Federal building at Steubenville, Ohio; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8427) to authorize the donation of certain unused and obsolete guns now at Chickamauga Park, Ga., to the Dan McCook Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Smithfield, Ohio; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RUCKER: A bill (H. R. 8428) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States, limiting the amount of campaign expenses, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. HENSLEY: A bill (H. R. 8429) to prohibit the giving or receiving of gifts, employment, or compensation from certain corporations by Senators, Representatives, Delegates, or Resident Commissioners in Congress of the United States or Senators, Representatives, Delegates, or Resident Commissioners elect, and the judges of the United States courts, and prescribing penalties therefor; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8430) making appropriation for the protection of the bank of the Mississippi River at and south of Ste. Genevieve, Point Rest, and Wittenberg, Mo.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. THOMSON of Illinois: Resolution (H. Res. 258) directing the Attorney General to inform the House of Representatives what action, if any, has been taken to stop the construction of oil wells and the extraction of petroleum from certain lands granted to the Southern Pacific Railroad Co.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin: Memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, favoring a law setting aside certain islands in the Great Lakes for bird reserves; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, favoring S. J. Res. 131 and H. R. 16808, introduced during the Sixty-second Congress; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, favoring amending section 5219, Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to taxation of shares of stock in national-bank associations; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASWELL: A bill (H. R. 8431) to correct the military record of Samuel Avar; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BAILEY: A bill (H. R. 8432) for the relief of Martin Cupples; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8433) granting an increase of pension to Emanuel Russell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARY: A bill (H. R. 8434) granting an increase of pension to John E. Johnson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8435) granting an increase of pension to William Miller; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8436) granting an increase of pension to Peter W. Flood; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8437) granting a pension to James A. Merchant; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 8438) granting a pension to Maggie Dausch; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DERSHEM: A bill (H. R. 8439) granting a pension to Rebecca Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8440) granting an increase of pension to David B. Dromgold; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8441) granting an increase of pension to James B. Wilkins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8442) granting a pension to Mary E. T. Barber; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8443) granting a pension to John Richardson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8444) granting a pension to Anna N. Carson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8445) granting an increase of pension to Charles S. Swineford; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FLOOD of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 8446) for the relief of Moses Gwin, sr.; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FRANCIS: A bill (H. R. 8447) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Morrow; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 8448) granting an increase of pension to George Congdon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8449) granting an increase of pension to Josephine M. B. Brady; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8450) granting an increase of pension to Silas P. Richmond; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAYES: A bill (H. R. 8451) granting a pension to Edgar B. Perry; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HENSLEY: A bill (H. R. 8452) granting an increase of pension to James H. Martin; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8453) granting an increase of pension to Matthew Abernathy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8454) granting an increase of pension to George W. McAtee; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8455) granting an increase of pension to William W. Mabry; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8456) granting an increase of pension to William J. Wilkinson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8457) granting an increase of pension to William P. McCans; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8458) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Barker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8459) granting an increase of pension to William Bone; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8460) granting an increase of pension to William Bell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8461) granting an increase of pension to William H. Bair; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 8462) for the relief of W. P. Fuller & Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 8463) granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah H. Combs; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PETERSON: A bill (H. R. 8464) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Tanner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8465) granting a pension to Lydia W. Wolgamot; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8466) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William B. Young; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 8467) for the relief of Oliver H. P. Harvey; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STEPHENS of California: A bill (H. R. 8468) granting a pension to John E. Nolan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND: A bill (H. R. 8469) granting an increase of pension to John H. Ferguson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. HAYES: Petition of the San Mateo County Development Association, of San Mateo, Cal., favoring a navy for the Pacific Ocean and formation of a naval reserve; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE: Petition of the Pend Oreille Grange, of Newport, Wash., favoring the establishment of a bureau of markets in the Department of Agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of the Spokane Chamber of Commerce, favoring a better Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SCULLY: Petitions of W. C. Anderson, of Westville, and George Lambert, of Magnolia, N. J., protesting against placing steel-engraved forms for bonds, debentures, stock certificates, etc., on the free list; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, September 24, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We seek Thee, O God our Father, in prayer, the spontaneous cry of the soul in its limitations to Thee, whose resources are boundless. Uphold, sustain, and guide us in our quest for the best in life, that we may be profitable servants unto Thee and enjoy hour by hour the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. And Thine shall be the praise through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, September 22, 1913, was read and approved.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk proceeded to call the committees.

SEVENTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF WORLD'S PURITY FEDERATION.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia (when the Committee on Foreign Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to call up House joint resolution 125, authorizing the President to appoint delegates to attend the Seventh International Congress of the World's Purity Federation, to be held in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota, November 7 to 12, 1913, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and respectfully requested to appoint delegates to attend and represent the United States at the Seventh International Congress of the World's Purity Federation, to be held in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota, November 7 to 12, 1913.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I ask that the Clerk read, in my time, the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 125) authorizing the President to appoint delegates to attend the Seventh International Congress of the World's Purity Federation, to be held in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota, November 7 to 12, 1913, having had the same under consideration, reports it back without amendment with the recommendation that the joint resolution do pass.

This congress will be held under the direction of the World's Purity Federation, with the cooperation of Government officials, various societies organized for social uplift, and eminent reformers and philanthropists throughout North America and foreign lands. The six great international gatherings which have preceded this congress, held under the auspices of the federation, have been leading factors in bringing about the present general agitation against the social evil and in creating that high state of sentiment and intelligence on the problems resulting from public vice which to-day makes the discussion of these problems possible.

This congress is the most important gathering ever held in our country in the interest of the suppression of the white-slave traffic and public vice. It in no way deals with the temperance question or with any other question about which there could be a division in regard to policy. No appropriation is asked for to defray the expenses of delegates nor does the joint resolution make any appropriation therefor. A number of States have already appointed delegates and the mayors of the principal cities will have representatives of their municipalities to attend the congress. In view of these facts, briefly stated, the committee deems it appropriate that the National Government should be represented in this congress by delegates duly appointed by the President, as provided for in the said joint resolution.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-one Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House. The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Adair	Dyer	Jacoway	Patton, Pa.
Aiken	Eagan	Keating	Peterson
Ainey	Eagle	Kelley, Mich.	Phelan
Ansberry	Edmonds	Kennedy, R. I.	Porter
Barchfeld	Edwards	Kent	Pou
Bartholdt	Elder	Kiess, Pa.	Powers
Bathrick	Estopinal	Kitchin	Prouty
Beall, Tex.	Evans	Korbly	Ragsdale
Bowdie	Fairchild	Kreider	Rainey
Bremner	Faison	Langham	Raker
Brockson	Farr	L'Engle	Reilly, Conn.
Broussard	Finley	Lenroot	Richardson
Brown, N. Y.	Floyd, Ark.	Leshar	Riordan
Bruckner	Francis	Levy	Roberts, Nev.
Bryan	Gardner	Lindquist	Roddenbery
Burke, Pa.	George	Linthicum	Rogers
Burke, S. Dak.	Gillett	Lloyd	Rothermel
Butler	Gittins	McAndrews	Rupley
Calder	Goeke	McCoy	Scully
Cantrill	Goldfogle	McGuire, Okla.	Sells
Carew	Gorman	McKellar	Sharp
Carlin	Goulden	McKenzie	Slomp
Carr	Graham, Pa.	Madden	Smith, J. M. C.
Carter	Green, Iowa	Maher	Smith, Minn.
Casey	Gregg	Mann	Smith, N. Y.
Chandler	Griest	Martin	Stanley
Church	Griffin	Merritt	Stephens, Tex.
Clark, Fla.	Hamill	Metz	Stevens, Minn.
Copley	Hamilton, N. Y.	Miller	Taylor, N. Y.
Covington	Hamlin	Moore	Thacher
Curley	Harrison	Morin	Townsend
Curry	Hart	Moss, Ind.	Tuttle
Dale	Haugen	Mott	Underwood
Danforth	Helgesen	Murray, Mass.	Wallin
Defenderfer	Henry	Neeley	Walsh
Dixon	Hobson	O'Brien	Webb
Dooling	Howell	O'Leary	White
Driscoll	Hughes, W. Va.	Parker	Wilson, N. Y.
Dunn	Hulings	Patten, N. Y.	Winslow

The SPEAKER. The call shows 273 Members present—a quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. Before this other matter is resumed, the Chair announces the appointment of Mr. COPLEY, of Illinois, in lieu of Mr. KENT, of California, on the committee to go to Knoxville.

The Clerk will report the resolution.

The resolution was again reported.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House joint resolution.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF MEDICINE.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House joint resolution 93 be stricken from the calendar. The occasion for the resolution has passed. The resolution refers to a medical congress which assembled in August, and, the time having passed, I ask that it be stricken from the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the resolution which the Clerk will report by title be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That it be laid on the table.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I did not hear the reasons given by the gentleman for striking the resolution from the calendar.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It authorized the appointment of delegates to a medical congress which assembled in August. The occasion for the resolution has passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 93) authorizing the President to accept an invitation to participate in the International Congress of Medicine.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks that the resolution lie on the table. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will resume the call of committees.

COMPENSATION OF STAR-ROUTE AND SCREEN-WAGON CONTRACTORS.

Mr. MOON (when the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads I present a privileged report on House resolution 229 and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution (H. Res. 229) directing the Postmaster General to inform the House what steps have been taken toward readjustment of compensation of star-route and screen-wagon contractors on account of the establishment of the parcel post, etc.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this resolution is not in order to-day until the committees are called. The gentleman can not report a privileged resolution before the call of committees.

Mr. MOON. I asked unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. Why, if the gentleman from New York insists on his point of order the Chair would have to sustain it.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, in making my motion I asked unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to make his motion when the call is finished, which will not take more than a few moments.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I do not think this call ought to be interrupted by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just stated that just as soon as the call is finished he will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICT, STATE OF NEVADA.

Mr. FERRIS (when the Committee on Public Lands was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 2727 by authority of the Committee on Public Lands. It appears on the calendar, page 6.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2727) to create an additional land district in the State of Nevada.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL and Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall raise no objection if the gentleman will assure me of 10 minutes in which to address the House in considering the bill in the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FERRIS. I certainly have no objection. I could hardly dare try to infringe on the time.

Mr. PAYNE. The time will be in control of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. If the House is in the Committee of the Whole, nobody will have 10 minutes. The Speaker will recognize the gentleman for 5 minutes in the committee, and if the House extends his time 5 minutes he will have 10 minutes in all.

Mr. PAYNE. Perhaps 5 minutes would be all I want.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, I desire to make the point of order that the bill is on the Union Calendar and can not be called up at this time.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and a bill can be called up from either the House or the Union Calendar. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. FERRIS. I renew my request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act (S. 2727) to create an additional land district in the State of Nevada.

Be it enacted, etc., That an additional land district is hereby created for the State of Nevada to embrace the lands contained in the following-named counties, to wit: Churchill, Elko, Eureka, Humboldt, Lander,

Lincoln, Nye, and White Pine, described as follows, to wit: Commencing at the common corner between townships 38 and 39 east, range 47 north, Mount Diablo base and meridian, being on the north boundary line of the State of Nevada; thence south on the dividing line between townships 38 and 39 east, to its intersection with the third standard parallel north, said parallel being the dividing line between ranges 15 and 16 north, of Mount Diablo base line; thence east along said third standard parallel north to the intersection of the Ruby Valley guide meridian, being the dividing line between townships 55 and 56 east; thence south along said Ruby Valley guide meridian to its intersection with the first standard parallel north, being the dividing line between ranges 5 and 6 north, of Mount Diablo base line; thence east along said first standard parallel north, between said ranges 5 and 6, to the east boundary line of the State of Nevada; thence north along the east boundary line of the State of Nevada to the north boundary line of the State of Nevada; thence west along the north boundary line of the State of Nevada to the point of beginning. The city of Elko, in the county of Elko, is hereby designated as the site of said land office, and the district shall be known as the Elko land district.

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause all plats, maps, records, and papers in the Carson City land office, which relate to or form a necessary part of the records of the lands embraced in the district hereby created, to be transferred to the Elko land district.

Sec. 3. That the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register and a receiver for said land district, and they shall be subject to the same laws and be entitled to the same compensation as is or may be hereafter provided by law in relation to the existing land offices and officers of said State.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the first section.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I want to present a few facts in connection with this bill. As will be observed, this bill creates a new land district in Nevada, embodying approximately half of the State. There are 29,000,000 acres of land surveyed and subject to homestead entry in that new district. There are 25,000,000 acres unsurveyed in the proposed new district which will come on the market for entry just as soon as the survey can be made. There is only one land office in the entire State. There are 7,000,000 acres of public land in the State. Inside of the State people have to travel from 300 to 500 miles to make their proof and their entries and to try the contest cases. It will be observed, and it is the law, that they can make entry, they can try their contest cases, and can make proof before a United States commissioner and before county clerks, but those who live in the West and have had experience with public-land matters will readily observe, I think, that this is not a satisfactory way to make entry, is not a satisfactory way to make filings, and is not a satisfactory way to make final proof. In other words, the United States commissioner or the county clerk have no power to finally adjudicate these matters. They take the testimony a good deal as a notary public takes a deposition and transmit the testimony, and in each case an attorney has to go down there and argue the matter, and in nearly every case, as I am informed, they have to journey there and pay this enormous expense. Now, Nevada has more public land than any other State in the Union and it has only one land office, located at Carson City. They ought to have this one. This bill divides the State into two parts, and I think from every viewpoint the office is needed. The committee has considered it very carefully in every way, and it has the unanimous indorsement both of the House committee and the Senate committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform me how many land districts there are in the various States? Do you follow a rule to determine the number of districts as compared with the amount of public land for entry?

Mr. FERRIS. There is no fixed rule, as I understand. However, Nevada has more public land than any other State in the Union and has only one land office.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield for just a word?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. The district in Nebraska I have the honor to represent has five land districts. The State of Nevada, as we are informed by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], has the most public land remaining to be entered and disposed of of any State in the Union, and I regard it as very remarkable, considering the observations I have had in the West, that a State like Nevada should have gone so long with only one district land office. I regard this as a very great injustice to the excellent home builders of Nevada.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Answering the gentleman, I will say that the State of Colorado has 10 land-office districts, and it is not as large as the State of Nevada; and Nevada having only one, some of the people have to go 500 miles in order to make proof, and it is utterly impossible for a poor man to take his witnesses and go to the land office. While it is true they can offer testimony before the clerks of courts, at the same time the clerks can not pass on the admissibility of evidence. The lawyers ultimately have to go to the land office, and it prevents the development of the country. This is very imperative. We looked upon it as an emergency measure that ought to be passed at this session of Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has full knowledge as to the expenses of these land offices. Can he give us some information as to the amount of contemplated expense of this proposed land office?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that I be given five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will say this, in answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin, that at the present time the land office that is in Nevada is a maximum land office. They believe that the extra amount of business that will be transacted will be sufficient to much more than justify the increase of this office by the creation of another office.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the average expense of the land office? Is it only the salary of the receiver?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No. There is a register, with a minimum compensation of about $1,000 and a maximum of $3,000, and a receiver the same; and then there is the clerk of the land office and some rent, and it would involve an expense of $8,000 or $10,000 a year.

Mr. FERRIS. In this instance it is but $5,000.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; $5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma a question. Is it contemplated to establish more of these offices in this section of the country?

Mr. FERRIS. I think not. There is at least no bill pending before our committee for that purpose now. There is about 100,000 square miles of public land in the State of Nevada, and they have 55,000,000 acres in this proposed new land district. We thought it would be a matter of economy to establish a district up in the northeast side of the State, and thus cut the State in two, so that the people having business at the land office would not have to journey 500 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman mean to open a new land office in Nevada also in order to open up this new land there?

Mr. FERRIS. No; that section of country in Nevada has increased in population in the last 10 years 93 per cent, or almost double.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that on account of seeking land or for divorce purposes?

Mr. FERRIS. I think the gentleman will hardly insist that I answer that question now. But I have the data here that show the exact number of entries made. There is lots of business there in the land office.

The State has only one land office now, and this bill provides for the creation of a new land district. Nevada has almost doubled in population in the last 10 years, the increase being 93.4 per cent. The State has a total acreage of 70,285,440 acres. The Secretary of the Interior has designated 50,000,000 acres as subject to homestead entry under the enlarged-homestead act of 1909. The patenting of mining claims adds greatly to the work of the present land office, and there are more mining camps springing up in Nevada than in any other State in the Union, thus overcrowding the work of the land office and bringing about delays and confusion, which would be eliminated by the passage of this bill. The State is more than 300 miles wide from its eastern to its western border, and contains more than 100,000 square miles; thus it is obvious that some of the county seats are as far as 500 miles distant from the land office, while the railroad rates on an average in that sparsely settled country are 5 cents a mile, to say nothing of the time consumed in traveling over this distance which one must go to get to the land office. There is more public land in Nevada subject to the jurisdiction of the Land Office than in any other one State in the Union. Other States have from two to five land offices, while in this case, as at present, Nevada has but one. Making no allowance for an increase of business at the new land office that this bill would create, the annual cost of maintaining the office would be approximately $5,325.44, with an additional expense of about $1,000 for equipment, and so forth.

The proposed boundary line between the two districts would cut the State squarely into two equal districts. Elko, the site of the proposed land office for the new district, is approximately 334 miles distant from Carson City, which is the site of the present and only land office in the State, there being but one land district at present. There are now about 55,138,593 acres of land in Nevada subject to entry, which do not include 5,595,310 acres within forest reserves. About 29,000,000 acres are surveyed lands and about 25,000,000 unsurveyed. It is not a very satisfactory manner in which to proceed in trying to acquire a home for the case to have to be presented to an officer who has not final power to act, and in contest cases the only chance for a real trial is to have the case presented where the witnesses can be heard.

I beg leave to print herewith the unanimous report from the Committee on the Public Lands, it being Report No. 85, Sixty-third Congress, first session, filed in the House September 22, 1913, and reading as follows:

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICT IN NEVADA.

Mr. FERRIS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 2727:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2727) to create an additional land district in the State of Nevada, having had the same under consideration, respectfully submit the following report:

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, submitted the following report to the Senate:

[Senate Report No. 88, Sixty-third Congress, first session.]

"The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2727) to create an additional land district in the State of Nevada, have given the same careful consideration, and beg leave to report it back to the Senate with the recommendation that it do pass.

"The committee also finds the following facts to exist:

"The population of the State of Nevada has practically doubled in the last 10 years; that is, it has increased 93.4 per cent. The increase of population of the entire United States in the same period was but 21 per cent.

"The total acreage of the State is 70,285,440 acres. Fifty million acres have been designated by the Secretary of the Interior as subject to homestead entry under the enlarged-homestead act of 1909. The entry of this land should be rapid by reason of the bill permitting other improvements (such as sinking wells and fencing of land) in lieu of cultivation and the bill relieving the homesteader from continuous residence during the development of a domestic water supply.

"The Carson-Truckee River reclamation project in the State is rapidly nearing completion, and upon its completion the land business will be greatly increased.

"There are more new mining camps being started up in the State than in any other State in the Union, and the patenting of mining claims is greatly increasing the work of the land office. The present land office is already overcrowded with work, and unnecessary delay and inconvenience are at the present time caused to those attempting to obtain title to the public domain and in the determination of litigation affecting such titles. The State contains over 100,000 square miles and is over 300 miles wide from its east to its west border. The distance by the nearest railroad route from Ely, the county seat of White Pine County, to the land office at Carson City is 504 miles. The average railroad rate in the State is 5 cents a mile, and the time consumed in the travel over the distance is over 24 hours.

"The State has more public land subject to the jurisdiction of the Land Department than any other State.

"Other States have from two to five land offices, while the State of Nevada has but one.

"In the opinion of the committee, an emergency exists justifying the immediate passage of this bill."

The bill was submitted by the committee for the consideration of the Department of the Interior, and the Secretary has furnished the committee with a report thereon, which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,

Washington, August 20, 1913.

Hon. A. R. BRODEBECK,

Chairman Subcommittee on Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of August 19, 1913, requesting such information as I may desire to submit for or against Senate bill No. 2727 for the establishment of an additional land district and office in Nevada, and replying to your several inquiries, you are informed as follows:

The unappropriated and unsold lands in Nevada aggregate 55,138,593 acres, of which 29,359,141 acres are surveyed and 25,779,452 acres are unsurveyed.

The State of Nevada comprises one land district, with land office at Carson City. The following is a synopsis of the business transacted therein during the fiscal year 1913:

Excess entries (applications, protests, and declarations).....	106
Original entries.....	565
Final entries.....	206
State and railroad selections.....	10
Rejected, protested, and canceled entries.....	112

Total..... 999

The area involved in the foregoing entries (exclusive of final entries) is 173,799 acres, and the total receipts therefrom $53,444.44, including fees and commissions on final entries.

Of the above-described business, the following is a statement of that which was received from lands within the boundaries of the proposed land district:

Original homestead entries.....	186
Final homestead entries.....	3
Original desert-land entries.....	78
Final desert-land entries.....	14
Original isolated-tract entries.....	5
Original mineral entries.....	24
Final mineral entries.....	29
State and railroad selections.....	2
Forest-reserve lieu selections.....	7
Sioux half-breed scrip location.....	1
Carey Act withdrawal.....	1
Indian allotments.....	3

Total..... 353

These entries covered an area of 70,513 acres, with total receipts of $16,333.58.

The fees and commissions earned by the register and receiver of the Carson City office on the business transacted during the fiscal year 1913 was $6,922.66, which, together with their salaries of $500 each, aggregated $7,922.66, of which amount $1,922.66 was covered into the Treasury because the maximum compensation allowed to registers and receivers of district land offices by law is $3,000 each.

A computation as to what compensation would accrue to the register and receiver of the Elko land office in the event of the establishment of the proposed additional land district, based on the foregoing statement of the business transacted in the Carson City land office during the fiscal year 1913, pertaining to lands within the proposed district, from which it appears that their fees and commissions would be $1,112.72 and $500 salary each, aggregating $1,612.72 each, making total annual compensation of $3,225.44. Deducting this from aggregate salaries, fees, and commissions, $7,922.66, earned in the Carson City office during the same period would leave $4,697.21, or $2,348.61 each, as their approximate compensation in the event of the establishment of the proposed additional land district and office, causing a reduction in their present compensation of about $650 per annum each.

In addition to the compensation of the register and receiver of the Elko land office, there would be the additional expenses of office rent, about $900 per annum, and the salary of one clerk, $1,200 per annum, making the annual cost of maintaining the office $5,325.44, approximately. There would also be the expense of equipment, estimated at $1,000. The distance from Carson City to Elko is about 334 miles.

There is transmitted herewith a map of Nevada, showing the proposed boundary line between the two districts, from which it will be observed that the pending bill divides the State equally between the two districts, and that the proposed Elko district is traversed by the Southern Pacific Railroad from east to west, passing through Elko, the location of the proposed land office, and from north to south by the Nevada Northern, Eureka & Palisade and Nevada Central Railroads, their northern terminals being at different points on the Southern Pacific Railroad, which railroad facilities would be a great convenience to the settlers in the proposed land district.

Nevada is a very large State, containing 110,690 square miles; the present United States land office at Carson City is situated on the extreme western side of the State, and the section within the boundaries of the proposed new land district contains extensive areas of public lands, which will doubtless be the source of a large amount of public land business in the near future. Under the circumstances and conditions as stated, the department will interpose no objections to the establishment of this proposed land district.

Very respectfully,

A. A. JONES,
Acting Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., September 17, 1913.

Hon. D. S. CHURCH,

Committee on Public Lands, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of September 16, 1913, requesting that you be informed for use in connection with the consideration by the Committee on Public Lands of Senate bill No. 2727, for the establishment of an additional land district in Nevada, of the area of the public lands in the State now subject to entry, excluding lands within forest reserves, as to the area of which reserves you desire information. You also request information as to the procedure in making original and final entries, the filing and hearing of contests, and with and before whom they are filed, or whether these matters can be attended to through the medium of local commissioners and county clerks.

In reply you are informed that there were 55,138,593 acres of vacant and unappropriated public lands in Nevada subject to entry on July 1, 1913, exclusive of the lands within forest reserves, which contain 5,595,310 acres, of which 4,974,320 acres, approximately, are within the proposed additional land district. Of the 55,138,593 acres of unappropriated lands, 29,359,141 acres are surveyed and 25,779,452 acres unsurveyed, of which 21,438,255 acres are surveyed and 21,638,810 acres of unsurveyed lands are within the proposed additional land district.

Persons desiring to acquire title to public lands under the homestead and desert-land laws should first fully inform themselves as to the character and quality of the lands they desire to enter by personal inspection thereof, as they are required to file what is known as a non-mineral affidavit simultaneously with the filing of their application to enter.

These applications may be sworn to before the register or receiver of the proper land office or any United States commissioner, or judge or clerk of a court of record in the county in which the lands are situated, and final proofs heard before the same class of officers, as provided in section 2294, United States Revised Statutes. Contests may also be sworn to and heard before these officers, or heard before a special commissioner appointed by the register or receiver.

For the information of the committee I inclose copies of circulars dated March 24, 1905, and March 26, 1913, containing "Suggestions to homesteaders and persons desiring to make homestead entries," and "Suggestions to United States commissioners, United States court commissioners, and judges and clerks of courts of record."

Section 2335, Revised Statutes, provides that all affidavits required in applications for mineral lands may be verified before any officer authorized to administer oaths within the land district in which the claims may be situated, and that all testimony and proofs may be taken before such officers, and when duly certified by the officer taking the same shall have the same force and effect as if taken before the register and receiver of the land office.

While these provisions of law relieve entrymen and the parties to and witnesses in a contest case from the necessity for visiting the land office on business connected with their entries and contests, it is sometimes more satisfactory to the entryman to visit the land office for the purpose of examining the township plats, copies of which, however, may be obtained on personal application, or by mail, from the land office on the payment of a fee of from $1 to $4, according to the extent of the information shown thereon. (See p. 3 of inclosed circular of Mar. 26, 1913.) Photolithographic copies of township plats are furnished by this office for 25 cents for uncertified, and 50 cents for certified copies thereof, but those copies of plats show only the topography, areas of sections, parts of sections, and lots and surveyed lines.

Very respectfully,

CLAY TALLMAN, Commissioner.

It will be observed that S. 2727 is to create a new land district in the State of Nevada. It will likewise be observed that there is but one land office in the State. There are at this time 55,138,593 acres of unappropriated, unsold lands in the State of Nevada, of which 29,359,141 acres are surveyed and 25,779,452 acres unsurveyed. The land areas are so large and the homesteaders have to journey so far across the State to submit their homestead entries, their proof, and their contest proceedings that it has seriously retarded the growth and development of that State. In comparison with other States, Nevada is not as well supplied with land offices as other States with much less public land, and it is thought by the committee that this condition should not prevail longer. The report of the Senate committee and the two reports from the department, one addressed to Mr. BRODBECK, under date of August 26, 1913, and an additional report addressed to Mr. CHURCH, under date of September 17, 1913, supplying supplemental information, quite fully set forth the necessity for the creation of this land district, so it is not deemed that further comment could add anything to the comprehensive reports referred to.

Respectfully submitted.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

Mr. PAYNE rose.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request for the reading of the bill in order to yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I do not know anything about this bill except what is stated by the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, but it is perfectly evident that if they need another land district out in the State of Nevada to enter the sagebrush lands out there, and if it is true that the State of Nevada has the greatest amount of public lands of any State in the Union, then some other States have too many land districts, and I would suggest that the number be reduced in those States.

But there is no use in making this suggestion, Mr. Speaker, under the rule which the people who run this House have adopted in caucus. The Constitution gives the House the authority to adopt rules for its guidance, but we are met here by a rule of the Democratic caucus that no committee of the House can report any bill to this House unless by permission of the Democratic caucus.

Now, a number of gentlemen interested in bills came to me this morning and said, "Why, this bill is all right; it is reported by the committee, and it is permitted by the Democratic caucus." What right has the Democratic caucus to permit this House to take up bills? I have no doubt the Democratic caucus will not permit any committee to report any bill reducing the number of these land offices, because they are a good thing to have locally, requiring, as they do, officials in the district.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAYNE. I can not be interrupted. I have only five minutes.

Now, I raised the point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker, this morning, not because I had any particular opposition to the resolution pressed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] or to this bill, but in order to call the attention of the House again to this rule, unparalleled, which seems to be adopted by the Democratic caucus under which the House is run.

Why, you used to hear a good deal in the old days about "Canonism" and "czarism" in this House, but we never have run up against any czar like the czar of the Democratic caucus. [Applause on the Republican side.] You gentlemen on that side have a two-thirds majority in this House. You can come in here openly and aboveboard, if you dare to, before the people of the country and adopt a rule that no committee shall be allowed to report unless it gets the authority of the czar of this House, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, who really forms all the committees in the House. There never was any greater despotism in this House exercised under the old rules than there is now about the appointment of committees.

I am not complaining about the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. He is my friend, and he is absent to-day, exercising the duties of his office. I am complaining about the sham and the pretense you make here before the people of the country. Whenever he says anything in the way of the appointment of a committee, it goes, and you come in here with your majority, after adopting it by the Democratic caucus, and appoint the members of the committee by a vote of the House.

It is simply a form you go through, so far as the House is concerned. It is already settled, and you provide who shall settle it. Some of us used to think there must be somebody to settle it—to settle the conflicting claims of rival Members and settle the question whether this Member was suitable for one place and that Member for another. You seem to have adopted that same theory, but you come in here with the pretense that it is done by the whole House, and then you talk about the contrast between this Congress and former Congresses.

Mr. Speaker, I have taken advantage of another constitutional provision to meet this question. You have a quorum here this morning. I do not find any fault with that or grieve over it. I am willing that these bills shall be considered in a House that has a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Moon). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. I give you gentlemen notice that so long as you govern yourselves by a caucus rule you must have a quorum here to do business. I am going to invoke a part of the Constitution that you have not yet seen any way clear to abrogate, and that is the part of the Constitution which requires a quorum to be here to do business. [Applause on the Republican side.] You have been successful so far with your caucus rule, because you had a certain definite program of two bills that you wanted to have the House consider, and I wanted you to have a chance to show the country what you would do on those two bills. You came here to do it. I wanted you to do it. There are other bills that ought to be passed, bills of not so great importance, bills that will not work so much injury to the country as the two which you have already passed. Members here are asking to be heard on these other bills, but your committees say, "Oh, we can not, because of the rule of the Democratic caucus. The committee can not consider them. They have to get the consent of the Democratic caucus." I do not know how it is in practice, but in theory they have to get the consent of the Democratic caucus before they can have these bills considered. Gentlemen come in here with resolutions of inquiry calling upon the heads of the departments for certain information. I do not remember when the Republican Party in power in this House ever refused a demand for such information from a Cabinet officer. The rule was to report these resolutions promptly, and if they were not reported promptly the Member made a motion to discharge the committee, the motion was carried, and the information was asked for. But whenever there has been any information asked for here that a Cabinet officer did not want to disclose you in this House have promptly voted down the motion to discharge the committee, and you have in some cases told the man who introduced the resolution that you were prevented by the caucus from reporting any such resolution. It is time, gentlemen, that you understand what you are doing.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment? Does the gentleman understand that the caucus of the Democratic Party expressly excepted resolutions of inquiry?

Mr. PAYNE. I am glad to learn that much about the rule of the Democratic caucus. Still you never have reported a resolution.

Mr. BARTLETT. There have been resolutions reported.

Mr. PAYNE. You did not report the McAdoo resolution asking the facts in regard to the alleged statement that national banks were depressing the price of Government bonds, did you? You voted down the motion to discharge the committee. It was reported that you did it at the express request of the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not know anything about that, but I should have liked to have heard what evidence he had on the subject.

Mr. BARTLETT. Did the gentleman's side never vote down a resolution of inquiry?

Mr. PAYNE. I have heard other resolutions of inquiry asked for in this House, but those resolutions have not been reported. I have heard other motions to discharge the committee, but you promptly voted them down in the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. Just as the gentleman's party did when they were in the majority.

Mr. PAYNE. We do not know what the caucus rule is. Put it in the rules of the House, so that we can have as much opportunity to know what your caucus rule is as you have, and let us know whether the chairman of the committee or the committee itself understands the rule, when our people are told that they can not consider a bill because of the rule of the Democratic caucus. Come out into the open and adopt constitutional rules in this House and put them in the book where the Members can see them. It is not fair to this House. What is the matter with you?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We are all right. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Is the Democratic majority in this House afraid of itself?

SEVERAL MEMBERS (on the Democratic side). No.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman—

Mr. PAYNE. Are you afraid to report bills? Are you afraid to trust your committees?

Mr. CLAYTON. May I answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, you can do it in your own time.

Mr. CLAYTON. I have not any time. I merely want to say that we are not afraid of our committees.

Mr. PAYNE. I wish when the gentleman gives his answer he would come in here and put in that caucus rule, so that we can understand it and see it in the Record and know what it is and just what you are doing.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think the gentleman understands it now.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

I have been waiting for several days, while the criticism of the Democratic Party and its caucus has been going on in this House, for the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], who was so long majority leader, to take the floor and utter these same criticisms. I knew sooner or later he would rise to the bait. He has been here nearly 30 years. I have been here nearly 20. There are a great many new Members in this House, and while this continual criticism of the conduct of the Democratic majority in this House would have no effect whatsoever on the older Members, without regard to political affiliations, it might make new Members think that we are proceeding in an extraordinary manner; that there is no precedent anywhere for what we are doing. I do not believe that it is a sufficient answer to the criticism for what we are doing to say that the Republicans did the same thing. [Applause.] The custom of the pot calling the kettle black has never met with highest encomium in this country. But to show the new Members that we are not proceeding in a new and arbitrary manner, I will jog the memory of my venerable friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] with an important fact of history and of procedure in this House. Of course he remembered it very well when he was speaking, but sometimes one has an adjustable memory.

In the Fifty-fifth Congress, of which he and I were both Members, Mr. Speaker Reed, one of the greatest Speakers, was in the chair. Neither the Republicans nor the Democrats were permitted to report out any bills. Mr. Speaker Reed would not even appoint the committees, and did not appoint them until the night we adjourned sine die, some time in August, and although the Republicans were then in the majority he had to sit in the chair and wait there for an hour to get a quorum in order that he might announce the committees. Mr. Speaker Reed ruled that Sunday is non dies, and did not count Sunday as a day at all, and that a three-day adjournment embraced Friday, Saturday, and Monday. As a consequence, he made two adjournments of three days each cover an entire week. When the Speaker announced that, Col. JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS, one of the most brilliant of all public men, then a Member of this House from the State of Washington, now a Senator from the State of Illinois, made the point of order that the Congress was not in session at all, and fought that point out here for weeks and weeks. That is some portion of what the Republicans did. We have appointed committees. We have done better than they did, because the committees can consider any bills they please, and, as a matter of fact, they are now busy considering bills and getting them in shape to report. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is an able man. He has been here a long time and he knows all of these things, and I have recalled them simply to clear the matter up in the minds of new Members.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. In the first session of the Sixty-first Congress, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] was the majority leader in this House, Mr. Speaker Cannon did not appoint the committees of the House, and refused to appoint them until the day of adjournment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I was coming to that, and I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], as it saves me the trouble of stating it.

Mr. Speaker, why did the Republicans do that, and why are the Democrats doing what we are doing? I will tell you why. In those two Congresses every sensible man in the United States knew that the Republicans were responsible to the country for the legislation in this House, and they know now that we are responsible to the country for the legislation in this House.

Every student of government knows that in a country whose institutions are bottomed on suffrage the government will be a government by parties. It matters nothing whether we want it that way or not, that is the way it is. The history of England and the United States proves that beyond peradventure. Responsibility rests upon the majority, and we shrink not from acknowledging our responsibility to the country and of acting accordingly. Being responsible and having an ample majority we intend to place our ideas upon the statute books on the great questions now pressing for solution. While we invite help from Republicans and Progressives we can not, without shirking our duty to the country, permit them to spoil our bills. We have in no way and to no extent gagged the minority. We have brought in no special rule on our tariff bill.

Let us see. The Baltimore platform promised a multitude of things. Some were exceedingly important, and some are not of so much importance. There were two principal things in that platform which we promised to do. One was to revise the tariff down, and by the blessings of God we have done that. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There was no equivocation, mental reservation, or purpose of evasion about that promise, and there has been no equivocation in redeeming that promise. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The promise second in importance was to give the country a good currency system, and we are now in the process of doing it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is universally acknowledged by sensible men that we have the worst financial system of all the great nations under the sun. Everybody who has anything to do with business knows that there must be more currency in the country than there is now, and under the national banking system we can not increase the currency to any considerable extent without increasing the bonded public debt of the country, and we are all opposed to that. The national banking system has about reached the end of its tether. So we are in the process of redeeming that promise.

Let us take next this continual howl about legislation by caucus. It is the most idiotic that has ascended to heaven within a generation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I will ask my friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] how it happened that he permitted the general debate, which does very little good, on the Payne tariff bill to drag along for three weeks and then allowed us only two days for debate under the five-minute rule, permitting only four amendments—but by strategy we got in five, because they did not draw the rule properly. I will tell the House why he allowed that general debate to run on for three weeks. It was to "persuade"—I use that word because it is polite and parliamentary—to "persuade" enough Republicans to vote with him to pass the special rule to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill. That is why it was; and he had a mighty tough time, bless your heart, to ever get enough to turn the trick. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now let us see about caucus rule. We must have organization in order to enact the will of the people into law, and we have got it, and we have had it for the last three years. That is the reason why we are where we are now. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Precisely. Until three years ago fights in this House were like battles betwixt the militia and regulars. The Democrats were the militia fighting regulars; but now the boot is on the other foot, we are the regulars, we are the drilled men, we are organized, and the Republicans and Progressives are the disrupted militia. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Do you know how many people it takes to hold a caucus? Two can hold a caucus as well as two hundred and ninety-odd Democrats can. Well, now, suppose you break up the caucus. You have had it—I understand you are in favor of open caucuses now, but you had secret caucuses here 16 years, a hog combine that no mortal man could break. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

You never suggested open caucuses then.

The devil was sick, the devil a monk would be;
The devil was well, the devil a monk was he.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

If you get the next Congress, which I think would be a great calamity [applause on the Democratic side], you will have your caucuses again. You have no right to complain—that is, you Republicans, especially the gentleman from New York, the bellwether [laughter and applause on the Democratic side]—about the result of the caucus as far as the House is concerned. We brought the tariff bill in here. We threw it open to amendment, and I said on the floor of the House when I was in the minority, and I repeat it now, that I am in favor of a great bill like that being thrown open to amendment and debate, so that every man can offer any amendment he pleases and debate it, and that is exactly what we did. You say you did not get any amendment adopted. I will tell you when you will get an amendment adopted in this House on that kind of a bill; when you figure out a scheme by which one man can outvote two and a half men, then you can get one of your amendments adopted on a Democratic tariff bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Suppose you broke up the Democratic caucus. Do you know what would happen? There would be a little caucus in my room; there would be a little caucus in Mr. SHERLEY's room; there would be a caucus in Mr. FITZGERALD's room—little caucuses—and so on all around. We would talk it out, and that is what you gentlemen would do if you were in the same predicament. We would talk it out, and when we came into the open caucus the whole thing would be cut and dried, whereas now in the Democratic caucus every man has a right to offer every amendment he pleases and debate it until he is weary. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The debate in the Democratic caucus was free and ample, as it was in the House. No man was choked off in either the caucus or the House, and every man within sound of my voice knows that I am stating the exact truth. Why did you not get your amendments adopted on our tariff bill? Because you did not have votes enough. All this talk about secrecy is of no avail. Why, the statutes of every State in the Union enjoin it in four cases. A lawyer is not permitted to go on the witness stand and tell what his client told him, and if he did it he would be drummed out of the community, as he ought to be. A Catholic priest or a protestant preacher is not permitted to go on the witness stand and tell what his parishioner told him. A doctor is not permitted to go on the witness stand and tell what his patient told him. Husband and wife, except in cases of assault or in a divorce suit, are not permitted to go on the witness stand and repeat what they told each other, and if they were permitted to do it earth would be a pandemonium in a twelve-month. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] If it were announced that the preachers and the priests, the doctors and the lawyers, the husbands and the wives were going on the housetops to-morrow morning and tell what they know, there would be the greatest hehira of Americans ever seen on the face of the earth. [Laughter.]

The Senate has executive sessions; so do the Supreme Court, the Cabinet, grand juries, petit juries, churches, families, fraternal societies, and every association of men and women, not because they are doing anything forbidden, immoral, or unpatriotic, but because they desire to transact their business as expeditiously and wisely as possible. In a Democratic caucus it takes two-thirds of all Democrats elect to make caucus action binding. It is not binding at all on constitutional questions or matters of conscience or where a Member has made promises or pledges in his campaign for election. In such cases the rule exempts Members from caucus action.

I will tell you the whole truth about this caucus matter and this holy protestation that you folks are making. The people of the United States want to know what Congress does. They are much more interested in results than in the methods by which those results are worked out. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They want results. They are going to get them, and we are responsible for them. "Judge a tree by its fruits" is a safe rule. We are willing to be so judged. We belong to the Baconian school and believe in the philosophy of fruits. Of course I do not mean that any Member should be deprived of any constitutional or statutory right or of any privilege under the rules of the House, or robbed of his right to impartial treatment, or that he should be muzzled or unfairly dealt with, but I do believe that everything should be done in decency and order and that the people's business should be transacted as promptly as circumstances permit. I used to twit the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] with the fact that if he had let me and the rest of the Democratic conferees on the Payne-Aldrich bill sit in conference and help fix that bill it would have been a great deal better bill than it was, and I believe so now. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But I was playing politics then. [Laughter.] An open confession is good for the soul. You are playing politics now. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Suppose this tariff bill works right and this currency bill works right—of course they are experiments—who is going to get the credit for them? The Democrats. Suppose the bills work badly, who is going to be pounded for it next year and in 1916? Why, the Democrats. You are spectators. Some of your suggestions are very good, but you are not going to get the credit if these bills work right, except the Progressives and a few regulars who voted with us. If these bills work badly, you take the advantage of it. So we would be a pack of imbeciles, being responsible for the legislation in this House, not to formulate the legislation on great bills like this.

The Speaker does not pay any attention while presiding in the chair as to what the caucus does. He is governed by the Constitution of the United States, the laws of the land, and the rules of the House of Representatives. But you would not let petty legislation come into the Reed Congress or the Cannon Congress when tariff bills were up and distract the attention of the Members of the House and the country from the great bills you were passing, and we are not going to do it either. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We assume the responsibility, make the legislation; we will reap glory if they are good bills, and we will accept the punishment if they are bad bills. That is all there is to it one way or another. You have had ample time for debate, and some of you have debated too much for your own good. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON].

Mr. CLAYTON. I move to strike out the last word.

I interrupted the gentleman from New York a bit ago to suggest to him he was in error in his statement as to committees not having reported resolutions of inquiry at this session. There have come to the Committee on the Judiciary at this session of Congress, according to my recollection, four privileged resolutions, and three of those privileged resolutions have been reported to this House; and I think that the gentlemen who were the authors of some of those resolutions are sorry that they were reported to the House, because they were not able to make out of those resolutions the political capital which they expected. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The fourth resolution, I am reminded, Mr. Speaker, is perhaps not a privileged resolution, because it contains a preamble that destroys the privileged nature of the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, there is one more thing I wish to say while I am on my feet, and that is that the most excellent address made by the Speaker of this House a few moments ago was a truthful recitation of facts and a just arraignment of the Republican Party. It accords with the history of this House, and he correctly portrayed the conduct of the Republican Party during the 16 years I have been here, during the long time they were in the majority. And I have heard the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], standing on that side of the aisle, boast that they were going to put a measure through under gag rule, and say to this side defiantly, "What are you going to do about it?" [Applause on the Democratic side.] "We are responsible," I have heard him say, over and over again, "to the country for legislation, and we are going to put it through in our own way and in our own time. What will you, the minority, do about it?"

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are two other instances where the secrecy of proceedings is well recognized. In the sessions of the Senate to consider confirmations and to consider the matter of the ratification of treaties. The sessions are secret, and, Mr. Speaker, in ordinary court proceedings of grand juries the proceedings are secret. And yet no one would say that our courts should be uprooted because grand juries have secret sessions. Every committee of this House at times must go into an executive session to consider matters, and it would not be practical to have a public meeting for everything. And so far as the Democratic caucuses being secret is concerned, they are not entirely secret. They are secret to this extent only—that we do not permit Republicans to come in there; we do not permit the general public to participate, and only Democratic Members come there, but the press at the adjournment of every meeting gives a full and fair account of what that caucus did and what it considered.

And not only that, but by the caucus rule a roll call can be had on any proposition made in that caucus, and that can be made public and it is made public.

Let me quote one of the fundamental principles of the Democratic Party. Thomas Jefferson said:

Absolute acquiescence in the decision of the majority—the vital principle of Republics—from which there is no appeal but to force, the vital principle and immediate parent of despotism.

All that a Democratic caucus attempts to do, and that can only be done by a two-thirds vote, is to require the Democratic Members of this House to acquiesce in the decision of the majority of their brethren; but by the rules of the caucus no Democrat can be bound by caucus action if the caucus action conflicts with his pledge to his people or with his notion of the Constitution.

Every association or body to be effective must have an organization and plans. This is just as true of any church in fighting the devil as it is of the Democratic Party here in fighting those who oppose the best interests of all the people.

This Democratic caucus that the gentleman inveighs against so strenuously has done nothing so very secret, has done nothing so very wrong, but through the organization of the Democratic Party and through that conference—because it is as much a conference as a caucus—the Democratic brethren get together and spend days and weeks in discussing public measures, arriving at a conclusion as to what public duty requires them to do, and then they bring those measures into this House and, like soldiers, patriots, and faithful Democrats, put through the measures that the country demands of them and to which they are pledged. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And that is the reason for the gentleman's complaint. It is because through those caucuses we have succeeded in redeeming our pledges. Hinc illæ lacrimæ. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last three words.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] moves to strike out the last three words.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in the speech of my venerable friend [Mr. CLARK of Missouri] [laughter] who has just now addressed the House. He is entitled to be called "venerable," although he is some five or six years my junior. I was pleased with his argument that they were following in our trail and doing as we had done. It is true we did not appoint the committees of the House while we had under consideration in the House either the tariff bill of the Fifty-fifth Congress or the tariff bill of 1909, but we did not do it by a caucus action and caucus rule; and after the committees were appointed—and they were appointed promptly after the bills had passed—we did not go into a caucus and instruct committees not to report upon bills unless they had the authority of the Republican caucus. We had no Republican caucus in considering either one of those tariff bills. We brought them into the House without any caucus action.

Most of this debate since I took my seat has been on other lines than upon the question I raised, and that was that the Democratic majority were getting around the Constitution of the United States by making a rule in caucus. That point has not been answered by either of the gentlemen whom you have just heard, and it can not be answered. It is for Congress to make the rules. You can agree upon them in your caucus and report them to the House and adopt them, but until they are adopted in the House they are not binding upon the minority Members of the House. It is true, the only recourse we have is to appeal to some other provision of the Constitution of the United States. But you are not doing your duty under the Constitution when you do that thing.

The Speaker says that we could not get any amendments in the Underwood tariff bill because we could not make one man outvote two and one-half men. Well, there is a deeper cause than that. We presented amendments that appealed to your judgment, in many instances to a majority on your side; and yet you stood up and stolidly voted against them, and why? Because the caucus had bound you to vote down all amendments unless they were accepted by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Some of those amendments that we offered have gone over to the other end of the Capitol and have gone into this bill and, according to the reports of the newspapers—of course, being a minority member of the conference committee, I can not disclose any of the secrets of the conference [laughter on the Republican side]—they have been adopted by the conferees, although the conferees as conferees have never met yet on the tariff bill that has been in conference for a week or ten days. That shows the reasonableness of our appeal. We could not convince the Committee on Ways and Means then, but subsequent events and our arguments have convinced both the Senate and the members of the conference of the Democratic Party on the tariff bill.

Now, what I objected to was your caucus action on this bill. You ought to come in here and hear the whole question from the minority in your own party and the minority on this side of the House before you decide that no amendments should be made in your tariff bill.

But I was not complaining about that when I got up here to speak. I am not complaining about the way you made your tariff bill, or about the tariff bill you have got. It is not in my heart to complain of your action, gentlemen, now. I may have something to say about it hereafter, and you will have all you can do to defend the Underwood-Wilson-Simmons tariff bill when it gets before the people of the country. I want you to take your caucus rule off the House. Adopt the rule in the House if you want to, but come out into the open. Do not hide behind the caucus. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] says he defends secret caucuses, and then he says the caucus is not secret—only in a measure so.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last four words. I say to the House that I heard this morning with profound regret the expression of the Speaker of the House. I have great regard for him and great faith in his political judgment and in his patriotism. He said to the House that the country was not interested in how Congress did things, but that it was interested only in what Congress did. I do not believe he means that in the full sense that would be conveyed by his words. The country is interested in how this House does things. If that were not true there would be no need of the provision in the Constitution that one-fifth of those present may demand the yeas and nays.

The unit of representation in this House is not the political party. It is not the gentleman's party. The Republican Party, which, when it was in the majority in this House, put its power completely in the hands of one man to strangle at his pleasure legislation and take from the individual Member his rights here. It is not the Democratic Party, which subordinates individual representation under the Constitution to the dictation of a secret caucus. The unit of representation here is the individual Member representing a district, and the individual Member here is responsible not to his party or to his party leadership, but is responsible to the people in his district. That is an answer to the Speaker, and that is an answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. I have long watched the work of the caucus here. I was against the caucus when the Republicans were in power and I am against it when the Democrats are in power. I do not believe that it can long be an issue in this land. I believe that it is doomed. There are 80 vigorous, fighting Democrats over on that side who are making it hot for the leadership of their party in caucus. I trust that they will break the caucus, and in their effort to do so I wish them godspeed.

Now, what is the caucus? The caucus is a device by which the leadership hamstrings and hogties its following. That is all on earth the caucus is. How does it work? The formula is simple. A standing committee holds meetings, frames, fashions, forms, and adopts a bill. That bill is brought into the caucus under the leadership of that committee. Here, in a meeting which is secret from the public, which is out of public surveillance, away from public vigilance, there is some sort of deliberative proceeding. I do not know precisely what it is like. I used to know years ago what it was on the Republican side. There is in a caucus poor attendance almost always, because when you remove a meeting from public surveillance laxity in attendance inevitably follows. Attendance is poor, decorum is lax. There is often disorder. Frequently, I understand, after a man has talked a while in debate there are cries from all over the caucus chamber, "Vote!" "Vote!" "Vote!" And when they are ready the leaders rise, put on the gag, and force the vote. And the bill as it was framed by eight, nine, or ten men in the committee goes through the caucus—goes through as it was formed in the committee. Every man knows that is true of the ordinary product of caucus action. Every man who goes into a caucus knows that when he goes in he ties himself and ties his constituency against his own and their constitutional rights. It is not a good practice. It is a bad practice. It is not good legislation. It is poor legislation. Why not break the custom up? What would be the result, Mr. Speaker, if you did break the caucus? What if you opened up the conferences? What if you opened up all the committee rooms in this Capitol? What would happen? Simply freedom of discussion and of action, that is all. There would be no lack of party solidarity; there would be no lack of party harmony. The thing that will bring you Democrats disruption, the thing that will bring you trouble and tribulation, is your secret caucus. That, and not the open caucus and committee room, will bring you woe.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the House should not take too seriously my colleague from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. He is to-day enjoying a little temporary prominence because of the necessary absence of the leader of that side of the House [Mr. MANN]. It was somewhat unkind of the gentleman from New York to demand a quorum and thereby emphasize the fact that the Republican leader is absent. Recalling, however, the days of Republican power in this House and the practice of Republican Members who absented themselves as quickly as the tariff bill passed the House, he evidently hoped that Democrats would persist in the same practice, that they would absent themselves from duty, and that we would be found to-day without a quorum. Of course, that accounts largely for his discomfiture. He is not worried about what a Democratic caucus does. He is chagrined that he is reading daily about what the conferees are agreeing to in respect to the tariff bill; and, finding himself for the first time in 16 years on the outside, is compelled to obtain his information from the newspapers, just as the Democrats were compelled to do when he manipulated the bill which bears in part his name and which has been overwhelmingly repudiated by the people of the country.

The gentleman speaks about the House not doing business because the caucus will not permit it. The Democrats have not been afraid to appoint their committees. In the Sixty-first Congress, following Republican precedents, the committees were not appointed until the end of the session. On the 13th day of May, 1900, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee moved, as a privileged motion, that the Speaker—

Be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to appoint the Committee on Insular Affairs forthwith.

Mr. PAYNE, of New York, made the point of order that that motion was not a matter of privilege. Mr. GARRETT requested to be heard, but the Speaker said that, in the opinion of the Chair, it was a matter affecting the organization of the House and was a matter of high privilege. Then the gentleman from New York led the Republican forces in voting down the motion to appoint a committee that might possibly consider business.

The gentleman speaks about caucus action. On the 5th of April, 1900, the Committee on Rules reported a rule for the consideration of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, which provided that the Committee on Ways and Means, which meant the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], could offer amendments to any part of the bill at any time, and that other Members of the House, if they got the opportunity while the gentleman was busy, might offer amendments to four different paragraphs in the bill. In advocating the rule, the gentleman from New York said this:

Gentlemen, there has never been a moment since I have had a seat in this House that I did not believe that the wisdom of a majority of the Republican Party, after full consideration of a question, was better than my own, and I was willing to follow, no matter who led the great mass of Republicans and blazed the way. [Applause on the Republican side.] So, gentlemen, we should surrender our individual opinions; we should surrender for the good of our party; we should surrender for the good of the country. This is the way all great measures are passed in the House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, believing, as most Members of this House do, with the exception of the newly risen outfit under the command of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], in responsible party action the Democrats of this House met in caucus, considered and determined upon measures as party measures, and supported them for the benefit and welfare of the country.

The gentleman from New York is not complaining of that procedure. He is trying to raise a scarecrow, that the Democrats are attempting to evade the Constitution. Their conduct has had the good effect at least of having the gentleman from New York discover one provision in the Constitution, after his thirty-odd years of service in the House, and that is that he can make a point of no quorum and compel a quorum to be present, which always happens under Democratic rule, although rarely present, unless coerced, under Republican rule.

Mr. Speaker, what makes the gentleman from New York worry is an entirely different thing.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, he sees his political opponents able to go into caucus and discuss with the utmost freedom great measures affecting the country and to agree upon them as members of a party should. He looks back with regret upon the days when his party was in power, when it did not dare convene in caucus for fear that himself and the other "white mandarins" who conducted the business of the House in secret from the Speaker's chamber might be caught napping and be overruled. There is a marked difference in the method of doing business now and heretofore. The committees now are all appointed. They suggest to the responsible party the measures desired to be considered. The party in control determines whether the measures are of sufficient importance to be considered at this time and enacted. Unless so considered they are withheld so as not to distract the country from the important questions to be determined at this session. When the Republican Party was in power they did not dare trust the Members of the House to be appointed to committees, but the gentleman from New York himself and a few other self-appointed leaders conferred daily in the Speaker's room and determined upon the business and the program without the help of any of the committees of the House.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] says that he does not believe in caucuses. Yet he was selected to lead this handful of patriots at a caucus held in this House, and, if I recall correctly, at that time the various members of his party, from 13 to 17 or 19—the number not being certain—apportioned among themselves representation upon the most important committees of this House. They did it in caucus; and yet I have heard it intimated—although I shall not charge it to the gentleman from Kansas and his associates—that before this public proceeding, to which the public was invited, the program had been arranged quietly in advance [laughter and applause on the Democratic side], so that there was no conflict, no confusion, no clashing of ambitions, but everything went as merry as a marriage bell. Does the gentleman from Kansas believe in publicity and that all conferences should be attended by some one to give the proceedings to the press? Then, why did not the gentleman suggest when he was visiting Sagamore Hill and discussing the policies of the Progressive Party with his legs under the colonel's mahogany that the representatives of the press be brought in to hear what was being said?

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. My recollection is that the members of the press were there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not upon the occasion to which I refer. Nobody ever suggested that the representatives of the press be at those gatherings. Perhaps, though, they were. Perhaps one gentleman who was a newspaper man and also acting as secretary, and is secretary now to the National Progressive Party, was present—Mr. O. K. Davis—but he was very careful not to give to the public anything except that part which was arranged would be beneficial for the public to know in the interest of the so-called Bull Moose Party.

Mr. Speaker, if there be any farce, if there be any fraud, if there be any hypocritical pretense, it is this continued assertion that men believe in the utmost publicity. They are simply playing a part; they are attempting to persuade the people that they wish they should be taken into their confidences when they know and when we know and when every honest man knows that no business, that no government, no politics, nor anything else can be conducted unless men who are acting in concert have some opportunity at some time and at some place to confer among themselves and settle differences of opinion upon important matters without inviting the public into a knowledge of the differences of opinion among themselves. It is absolutely essential in all matters where men expect to work together that they have some opportunity to adjust differences of opinion and not furnish information to those opposed to them to be used against them, and the regret of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is that the Democrats will not accommodate them by furnishing ammunition that they can not obtain on their own initiative. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, several years ago I announced that never again, while a Representative in Congress, would I attend a meeting called as a caucus. I will attend conferences. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Now, gentlemen, there is nothing of which I am so forcibly reminded by your explosion over there as of the famous line, "And the loud laugh that speaks the vacant mind." [Applause on the Republican side.] Does not the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS], whose vociferous, uproarious—I was going to say "snort," but wishing to be parliamentary will say laugh—among others I heard, know that there is a well-understood distinction between a caucus and a conference?

One who attends a conference is not considered as being bound to abide by its decision. He enters a conference and he leaves it free to do what he thinks will be best for the country. I can attend a conference with my party associates, listen to what they say, and give my own views, and, as a result, in a great majority of instances will, upon questions of party policy or upon matters of legislation, agree with them and vote with them. But sometimes the legislation proposed is of so serious a nature that under my oath faithfully to discharge the duties of my office of Representative in Congress I can not agree that the voice of a majority of a conference shall control my vote.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. Not at this time. I desire to continue, if the gentleman will permit me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, the caucus, under the construction which has been given to it in this House for some years—the true construction, according to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] a Congress or two ago; the construction put upon it also by the late Republican Speaker, Mr. Cannon, who punished men because they would not be bound by a caucus—is a secret meeting in which those who attend are held to have bound themselves in advance to abide by its decrees.

But a conference does not bind those who attend it. That is the difference between a conference and a caucus. Those entering a caucus are bound by it and they agree in advance to be bound by it.

And what does a caucus compel men to do?

I need only to pick up copies of the RECORD of last week to find verbatim, explicit, detailed statements made in speeches by gentlemen here declaring that they believed that the bill then pending, if enacted into law as reported to the House by the committee, would work serious injury to the country, and yet, after thus declaring their deliberate belief that the bill meant harm to the country, they informed the House that, nevertheless, they were going to vote for it because the caucus said they must. How can gentlemen reconcile that conduct with their duty to themselves and to their country? How can any man justify himself to his conscience and to his constituency for doing what he believes is a wrong to the country merely because a majority of a caucus tells him to do it?

Now, let us see what legislation in secret is—legislation by caucus; that is, by a meeting in which men bind themselves even before they enter it to vote in obedience to its commands. Suppose there were altogether only 100 Members of this House—51 Democrats and 49 Republicans. The 51 Democrats enter a caucus, the majority of which is 26 and the minority 25. The 26 then demand certain legislation which the 25 firmly believe would be wrong, believe would be harmful to the country, and yet under caucus rule the 26 make the 25 vote as the 26 vote, and thus the 26 come into the House controlling 51 votes, enough to pass any bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to say that this is Calendar Wednesday, and we have a bill pending here which is regularly in order. I wonder if we could not have an agreement under which the debate on this subject, which is entirely independent of the bill before the House, may be closed? I ask unanimous consent that it be closed in 10 minutes.

Mr. CULLOP. Reserving the right to object, how is that time to be apportioned?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not know.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has tried to alternate between the two sides. He recognized the gentleman from Wisconsin and will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], if he desires recognition.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] that I would like to discuss the bill before the bill is voted on and make some observations in connection therewith. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment be closed in 10 minutes.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that at 2.15 o'clock p. m. the debate on this section and all pending amendments be closed.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman modify that and make it 2.20 p. m.?

Mr. PAYNE. I insist that that motion is not in order.

Mr. MONDELL. I contend that there is nothing before the House. There is nothing to be read.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is to read this bill.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is to read the bill. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I was saying that the 26, a majority of the caucus, but yet a small minority of the House, would absolutely control the House and dictate legislation.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. Not at this time.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman does not want to make an incorrect statement, I know. It takes two-thirds of the Democratic caucus.

Mr. COOPER. In one moment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. Suppose it be two-thirds. That does not at all affect the principle involved. A Member of the House surrenders to two-thirds of a caucus his judgment and his vote. He violates his conscience and his oath faithfully to discharge the duties of his office, and votes for something that he believes and declares on the floor will harm the country, because two-thirds of the caucus says he must, and yet the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] intimates that that is what he ought to do.

I do not know whether the rule in the Democratic caucus is that a majority or that two-thirds shall control, nor does it matter.

One other thing, Mr. Speaker. These 26 have cast their own votes and also the votes of the 25, or 51 in all; a majority.

But suppose that the 49 Republicans and the 25 minority Democrats should believe that a certain bill urged by the 26 ought not to pass, then if gentlemen were free to vote their honest convictions the 25 Democrats and the 49 Republicans could vote together and defeat the measure and pass another in its stead. Together they would have 74 votes against the caucus majority of 26, and yet under this system of legislation by caucus the 26 could pass the bill through the House against the 74 votes which really ought to be cast against it, and would be cast against it if men were not gagged and forced to vote against their own convictions and to please somebody else.

That is what the caucus is and does.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] suggested that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], in a private interview with a very distinguished man in New York, did not invite outsiders to come in, and asked why not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I am sorry for the gentleman from New York if his perceptive powers are so poor as to lead him to think that there is any analogy between the rules governing a conversation carried on in a private house where no law can be enacted and those which ought to govern the proceedings of an assembly embracing the Representatives of the foremost Republic of all the ages, gathered in this Chamber to help enact laws for 100,000,000 of freemen.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman from New York, one of the strictest disciples of Tammany, think that there is any analogy or argument applicable to this evil of caucus domination to be drawn from a question like that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I can not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman should not improperly characterize Members of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin declines to yield.

Mr. COOPER. I ask this question of any gentleman on the opposite side of the Chamber. Does he believe that the House should legislate in secret? No. But legislating by caucus is legislating in secret.

For several years immediately after the adoption of the Constitution all of the legislative proceedings in the Senate were in secret, but the clamor of the people became so fierce that the Senate opened them to the public, and never since has presumed to attempt to legislate behind closed doors.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman want an answer? [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER. Caucus legislation is legislation in secret, and is a method by which it is possible for a minority of the House, and a small minority, to enact laws.

A majority of a secret meeting decide that a bill shall pass the House. The minority of the secret meeting dare not oppose the bill in the House, but when the time for voting comes vote as they are directed, though utterly against their own convictions. What is this but legislating in secret?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, this discussion arises out of a world-old controversy and raises an issue very much wider than the immediate one here.

The distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] is a very good exponent—in his speeches, not in his actions—of individualism run mad. He tells you that the Constitution—and I pause to congratulate him on referring to it, for I have heretofore heard him rail against all law and against any sort of rigid obedience to law—he tells you that the Constitution recognizes simply an individual member of a specific district. I say to you that those who know the Constitution, with its environment—and that is the only way to know any instrument among a living people and in a living government—know that the Members of this House do not stand simply as individual Members of individual districts. Why, the distinguished gentleman obtained his very recognition to make his speech this morning not because he was VICTOR MURDOCK, a Representative from Kansas, but because he was the leader of the Progressive Party on the floor, and in a debate between the two great parties he was not willing that his should go without an inning, and so he asked and obtained recognition with that in everybody's mind, and he was speaking as the leader of the Progressives. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] well said, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] claimed place upon committees, not for individual Members from particular districts, but for Members as representatives of the Progressive Party, which party, he claimed, was entitled to a voice as such. The gentleman knows the history of the English-speaking people, and he knows that practically every step of progress that has been made has been made through the machinery of party government. He knows, or ought to know, that civilization itself rests upon the very foundation of the willingness and of the ability of men to act in concert. If every man was an individualist in the true and full sense of the term, government would be impossible and each man would be arrayed against every other.

Now, by that I do not mean to say, and the Democratic Party does not mean to say, that individualism shall be so merged into a collective thought that all personal independence shall be lost. It is just exactly between that position of standpat Republicanism and the extreme individualism of the leader of the Progressives that the Democratic Party stands, believing in cooperation, believing in agreement, believing in a proper secrecy in mental dressing, just as they do in personal dressing. I believe that when a great party is coming together in council to make up its mind upon a great issue it has the right to counsel among its membership, and that the public only need to know and only want to know the steps taken and the result of the final conclusion that is reached; because I know that otherwise true, open council is impossible, it is a pretense, a piece of hypocrisy and a snare. The Democratic Party comes into common council upon great questions, and the rules of the caucus provide for publicity of all motions made and votes had during its deliberations. Upon minor matters, where there is no party issue, it does not undertake to bring about caucus action. But it recognizes this, which the gentleman should recognize, that the only way the people of America have any opportunity for true representative government is through parties. How long do you think it would take the people of America to obtain a result on the tariff, the currency, or some other great issue if it acted simply through individuals and not through parties? How many men would be able to follow the individual activities of each man here so as to determine whether each man was really representing the view that he wished? And bear in mind this: The gentleman talks about locality representation. I had thought that one of the things the Progressive Party stood for was that a Member should be bigger than his district, and recognize that he was legislating for 90,000,000 of people and not simply for a couple of hundred thousand.

I stand on this floor speaking not simply for the voters and the residents of the fifth district of Kentucky; but in pretty nearly every act of my official career, certainly in all the major ones, I affect or may affect the destinies of every man within the confines of the Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman, while he is putting me in a false attitude, recognize that he is answerable as an individual to the people of the fifth district of Kentucky?

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course I am answerable as an individual, but I am answerable more than as an individual unit. I obtained my nomination not simply as Mr. SHERLEY from that district. I obtained it as the Democratic nominee. The gentleman gets his nomination as the representative of his party.

Mr. MURDOCK. And you will take a Republican vote when you can get it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

While the lamp holds out to burn,
The vilest sinner may return.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

I am willing to let any of them reform and come over into the right camp. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; and the gentleman does not ask that they be Democrats when they come.

Mr. SHERLEY. Why, no.

Mr. MURDOCK. And he will take any kind of a vote, because he wants to get the gentlemen of his district behind him.

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably, because that is the price of a seat here. [Laughter.] Oh, yes; and that is not a matter to laugh about. That is a fact. I know no way of getting here, except by getting a majority of the voters of my district to send me here. The gentleman who laughs may know of some other method by which to arrive at a seat here, but I do not. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, what I say to the gentleman is this, that men are here, not as individuals, but they are here as members of party organizations. I have never reached that degree of egotism when I thought that simply my personality was the cause entirely of my being here. I believe I am here because a majority of the people of my district agree with the tenets of my party, and believe that I acquiesce in those tenets and will carry them into execution, and I know that all reform comes about by virtue of party organization. Why are the Progressives organized? Why do you get together as a party? Why do you adopt platforms and elect leaders?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not yield at this moment, because I want to tell the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky declines to yield.

Mr. SHERLEY. You do it. Why? Because you hold out to the people that their only hope of accomplishing the reforms that you say are essential is through the medium of your party. The gentleman from Kansas stands here and berates the Democrats and the Republicans, and, like the Quaker of old, he sometimes turns to his Progressive colleagues and says, "Only thee and I are honest, and sometimes I doubt if thee is." [Laughter.] And he thus goes on in order to persuade the people that through his party organization reform will come about. I have no complaint to make of that. I think the gentleman performs a proper function as a critic of the other two parties, and if by chance and the happenings of those miraculous things that seem to be beyond reason and beyond prophecy he and his party should ever come into the majority, then it would be the province and the duty of the other parties to criticize him and to criticize his party organization in order that they might present to the country what they thought were the real issues and reforms. That is the way the Anglo-Saxons, who were the first people to teach to the world the true doctrine of liberty, found to be the practical way of doing practical things. They do not undertake to do it through the individual spurt of individual men, no matter how satisfied they are of their ability.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Would it not be possible to have inter-party action here and party criticism just as well without the secret party caucus and with the open committee?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not believe that any party can perform its functions without the caucus as well as with it, and if I did not believe that I would not favor a caucus.

Anything can happen. You can have a government and you can run it in some fashion, but what has been the actual achievement of the Democratic Party recently which has forced the private praise of Republicans and of Progressives? It has been its ability, notwithstanding it is a party with a great deal of individualism, to act as a united, concrete force for a given thing.

You gentlemen can properly criticize the object that we seek and the object we obtain. I do not expect you to agree with us on that. But you do in your hearts secretly compliment, and the country compliments, the Democratic Party upon the fact that it does march definitely toward a definite end and arrives there. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If the end that it arrives at is a good one, it will merit the praise of "well done, thou good and faithful servant." If it be not a good one, then the people, wiser than the gentleman's political creed, will turn, not to picking individuals as individuals, but will turn to some other party who through party organization can give the result they think is desirable.

Mr. Speaker, let me also repeat what has been so often said here, that the Democratic caucus is not a secret caucus in the sense that our opponents would have the country to believe. As I have stated, all motions made are recorded and made public, as are all votes, and a roll call can be and is obtained as easily in the caucus as in the House itself. The newspapers carried full information of amendments offered and the votes had on them during the recent caucus on the currency bill, and the same was true as to the tariff bill. Let it also be remembered that it requires a two-thirds vote to bind Members to caucus action, and even then Members are not bound against their conscience or their pledges. The caucus rules provide where a proposition is carried by two-thirds that it shall be binding upon those participating in the caucus unless they shall be instructed by or have promised their constituency to the contrary or have constitutional objections to abiding by the decision of the caucus. Can anyone rightly claim that a caucus with such rules robs a Member of all individuality? This House is a body composed of 435 Members, a number so large as to make impossible any progress except through pronounced concert of action and the elimination of individual viewpoint in most instances. It is destined to be, I fear, a much larger body, and when its membership has greatly increased there will come a condition like unto that in England, where the right of the individual member to even introduce a bill is greatly restricted.

There you have party government in a most pronounced form and power concentrated in the hands of a few men, but held always at the will of a majority of the body. No complaint is heard in England over the individual power of Lloyd-George, the Liberal leader, but criticism is confined to what his party does through him, and should the people become dissatisfied they would remedy conditions not by changing the power of the leader of the ministry but by changing the ministry through a change of the majority, on which it must always rest. They have well learned the fact that party action is imperative in legislative bodies of large numbers and wide jurisdiction. Now, the caucus is the American method for arriving at a party program. Let me indicate what I believe to be the attitude an individual Member should take as to the caucus. It is this: Realizing, as he must, that in this world of events every single event is both the child of many gone before and the parent of many to follow, and that to segregate any one from this relationship is impossible; realizing also the need of unity of action, he must determine whether the given matter upon which he is to act is of such transcendent importance as to warrant him in disregarding this relationship and in interfering with unity of action with those of his legislative associates with whom he and his constituency have assumed there exists a general agreement of purpose. If it is, he is a craven and a coward if he hesitates to assert his individual view against that of a majority or all of his party colleagues. But if the matter be one of opinion rather than of principle, then as a practical man, desiring with others a common end, he should be willing with them to determine on a program to that end and abide the judgment of the council that determines it. Whether the matter at hand falls in the one class or in the other can only be determined by each man for himself as the occasion arises. There are times when the decision will not be easy, pride and fear will each often mislead, but that is the test as I see it. Let me also suggest this as to the policy that the party should pursue as to the caucus. While the individual should be most sure that he is justified in holding aloof and expressing his individual view, so should the party be sure that the matter is such as to need and require binding caucus action. A doubt should be resolved in just the opposite way in the two cases. An attempt to always bind the individual to the caucus mind will end, if successful, in making oppressive an otherwise beneficial instrumentality. And the Democratic Party has been mindful of this in its caucus action. It has not sought and does not seek to use the binding rule of the caucus except in matters of first importance, and the wisdom of its use is best shown in the fruit of the caucus. By that we are willing to be judged.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, can we proceed with the reading of the bill? I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the reading of the bill, and the pro forma amendments are withdrawn.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I think there are one or two gentlemen who wish to be heard, and I do not desire to cut them off. I desire to ask that we begin the reading of the bill at 2.30.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to begin the reading of the bill at 2.30. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate Speaker CLARK upon the magnificent speech that he made here a few minutes ago replying to Republican criticism of the Democratic caucus. Let me say to you gentlemen on that side you can not deceive the country with all this senseless harangue about a Democratic caucus. The people know that we are responsible for what we do in the caucus, and when we bring measures into this House from the caucus we are judged by those measures, as the tree is judged by its fruit. How would we ever have a definite party policy in this House except by having a conference of Democrats selected to come here? Would it be right for the minority of the Democratic membership of this House to fix that policy? We do not even fix such a policy by a majority of those present. We require two-thirds majority of the full membership of the caucus. You fix your party policy in the national convention by a bare majority, whereas we require a two-thirds majority of the caucus to fix our party policy in the House. We then bring the measure agreed on into the House with the purpose of enacting it into law in the interest of the people. Did you ever hear of a general inviting the enemy to be present when he with his officers was planning an attack on the enemy?

Have you ever heard of a general telling the opposition just when he would advance and just what tactics he would employ on a certain day? No; and you never will. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], when he meets this little band of Bull Moosers in caucus and they elect a chairman and three or four clerks and a sergeant at arms, why, they can not transact business, not a corporal's guard can be found. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] But the party to which he belonged for a long, long time and at whose hands he accepted a nomination last year, as I understand it, as well as the Bull Moosers' nomination, used to hold a caucus, and the caucus was not so bad to him then. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] He repudiates the caucus now, but he comes here as the head of a little party, composed of a handful of Bull Moosers, and he was selected in a caucus; and after it was framed up or cut and dried, why, they threw open the galleries to the people and said come behold an open caucus, and a few fellows looked in upon it and said if that is an open caucus "God save us from such a little arrangement as that." [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I have not the time. Then the gentleman from New York—and I have seen him stand on that side in the years gone as floor leader and look over at this side with that broad smile upon his face, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] said, and he would say, "What are you going to do about it?" Well, we went on and fought the best we could, and the gentleman never criticized the caucus as long as his party was in the majority in this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But when driven out of this House by the lash of an enlightened public opinion and the Democratic Party came in you cried out against the great work of the Democratic caucus. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The country is indorsing the action of this Democratic caucus, and when we go out from this Sixty-third Congress, having passed a tariff bill in the interest of the people and a currency bill in the interest of the people, the people of the United States with united voice will say, "Long live the Democratic caucus." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] is recognized.

Mr. ANDERSON. I had not intended to take part in this discussion at this time, but I have been considerably amused in listening to gentlemen on that side of the House talking about government by majorities. Even in my short experience here, I have seen the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Cannon, the former Speaker of this House, rise in his place, raise his vigorous left fist over his head, and say: "This is a government by majorities." The gentleman from Illinois has many imitators now, all on that side of the aisle.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] the other day suggested that my complaint was that the tail could not wag the dog. My complaint is that the tail does wag the dog. You are talking about majority government. I want to say to you that there is not a gentleman who has spoken on this subject who comes from south of the Mason and Dixon line that represents a majority government.

In the State of Alabama in 1892 the population was 1,513,000, and the State cast in that year for President 222,000 votes. In 1910 the population of Alabama was 2,138,000, and it cast for President in 1908 101,000 votes. Somewhere between 1892 and 1908 100,000 white people had been disfranchised in the State of Alabama.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman get the primary vote and see how many voted in the primaries in that State?

Mr. ANDERSON. I have not the primary vote for the State of Alabama, but I have the primary vote for the State of Georgia.

Mr. BURNETT. Down there, except in my district, thank God, they have but one party, and hence when the election comes the vote is much smaller. But, if the gentleman will be fair enough to get the primary vote, where there is opposition to candidates, he will find that there is a large vote cast in every primary election in Alabama.

Mr. ANDERSON. I have not the primary vote for the State of Alabama, but I happen to have the primary vote for the State of Georgia. In 1908 the primary vote in the State of Georgia was 121,000 and the general election vote was about 120,000.

Mr. HARDWICK. Those figures are absolutely wrong. I do not know where the gentleman got them.

Mr. ANDERSON. I got them from the World's Almanac.

Mr. HARDWICK. There were more votes cast in the primary in Georgia at that time. It was about 140,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. In the State of Georgia, when the leader of your side of the House [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the gentleman who now occupies the White House were candidates in the primary, Mr. UNDERWOOD received 71,410 votes and Mr. Wilson received 57,267 votes, a total of 128,677 votes.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman tells us now that his figures were for the primary of 1908.

Mr. ANDERSON. 1912. If I stated 1908 I was in error in that particular.

I want to take for just one moment the State of Texas. In 1910 the State of Texas had a population of 3,896,000; a total male population over 21 years old of 1,003,000; a total white male population over 21 years of age of 835,000. It cast in 1908 a total vote of 293,556.

Mr. HARDWICK. What does that prove?

Mr. ANDERSON. It proves that a large per cent of the white people of the State of Texas are disfranchised to-day.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman is utterly mistaken.

Mr. ANDERSON. Well, I am not mistaken.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, you are.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am not mistaken.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman tell us how they are disfranchised?

Mr. ANDERSON. By the laws of the State. Let me give you some figures.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield the floor?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not yield. In 1900 the population of the State of Texas was 3,048,000 and it cast a vote of 412,000. In 1910 its population was 3,896,000, and in 1908 it cast a vote of 292,400.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I would be very glad to, but my time has expired.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, whenever I arrive at that condition of ignorant self-complacency where I think that I know more than all the rest of the Democrats in this House, then I will repudiate a Democratic caucus. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] seems to be irritated to-day. The gentleman is evidently unwell. He is not at himself. [Laughter.] He objected to some of the Kentucky delegation laughing—or "snorting," as he said. [Laughter.] Now, there were three of us engaged in that, and I suppose all of us "snorted," because we three certainly had cause to "snort." [Laughter.]

But I do not think that I should pay much attention to the gentleman from Wisconsin upon this occasion, because I remember that Sancho Panza said it was a waste of lather to shave an ass. [Renewed laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman speaks about conferences. What is the difference between a conference and a caucus?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, for three minutes more. Everybody else has been talking.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for three minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I shall demand the regular order after the three minutes have expired. I want to get on with the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. I say, Mr. Speaker, what is the difference between a caucus and a conference? The only difference is in the name. The Republicans and the Progressives, so called, ought to be called the crawfish parties, because they are going backward all the time. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] They will slip into a conference, so called, and they will confer, and they will formulate a program, and then they will meet and carry out the program that they have formulated in secret conference, and then they will thank God that they are not like the wicked Democrats who hold these secret caucuses. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

They say that the Democrats are bound by these caucuses. That is a mistake. No Democrat is bound by a caucus. Each Democrat goes into caucus and takes part in that caucus, and if anything comes up in caucus that he can not in conscience support the caucus will release him from voting for that measure. That was done upon this currency bill, and three Democrats who were in that caucus were released from the operation of the caucus and voted against the currency bill.

I am for a Democratic secret caucus. When we go into caucus every man has a voice in that caucus. Every man has the right to express his opinion in caucus. Everything is carried on honorably and fairly. I presume that our Republican friends do not want to go into what they call a secret caucus because they are afraid they will do something wrong, and they would be very apt to do something wrong, either in a secret caucus or out of a secret caucus. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have said about all that I wish to say upon this question. It is simply an attempt to play politics, and a very poor attempt at that. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. The Clerk will read the first section of the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the bill has just been read. It is only a short bill, and it is in due form. I ask unanimous consent that the second reading be dispensed with.

Mr. MONDELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] objects. The Clerk will read the first section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an additional land district is hereby created for the State of Nevada to embrace the lands contained in the following-named counties, to wit: Churchill, Elko, Eureka, Humboldt, Lander, Lincoln, Nye, and White Pine, described as follows, to wit: Commencing at the common corner between townships 38 and 39 east, range 47 north, Mount Diablo base and meridian, being on the north boundary line of the State of Nevada; thence south on the dividing line between townships 38 and 39 east, to its intersection with the third standard parallel north, said parallel being the dividing line between ranges 15 and 16 north, of Mount Diablo base line; thence east along said third standard parallel north to the intersection of the Ruby Valley guide meridian, being the dividing line between townships 55 and 56 east; thence south along said Ruby Valley guide meridian to its intersection with the first standard parallel north, being the dividing line between ranges 5 and 6 north, of Mount Diablo base line; thence east along said first standard parallel north, between said ranges 5 and 6, to the east boundary line of the State of Nevada; thence north along the east boundary line of the State of Nevada to the north boundary line of the State of Nevada to the point of beginning. The city of Elko, in the county of Elko, is hereby designated as the site of said land office, and the district shall be known as the Elko land district.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we have all been edified by the discussion we have just heard. I think it is about time now that some one said something about the bill.

This bill provides two offices at salaries of $3,000 each for Democratic patriots in Nevada; and that fact in itself, I assume, is sufficient to warrant its being considered an emergency measure in these times, when there are not offices enough to go round.

Notwithstanding the fact that it is providing two fat offices for Democrats in Nevada, I think the bill should become a law. For a long time Nevada has not been having a great deal of land business, and in a way the people out there have been able to get along with one land office covering a vast territory; but I believe it is better to have the land areas cut up into districts of reasonable size than to have the districts too large, providing there is a considerable amount of land business. I am very hopeful of new legislation in the near future which will settle up Nevada; new legislation that will apply the homestead idea to lands fit only for grazing purposes. Over half of the land in Nevada is land that can never be utilized for any other purpose than grazing, and grazing homesteads of proper size will largely increase the land-office business in Nevada and give plenty of business for these new officials, with the increased population that will come.

Mr. Speaker, having said that much about the bill, it would hardly do to take my seat without making a few observations relative to matters that have been discussed here in the last few moments. I have not until to-day fully understood or realized just how much the withers of our Democratic friends were wrung, just how much they were wincing under the galling they are getting from the leaders of their party. It is true that once in a while a gentleman on that side rises in his place and in agonized tones proceeds to tell the exact truth. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], who is looking at me now, is one of those who edified us in that way the other day. He assured us that the currency bill, upon which the Democratic caucus had placed its stamp of approval, contained a number of provisions which were vicious, not merely as a matter of policy but as a matter of principle; and yet, as a good Democrat, he told us that he proposed to vote for the bill. Then the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] arose and at some considerable length and with much candor and frankness advised us as to how the caucus worked. But it remained for the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELDER] to illuminate the situation in one short sentence, when he said, speaking of the currency bill:

Some voted for this bill because they feared it would bring down on their heads the disfavor of the administration if they did not do so.

There may be some question as to the propriety and wisdom of a secret caucus. There may be times, and I think there are, when a party is justified in attempting through a caucus to bind its members, but such instances are in the history of legislation exceedingly few and far between. And simply for the sake of history, in order that the Record may not be confused with the misstatements that have been hurled at it to-day, let us remember that the Republican Party, which my good friend from Kansas tells us was hurled from power by reason of its methods, held very few secret and binding caucuses, only three or four in something like 20 years, if my recollection serves me right. If I am not correct, gentlemen on this side will correct me. In 20 years I do not recall over two or three occasions when the Republicans held a secret and binding caucus.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Is it not a fact that the complaint among Republicans during the last 10 years was more frequently because the Republican leaders failed to call caucuses and conferences when they thought that ought to have been done in order to have a consultation of members of the party?

Mr. MONDELL. Whether that be true or not, my personal opinion is that it would have been better for us if we had had more frequent conferences.

But our Democratic friends are attempting to defend themselves from criticism in this Congress, on the claim that they are doing exactly as we did, which is not true; for that side has been bound more times and on more important legislation in this session of Congress than the Republicans were in 20 years.

There is this difficulty with a secret and binding caucus, as your experience has developed. In many instances it does not represent the judgment of the men who are bound by it. Witness the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY], and the statement I have just read of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELDER], and the half confession of my friend from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

The secret and binding caucus is used for the purpose of coercing Members of Congress into harmony with the Executive will and pleasure, through the fear, as the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELDER] expressed it, of Executive disfavor affecting appointments and other matters important to gentlemen in their districts. I think it can be said truthfully that the majority on that side would not have agreed to the currency bill in the form in which it passed the House if it had not been for the fact that the majority was coerced into agreement with the views of gentlemen connected with the administration, and then that coercion was made effective by a binding caucus vote. We may have done some things that should not have been done in the long lease of power that the party to which I belong was given in this House, but never in all of its history was it bound and gagged as the gentlemen on the other side have been in this Congress; never in its history was it so subservient to Executive will as are gentlemen on the other side at this time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has again expired.

[Mr. DIES addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register and a receiver for said land district, and they shall be subject to the same laws and be entitled to the same compensation as is or may be hereafter provided by law in relation to the existing land offices and officers of said State.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. The party in power is always charged with the responsibility of legislation, and no party ever exercised that more arbitrarily than the party to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] belongs and was leader in the Sixty-first Congress. Congress was then convened immediately after the inauguration of the President for the purpose of revising the tariff, revising the tariff downward as their platform had declared and as the leaders of their party had promised, but when the caucus took hold of the revision of the tariff in the Sixty-first Congress, not a caucus of all the Republicans, but a caucus of four or five of the leaders who were leading the Republican Party, it was revised upward instead of downward, as the party had promised before the election.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman to allow me to correct a few mistakes in his statement. In the first place, the platform did not pledge a revision of the tariff downward, and in the second place the tariff never was made lower than the present law.

Mr. CULLOP. That is true; it promised a revision of the tariff, and that promise was construed by Republican leaders to mean a revision downward. The language doubtless was ambiguous and susceptible of a construction either upward or downward, and there is where the Republican Party worked its duplicity on the public. Before the election, when soliciting votes, it was construed by the Republican candidate for President, Mr. Taft, and all the leading Republican orators and writers to mean a downward revision, and so promised the people. But after the election, when success had been secured, the party leaders then placed the construction on it that it meant as much an upward revision as a downward one, repudiated all promises made before the election, and proceeded to revise it upward. I take issue with the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] when he says it was not revised upward. It was revised upward, and was the highest of any ever enacted in the history of tariff legislation in this country.

The baneful result, followed with all its disastrous effects, of adopting a platform susceptible of two constructions—one for use before the election in order to catch votes, the other for use after the election, when legislation is to be enacted and special interests are to be served. For an example, this is one of the best ever furnished during the entire course of our national legislation. But for this breach of public faith, for the repudiation of solemn promises made, the American people visited their retribution upon the Republican Party with such terrific effect that it only carried in the last election two little States, the combined electoral vote of which was only eight. This was the penalty inflicted. Now, the trouble with the party of the distinguished gentleman from New York is it has been playing fast and loose with the people as long as they would stand it, and for this reason it was driven from power. Far better would it have been for the Republican Party if it had conferred in caucus more with the rank and file of the party and less with the special interests which have dominated it. It might occupy more favor in the public eye and greater influence in the councils of legislation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the caucus. I believe "In a multitude of counsel there is wisdom," and I believe wherever responsibility is reposed upon a party that responsibility should be met in a spirit of harmony and with a uniformity of action. This method the Democrats in this Congress are pursuing, with eminent satisfaction to themselves and to the people of the country. I have always voted for an open caucus, not so much because I believed it was a matter of supreme importance but more because I thought it would satisfy the demand of some people who seem to exhibit great hostility to a secret caucus. On this question, each time it has been up, the majority of my party has voted the question down, and with that majority expression I have no serious fault to find.

The caucus of the Democrats of this House is not secret, because the rules of the caucus provide for publicity and the manner in which it can be obtained. Every vote and every act can be made public if desired. I do believe the caucus is essential in order to expedite the business, secure the adoption of platform pledges, and carry out effectually party policies. If it were not for it, a divergence of views would arise conflicting in many respects in the adoption of party measures and confusion would often delay their speedy and complete enactment into laws. It serves a good purpose, and in my judgment it is indispensable. Again, by it no man is required to sacrifice his judgment, surrender his principle, or yield his independence. He is left free to act as he pleases. Much idle talk for mere political effect has been indulged here to create a prejudice against the caucus action. Now, people are not so much interested in how a measure gets before this House as they are in what the measure contains, and as long as a measure is the creation of the council of the President and the entire Democratic membership of this House the people know it is the product of careful thought and combined wisdom, that it is written by their representatives elected for that purpose, and not the product of some person employed by some special interest, at whose behest it is passed, and who will profit as a result thereof.

Some few of our Republican friends have criticized the President because of his willingness to confer with leaders here on important legislative matters. Under our system of Government he plays an important function in all legislative action. It is made his duty by the Constitution to advise and confer with Congress on all legislative matters, to express his views, and to approve or disapprove all legislative action.

It is wise that he and the leaders should agree at the outset, if possible, in order that they may avoid disagreement after bills have passed both branches, and then meet his disapproval by the exercise of the veto. Let me say to gentlemen who have urged this criticism that it is time wasted in making it. The people of the country approve his course and applaud his efforts. They endorse his action and rely on him to assist in securing for the country constructive legislation that will better conditions and improve opportunities of the whole people. He should consult Congress just as he has been doing, and as we all hope he will continue to do. It is proper and right he should do so. The people of this country are finding no fault with the course he pursues, but they approve it and bid him continue the good work, and they stand ready and willing to sustain his efforts in all he does. His patriotic efforts in behalf of the American people and their relief from the domination of special privilege meets the approval of the country. I may also say that I regret it meets the disapproval of some of our Republican friends, but they will think better of it when they learn of its beneficial effects and realize the good it will accomplish for the country and the whole people.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] has expired. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] is recognized.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, we all admire and respect—

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Oklahoma rise?

Mr. FERRIS. I dislike very much to make any point of order, but I do think when a bill is being read under the five-minute rule on Calendar Wednesday, that at the end of these paragraphs we ought not to have a long political debate on matters wholly outside of the legislation which we are trying to consider.

The SPEAKER. The rule is that there are five minutes on each side on an amendment, under the five-minute rule, and the rule furthermore is, that if any gentleman objects to any other gentleman going outside of the discussion of the amendments pending, it is a point of order well taken and shall be sustained.

Mr. FERRIS. I just give notice, Mr. Speaker, after this speech, which I take it will be in reply to the others, I will make objections to any speeches not relating to the bill.

Mr. TOWNER. I think the gentleman will be justified in that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] will proceed for five minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I think everything that could be said legitimately in the way of argument in defense of the Democratic caucus, so far, was made by the Speaker on the floor of the House this morning. The first matter alleged as a justification is that in the formation of the Dingley tariff bill and in the formation of the present Payne tariff law the Speaker did not even form the committees at the special sessions that were called for that purpose until the close of the special sessions. I think gentlemen know, although it has not been so stated, that those special sessions were called exclusively for the purpose of considering tariff measures. The reason the committees were not formed was because it was not necessary to form any, except that which had consideration of the tariff bill alone. That may or may not be sufficient justification, but I call the gentleman's attention to this fact, that there are two things, at least, that are new in caucus action which the Democrats have now adopted. The first—and I call attention to that because we have just experienced a notable example of it in the consideration of the currency bill—is that you have not only been considering party policy with regard to a bill, but you have been absolutely formulating bills in your caucus which you admit are nonpartisan, a thing that has never been done before in the history of this country, except in the consideration of tariff bills. That is the first extension you have made in the doctrine.

And, again, you come in here not only controlled by caucus domination regarding these particular bills, but you have adopted caucus rules which provide that although the committees have been formed and can consider legislation, although the House is in session and ought to be doing its work, nothing shall be done that does not first receive the approval of the Democratic caucus.

How can you justify keeping Congress here in session, almost doing nothing except that which you choose to say may be done, having your committees formed for the consideration of business and yet not doing any business? When the country comes to understand that the people will begin to comprehend what is meant by your demand for caucus domination and support.

It is not too much to say that there is no possible justification for Congress now doing nothing. You are responsible for the conduct of business here. You ought to be considering these bills that have been introduced. Your committees ought to be considering them. Why are you not doing it? Why are you sitting here, giving your approval only for the consideration of these inconspicuous and insignificant bills, such as we have before us to-day, and not allowing any consideration, either in committee or House, of the great legislation that ought to be considered? You will now have all of your work thrown into the regular session, crowded as it always is, which will commence in December. Why are your committees not now working, considering the many important bills introduced, getting them ready to report at the commencement of the next session?

That is your duty, and it is the duty of all the membership of this House. You compel us to stay here in session. You compel us to go through the farce of having these sessions from day to day and yet will allow nothing to be done. You say there shall not be even a recess of Congress, and yet you refuse to do any work. Do you suppose the country will justify that? What party demand and party expediency is there that will justify such conduct as that? I think this Congress, if it remains in session, ought to be doing the work of Congress. I think we ought to be doing the work we are sent here to do. I think the committees ought to be considering the important bills introduced and reporting upon them. Your excuse that party government demands a party caucus, when it comes to these extensions of caucus rule, will not be accepted by the American people; and when they come to understand it, when legislation shall fail that ought to pass, when it can not be adequately considered as it ought to be considered, they will wonder why you, during all these months that you have kept Congress in session, would not allow Congress to do the business which the people sent you here to do. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

OPENING LANDS RESTORED FROM RESERVATIONS.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 8364 on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8364) to authorize the President to provide a method for opening lands restored from reservation or withdrawal, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter when public lands are excluded from national forests or released from withdrawals the President may, whenever in his judgment it is proper or necessary, provide for the opening of the lands by settlement in advance of entry, by drawing, or by such other method as he may deem advisable in the interest of equal opportunity and good administration, and in doing so may provide that lands so opened shall be subject only to homestead entry by actual settlers only or to entry under the desert-land laws for a period not exceeding 90 days, the unentered lands to be thereafter subject to disposition under the public-land laws applicable thereto.

SEC. 2. That where under the law the Secretary of the Interior is authorized or directed to make restoration of lands previously withdrawn he may also restrict the restoration as prescribed in section 1 of this act.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, prior to 1901, when public land was opened for any purpose, unless by special enactment, and even clear up to this time, the land was opened to the first takers. They had horse-race methods, and contests and fights and duels and troubles galore resulted therefrom. In 1901 Congress began to pass by special enactment laws fitting the different occasions and providing for the method of opening the lands, and in my own county and in my own section they opened 13,500 tracts of land under a drawing method. I think that was the first occasion on which the drawing method was used. There the people went and registered, as they have done in recent years, and numbers were drawn, and then they went in an orderly and dignified way and made selections of land.

That plan has been followed in Idaho and North Dakota and other States. The Secretary of the Interior tells me that heretofore lands have been withdrawn for reclamation purposes, and abandoned military reservations and different areas of lands for different purposes have been withdrawn. After the use for which the land has been withdrawn becomes obsolete it becomes incumbent upon the department to restore the land to entry. If land is withdrawn in the center of a tract and a certain part of it has become settled up it becomes too valuable to allow it to be opened in the usual way. The Secretary is without authority of law and without power to work out regulations covering the opening and taking and filing upon that land. He has a tract now in the district represented by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID], and he is waiting on this bill before opening it up. He has two tracts in the Northwest that for one cause or another have been restored to the public domain.

This bill is drawn by the department and asked for by the department, and is very much desired by your committee. It was carefully considered by the Committee on the Public Lands. The Assistant Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Jones, came before the committee and explained the necessity of the bill. If you have had occasion to look at the report of the bill you will notice that there is embodied in that report a history of the various openings and a statement of the necessity for the passage of this bill.

For years Congress and the general public have felt the keenest sort of a demand for legislation that would make the opening of public lands in the West orderly and free from contests, trouble, and even disgrace. I therefore desire to print herewith as a part of my remarks the historical data with reference to land openings in the West:

MEMORANDUM OF METHODS HERETOFORE ADOPTED IN THE RESTORATION OF LANDS TO DISPOSITION.

From time to time areas of public lands otherwise subject to disposal under certain or all of the public-land laws have been temporarily or permanently withdrawn for Indian, military, forest, or other reservations; for irrigation under the Federal reclamation act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., 388); under the Carey Act of August 18, 1894 (28 Stat., 372); for classification or other purpose under the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., 847). Subsequently, the purpose of the reservation having been accomplished or the lands proven to be unsuited for the use for which withdrawn, or because of other reasons warranting their restoration, such withdrawn areas have been returned to the public domain for disposition under applicable land laws.

In some instances, notably Indian or military reservations, Congress has, by acts specially applicable, prescribed the form and manner of restoration, but in many other instances the Executive is charged with the duty of restoring the lands to disposition, though not vested with specific authority to prescribe the manner in which the lands so restored shall be opened to settlement or entry.

During the last 18 or 20 years various methods of opening the lands to disposition have been tried, some of which have proved unsatisfactory and productive of confusion and litigation, while others have resulted in general satisfaction both to the executive officers and the public. Herewith is a brief historical statement of methods of land openings tried since 1885; also a statement as to what, in the opinion of this department, should be the authority given the Executive with respect to future land openings.

METHODS OF LAND OPENINGS TRIED SINCE 1885.

PRESENTATION OF APPLICATIONS TO LAND OFFICERS.

At the opening of the Santee-Sioux Indian Reservation the register and receiver of the land office were on May 8, 1885 (3 L. D., 534), advised that parties desiring to make entry should be present in person at the local land office on a given date, with their applications duly prepared, and the register was required to announce by sections the lands upon which he would receive applications. Where there were a number of applications for the same tract they were to be treated as simultaneous, and the tract awarded to the highest bidder.

At the opening of certain lands formerly embraced in the Uintah Indian Reservation it was provided in instructions issued October 16, 1909 (34 Stat., 176), that the register and receiver should note the number of persons in line before the local office and act upon their applications in the order of presentation, and that after the applications of those who were before the office at 9 a. m. on the day of opening had been disposed of applications received through the mails should be considered and acted upon in the order in which they were opened by the register and receiver. In other instances lines of applicants formed in front of the local land office and the order in which applicants arrived have been recognized. In some such instances, I am informed, people have remained in the lines as long as three weeks.

RESTORATION TO SETTLEMENT AT A GIVEN HOUR.

The act of Congress of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 1004), providing for the opening of lands in Oklahoma, provided that the lands should be opened for settlement by the proclamation of the President, and that no person should be permitted to enter thereon prior to such opening on penalty of disqualification. The proclamation subsequently issued directed the lands to be opened to settlement at 12 o'clock noon April 22, 1889. Thousands of people assembled on the surrounding territory and at noon on April 22 made a rush or run for the lands. A somewhat similar method was adopted in opening to settlement lands in the Cherokee Outlet, act of Congress March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 612). In both of the above-described instances and in others where similar methods have obtained the choice tracts were acquired by those possessed of the swiftest horses or, in some instances, by people who had in disobedience of the proclamation entered upon the lands prior to the time fixed for opening. An immense number of contests between conflicting claimants arose, and the litigation resulting therefrom extended over a long period of years and entailed great expense, both to contestants and the Government.

OPENING TO SETTLEMENT FOR A SPECIFIED PERIOD IN ADVANCE OF ENTRY.

Under the act of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat., 34 and 36), the President of the United States is authorized to restore lands theretofore included within the limits of national forests, but is not specifically authorized to adopt any particular method of restoration. A number of orders have been issued with respect to such restoration, opening the lands to settlement on a fixed date and to entry 30 days thereafter, the object being to give a preference to those who actually made settlement upon the lands. This method has been found not free from objection, in that it also resulted in a race for the choicer tracts of land on the day and at the hour that same are opened to settlement. Similar methods have been followed in restoring to the public domain lands withdrawn under the provisions of the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, but no longer needed for the purpose of withdrawal, and restored to the public domain by the Secretary of the Interior, as directed by section 3 of the act.

RESTORATION THROUGH REGISTRATION OR DRAWING.

This method has been pursued since 1901 with respect to the opening to settlement and disposition of lands formerly embraced within Indian reservations, and in each instance the authority for so doing has been conferred in general terms by Congress in the act providing for the opening of the lands; that is to say, the acts have substantially provided that the President may by proclamation prescribe the manner in which the lands may be settled upon, occupied, and entered by qualified persons. Among the restorations had under this authority may be mentioned that of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache lands of Oklahoma, act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1093); the Flathead Indian Reservation in Oklahoma, act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat., 302); the Rosebud Indian Reservation in South Dakota, act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1230); and the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., act of May 30, 1908 (35 Stat., 558).

The method generally followed under the acts last above cited and acts conferring similar authority has been to permit all qualified applicants to register at a given place or places prior to the time of opening, the application in which the party is required to give data identifying himself and showing his qualifications being inclosed in a blank envelope and with others placed in a common receptacle, thoroughly mixed, and drawn out one at a time by a disinterested person, the first envelope drawn being numbered 1, the second 2, etc., the order in which drawn determining the order in which the right of entry for the lands may be exercised. This method affords equal opportunity to all qualified applicants without regard to order of registration, physical strength, or other qualifications than those prescribed by the applicable land laws. It eliminates contests and conflicts and has proven generally satisfactory to the people and to the department.

OBJECTIONS TO RESTORING THE LANDS TO GENERAL DISPOSITION AT A GIVEN DATE.

While it may seem that the simpler method may be to provide that the restored lands should be subject to settlement or entry under applicable land laws, at a given hour, upon a fixed date, many objections exist to such a procedure. Speculators, through telegraphic advice from agent in Washington, might place dummy representatives on the land before the general public had information as to the restoration; or they might place dummy applicants in line before the land office with scrip or other paper by which large areas of public land may be acquired; or, in any event, even if neither of the foregoing objections exist, it would result in a general rush both to the lands and to the local land offices, with the result that one might settle upon a tract of land while another was in the act of entering same at the local land office. It would unquestionably result in conflict and controversy.

Drawing or registration, while best adapted to the restoration of large areas, would be too cumbersome and expensive for the opening of small tracts, and some discretion should be vested in the Executive as to the form and manner of restoration.

LEGAL AUTHORITY NECESSARY.

In order that the Executive may be vested with such authority and discretion as to enable him to restore withdrawn lands to disposition in such manner as will best secure equal opportunity to all, there should be enacted a law authorizing him to provide for the opening of lands by settlement in advance of entry, by drawing or by such other method as he may deem advisable in the interest of equal opportunity and good administration; and in order that speculators may be prevented from acquiring large and choice tracts of land by the filing of scrip to the detriment of intending settlers, authority should be given to subdivide irrigable lands into farm units prior to opening, and to open any agricultural areas restored from withdrawal to homestead and desert-land entry only for a limited period prior to their restoration to general disposition.

H. R. 8081, introduced September 12, 1913, will cover the entire field and vest in the Executive just the authority he needs to make the numerous and varied restorations which from time to time will occur. It does not change the public-land laws now applicable to such lands, but simply vests him with authority to prescribe the time and manner of the restorations in such a way as according to his judgment is best adapted to the area and character of the lands to be restored and as will accord equal opportunity to all prospective settlers and entrymen.

This bill was carefully considered by every member of the committee. Assistant Secretary of the Interior A. A. Jones, having appeared in person, presented the matter to us at no little length. There is no law on the subject now by which openings can be safely operated, and it is desired by the departmental heads that such a bill as this, which will do good all over the West, be enacted into law. It will bring order and method out of what has heretofore been chaos and confusion. The bill is simple on its face, but is a very important matter. It will enable the Department of the Interior and the Secretary of the Interior to revolutionize the heretofore defective method of opening public lands and will be a boon to the West and the development of all those States. The Interior Department is entitled to a great deal of credit, and Assistant Secretary Jones, in particular, for his energetic efforts and activities in bringing about this plan, which will be helpful to all those who come under its provisions, and will be recognized as the proper method of handling these matters by all those who are intimately affected thereby. Under existing laws lands restored by Executive action must be placed in status quo, subject to disposition to the first qualified applicant, according to their character and under the applicable land laws. This results in a disorderly rush to the lands or to the local land office on the date of the opening, and finally ends up in confusion, contests, long-drawn-out litigation between claimants, and general disastrous results.

At the present time there is no law whereby the Executive can restore lands and at the same time encompass such restoration with careful, painstaking safeguards.

To the end that you may know the views of the department on this bill I print herewith as a part of my remarks departmental letter under date of September 22, 1913, addressed to Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, chairman Committee on the Public Lands, House of Representatives, which shows the necessity for this legislation:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, September 22, 1913.

HON. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: Referring to H. R. 8364, which proposes to authorize the President to provide a method for opening lands restored from reservation or withdrawal, I have to advise you that such a law would be, in the opinion of this department, very desirable. From time to time the department, in the administration of existing laws, is charged with the duty of restoring to disposition public lands formerly included in national forests, withdrawn for the use of Indians, under the reclamation act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., 388), and of lands withdrawn under the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., 847). Some of these restorations involve comparatively large areas, while others are small tracts.

At present the department has before it the question of restoring to disposition in the immediate future a large and valuable tract of public land in Nebraska, formerly included in the Nebraska National Forest, a tract of about 100,000 acres formerly included in the Angeles National Forest in California, and a third area of something more than 100,000 acres in Imperial Valley, Cal., withdrawn under the reclamation act. Under existing laws lands restored by Executive action must be placed in status quo, subject to disposition to the first qualified applicant, according to their character and under the applicable land laws. This results many times in a rush to the lands themselves or to the local land office on the day of opening, many times resulting in confusion, contests, and long-drawn litigation between claimants for the same tracts. Since 1901 a radically different method has obtained with respect to the opening to disposition by acts of Congress of lands formerly embraced within Indian reservations. Various acts, such as those of March 3, 1901, March 2, 1907, and May 30, 1908 (31 Stat., 1093; 34 Stat., 1230; and 35 Stat., 558), have specifically authorized the President to open such lands to settlement and entry in such manner as he may deem advisable. Under this authority the lands have been opened by means of a drawing under which the applicants to enter are registered. Cards or envelopes representing each of the applicants are placed in a common receptacle, shuffled, and drawn by a disinterested person, numbered in the order of drawing, 1, 2, 3, etc., and those whose numbers are first drawn accorded the first right to select and enter a tract within the restored area. This method has proven more satisfactory than any other ever tried by the Land Department for restoring to disposition large tracts of public lands and has largely eliminated the struggles and controversies incident to other methods of land openings.

At present no such authority exists in the Executive with respect to the class of restorations hereinabove described, but H. R. 8364 will confer such authority. If enacted, it will permit the President, in his discretion, to provide for the opening of such lands by settlement in advance of entry, by drawing, or by such other method as he may deem best, taking into consideration the area, character, and condition of the land to be opened, as will secure equal opportunity to the public and avoid, so far as possible, conflicts and contests.

Section 2 of the bill gives the Secretary of the Interior similar authority in those instances where he is specifically authorized by existing laws to make restorations. This at present applies particularly to restorations of lands withdrawn under the reclamation act but no longer needed for reclamation purposes.

While the disposition of lands through registration and drawing, has proven well adapted to the opening of large areas, there may be instances where small areas are to be restored or where the character or conditions of the land may render other methods more suitable. H. R. 8364 is so drawn as to vest discretion as to the form and manner of the opening in the Executive, so that he may in each instance apply what is, in his judgment, the best plan applicable to the lands involved in the interest of equal opportunity to all settlers and claimants.

As I stated to the committee at the hearing on H. R. 8081, a longer measure designed to confer the same authority, this bill—H. R. 8364—is entirely satisfactory to the department. It is sufficient to meet the emergency now existing, and I trust that it will be passed as introduced.

Very truly, yours,

A. A. JONES,
Acting Secretary.

Unless some gentleman desires to ask me a question—

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. ANDERSON. It occurs to me from a reading of this bill that it might authorize the President to restore to the public domain coal lands or mineral lands which had been segregated.

Mr. FERRIS. Under the existing law he has the right. First, he has the right to withdraw the land for the purposes of examination. He then turns it over to the Geological Survey, and they send men out to examine it. If found valuable for coal or mineral, of course the President never does, as a matter of fact, restore the land, because it takes its place on the plat book and the records as land chiefly valuable for mineral. But, on the other hand, supposing a large area of land is withdrawn with the best motive, and seeking to have the land examined, and they find there is no mineral on it and no coal on it, then immediately it becomes the duty of the Interior Department to restore that land. I think that will explain to the gentleman the necessity for this legislation. It is to avoid horse-racing contests, fights, and duels over the land, as the Secretary has explained.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge would kindly elucidate section 2 of the bill, which is foreign to section 1, relating to restoration.

Mr. FERRIS. On certain minor matters, for instance on lands that the Secretary has the power to withdraw, it authorizes him to restore, just as it does the President. Of course, while this bill recites that the President has the power to withdraw, and the President has the power to restore, I think gentlemen will all understand that that is done upon information gathered by the Secretary of the Interior himself, both as to the withdrawal and as to the restoration. We do recite, for dignity's sake, I presume, and to give it the highest sort of efficacy, that the President does it, but those of us who know most about how the matter is actually transacted know that it is done by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FERRIS. I do.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill ought to pass. I think it is properly drawn.

Mr. FERRIS. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. MONDELL. Not over five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BORLAND). The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Under the law the President makes withdrawals under the withdrawal act, and he also makes extensions of forest reserves. He alone can restore lands of that character to public entry, and if the President be given the power granted in the first section of the act he can, on restoring lands to entry, prescribe the manner in which entry may be made. On the other hand, the Secretary of the Interior has the authority to make withdrawals and restorations under the reclamation act, and the second section is intended to give the Secretary the same authority with regard to those restorations. I think the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] may rest assured that there is nothing in the bill that does anything more than give the President and Secretary authority to provide a method whereby lands shall be entered when restored to entry under the law.

Mr. ANDERSON. This bill merely provides a method or authorizes the President to provide a method for doing something which he now has authority to do?

Mr. MONDELL. He has authority to open the lands to entry, but it is doubtful if he has authority to prescribe a method, such, for instance, as a drawing, and it is the intent of the bill to give him the authority to prescribe that sort of method of entry. There has been some difference of opinion in the department as to whether or no these officials now have this authority. I think it is doubtful. While the law gives the President the right to restore lands that he has temporarily withdrawn, to take lands from forest reserves and restore them to appropriate entry, I do not believe that without this legislation the President could prescribe the method of entry. The President may fix the time when lands shall be open to entry, but that is probably as far as the President can go under present legislation, and this legislation will give him the authority to make the same rules with regard to restorations that Congress now makes from time to time with regard to Indian and other lands that are opened to entry.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] will yield to me five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID].

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I can testify from personal knowledge that a real exigency exists for the enactment of this bill because of a case in the district of Nebraska which I have the honor to represent. That opening is to occur on or after October 1, according to the proclamation of ex-President Taft. Arrangements had been virtually consummated for the opening to commence on the 14th day of October. A qualification of the free-for-all opening mode—the horse-race and foot-race test—the barbarous mode of opening with the strong against the weak, the able-bodied and fleet against the crippled, was made in behalf of a fair opening, or to equalize the opportunity of all competitors. This the department undertook to do without any express enactment granting such authority. Because these lands were excluded from a national forest reserve by presidential proclamation instead of by a special act of Congress, there has been no legislation passed, as for the last several years has been the case when Indian reservation lands were opened to homestead entry by special acts of Congress, contained in each of which acts was a provision authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to provide rules and regulations for the openings which would promote fair play, such as is sought by this bill. The department was proceeding without such authority, but with a slight modification of the brutal mode of opening, when a question arose as to the legality. Since the first opening in Oklahoma, under rules and regulations, and the several regulated openings that have followed, by the lottery plan, as everyone in the western country knows it nowadays, western people regard the old or unregulated mode of opening as uncivilized. Many remonstrances reached the department, and I received hundreds of them myself, against the old mode for this case in my district. Since having enjoyed object lessons afforded by the lottery plan of opening, people object to going back to the old plan.

The department is now awaiting the enactment of this bill before proceeding further with the opening in the district that I have the honor to represent, while thousands of homeseekers are awaiting the action of the department. Hundreds of them have gone and looked over the lands, and some of them have found, perhaps, locations that they would like to secure. They are awaiting now the action of the department. They are persons of moderate means and persons of still smaller means. They are waiting for the opportunity to secure their birthright—a home. They are waiting the action of Congress; women and cripples are awaiting a fair opportunity to cope with the strong and the swift on the equal terms which a decision by lot will afford them.

Mr. Speaker, I would have the membership picture in their minds the drawing of numbers by the lottery plan as it occurred at Fort Peck, Mont., only yesterday. There were 39,000 names of homeseekers in the box with, I believe it was, 7,000 claims to be competed for. Instead of might being permitted to make right, a little girl 8 years old, the picture of innocence, was delegated to place her hand in the box and draw therefrom an envelope; and the homeseeker whose name was on the inside was entitled, because he drew number 1, to make the first choice of the 7,000 claims. A playmate of this little girl, 12 years old, was permitted in the same way to take from the box the next envelope, and the homeseeker whose name was on the inside of this envelope was entitled to the second choice; and in this way the order in which selections are to be made continued, and probably the drawing has not yet been completed. A year or two ago a similar mode was employed for the opening of an Indian reservation in one of the Mountain States, when a widow, the mother of several children, who was obliged to earn their support with her own hands, providentially drew envelope No. 1, for which, by reason of its eligibility of the best claim to be made an addition to a town site already established or in prospect, I am not sure which, she was immediately offered $10,000 for her right. Very naturally under the old plan the probability would have been that most of the able-bodied male competitors would have secured their choice ahead of this widow.

I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, and the membership of this House, what chance would a widow, maiden, soldier's orphan, or a cripple share in a race with, say, 40,000 or 50,000 homeseekers for the forest-reserve lands in question, mostly men, let loose on the minute by a proper signal, going in a mad rush, foot or horseback, competing for 500 claims, with one only to be had for every 30, 40, or 50 persons?

Mr. Speaker, I am as directly interested in the enactment of this bill as if I were its author; in fact, a bill I did introduce for the same plan of opening to homestead entry, for the case in the Nebraska sixth district, I was very glad to yield in favor of the pending bill, which, after a full hearing by the committee on a bill for a general law on the subject, suggested by the Secretary of the Interior, and my bill, this pending bill was obligingly introduced by the chairman of the Public Lands Committee, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], the provisions of which will afford relief in my district and at the same time may be made to apply, in the discretion of the President or the Secretary of the Interior, to all similar cases which may arise in any public-land State.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not take the time of the committee further. I am very grateful to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, Mr. FERRIS, for securing a meeting of that committee as early as he did, and I am grateful to the membership of the Committee on Public Lands for their prompt and favorable action; and I may appropriately and pertinently add, in view of discussions occurring this afternoon, I have no objection to the action of the Democratic caucus in this instance [laughter], and I shall take pleasure in saying so in my district. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I wish also to thank very heartily the membership of this House, regardless of political party, for the favorable consideration I am sure they are going to accord this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore: The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed with the call of committees.

The Clerk proceeded to call the committees.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT AUGUSTA, GA.

Mr. CLARK of Florida (when the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I call up the bill (H. R. 7875) to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Augusta, Ga., and I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida calls up the bill H. R. 7875, and asks unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this is an important bill that demands some explanation.

Mr. HARDWICK. We are going to explain the matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think we better have it explained in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7875, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7875, with Mr. SHERLEY in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7875) to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Augusta, Ga.

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost of the public building at Augusta, Ga., provided for under act of June 25, 1910, is hereby increased from $250,000 to $325,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I will state, for the information of the committee, that there has been, as stated in the bill, heretofore appropriated $250,000 for this building. The gentleman who represents that district [Mr. HARDWICK] at this session of Congress introduced this bill. It came before our committee, and we had quite extensive hearings as to the emergency character of it, and I am going to yield to the gentleman from Georgia, in order that he may explain it, which he can do better than I.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. STAFFORD. Before the gentleman from Georgia begins, I desire to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. Will the gentleman kindly explain to the committee what rule the committee followed in selecting certain bills where the limit of cost shall be increased and having those presented to the House for consideration, while passing over others which are equally as meritorious and which were not given consideration?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I will be very glad indeed to make the explanation. I want to make this statement first, Mr. Chairman, which every member upon that committee will absolutely vouch for, whether he be Democrat, Republican, or Progressive, that there is absolutely not now and there has not been—certainly during my service upon the committee, which was in the Sixty-first Congress, when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLOMEW] was chairman; in the Sixty-second Congress, when Mr. SHEPPARD, of Texas, was chairman of the committee, and not at this time—a particle of politics in the deliberations of that committee. We have distinctly stated in that committee during this session of Congress that we would not report any bills at all except those of an emergency character, where we felt upon the statement of the facts by the Members of Congress that the emergency was such as to require action at this session of Congress. We stated that we would report only that character of bills, and none other. Now, so far as the caucus action is concerned, if the gentleman is referring to that, under our rules—

Mr. STAFFORD. I am only seeking information as to what the rule is that guided the committee in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am going to try to give it to the gentleman if he will give me a little time. We have distinctly stated in the committee that any gentleman, no matter to what political party he belongs, because, as I say, that absolutely cuts no figure in the deliberations of that committee, and gentlemen will make that statement upon the floor who are members of the committee, we have agreed that if any Member of Congress, no matter who he is, who has a bill pending with the committee that is of an emergency character will come before that committee and convince the committee of that fact, I as chairman of the committee, or some other gentleman upon it, will present it to the caucus and get the consent of the caucus to report it to the House for action, because, as the gentleman understands, the committees—and there is no secret about it—are not to report bills to the House for action without the caucus consent. That is binding only, of course, upon the Democratic Members of the committee. We have been pursuing that rule, and that shuts out no Member of Congress who has a meritorious measure which is of an emergency character and which he desires to present to the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. Has the gentleman a number of bills before his committee of that character?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No.

Mr. MONDELL. Bills providing for an increase of the limit of cost?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Oh, we have quite a number, but we have not many that are considered of an emergency character.

Mr. MONDELL. I have been very much interested in what the gentleman has just stated in reference to every one being treated fairly, but will the gentleman inform us what the condition is at this particular place that presents an emergency?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am going to ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] to do that because, as I stated in the beginning, he is better able to do it, being so thoroughly conversant with the facts, than I am, and I am simply explaining in answer to my friend from Wisconsin, with reference to the action of the committee with reference to these cases.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman allow an interpolation there? Has the gentleman's committee taken up these emergency bills one by one to pass upon and determine as to their exigency and whether they shall be specially reported at this session?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The committee has generally understood, and I believe it is generally understood, that there would certainly be no omnibus public buildings bill at this session of Congress.

The gentleman knows that there hardly ever is in the first regular session of a Congress. They usually wait until the second or last session of the Congress. I do not believe, and certainly not since I have been here, that an omnibus bill ever passed at a special session of Congress. So it was understood by all of us that there would be no omnibus bill. Therefore we have not considered any bills except those which have been called to our attention by Members of Congress who insisted that they were of an emergency character and ought to be acted upon at this time.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit still further. So there is no binding action, as I understand the chairman of the committee, that would prevent the committee considering any bill of a like exigent nature?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. None at all. We will be glad to do it.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the gentleman will permit me to make a statement where he left off, I will say that as I understand the situation, it is that if a Member has got a proposition that is an emergency, he can present it to the committee and they will treat him fairly, as they treated me fairly. I want to explain this bill just for a moment, and I think that gentlemen on both sides of the aisle will say, at least I hope so, that this is a fair proposition. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, there can be no question whatever about the necessity and wisdom of a substantial appropriation for this public building at Augusta, Ga. It is the only city of any size in my district; it is the third largest city in the State of Georgia, and with postal receipts of between $152,000 and $153,000 a year. At the last census the population of the city was 41,000, and since then some of the suburbs that had a population of about 9,000 or 10,000 have been incorporated, so that it has a population today of about 50,000. Besides that, there is a Federal court there and a branch of the revenue service. The building the Government now occupies is a very old, inadequate, and insufficient building that is not considered at all fit for the purpose. I mean by that that there are holes in the roof, and the building has deteriorated to where it is practically worthless, and the Government architect said that it would be poor economy to try to build it over, and that we ought to have a new building in a city of that character and size.

So that, gentlemen, about three years ago, in the general public building bill of 1910, the Congress of the United States undertook to appropriate for a new building at Augusta. For twenty-odd years we have not had a building. We have probably paid in about $3,000,000 worth of postal receipts since we had asked the Government for one, and, by the way, it was the only bill I had ever urged, in the whole period of my service in the House, for a public building in my district.

I went down and conferred with the Supervising Architect, then Mr. Taylor. Mr. Taylor agreed with me that on account of climatic conditions, and on account of the city's location, it being in the Savannah River Valley, and there being a great deal of dampness in the atmosphere, that it was proper and wise that this building should be constructed of marble or granite or some extra-durable material. The climate is such that moss forms on the shady side of all the buildings there. While most of the buildings are built of brick, some of the larger private corporations have constructed their buildings of marble or granite.

Now, we have understood from the beginning, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLOMEW] being then chairman, that this building was to be a marble or granite building. Mr. Taylor was of the opinion that $250,000 would build it. Therefore that amount was put in the bill that passed in 1910. "Of course," he said to me then, "if this amount proves insufficient, we will have no trouble, on account of the importance and size of this city, in increasing the appropriation." We opened the bids on the 3d of last March, and it became apparent when we opened them—and the bids were from representative concerns from all over the country, very few local concerns, if any, having bid, but large concerns from Philadelphia, Chicago, and from all over the country—that there was no bid to construct this building out of marble or granite within about $65,000 of the appropriation, as appears in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury dated March 14, and which is included in the report. The Secretary says:

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to advise you that on the 3d instant proposals were opened for the construction of the post-office building at Augusta, Ga., ranging from $242,000 to $293,000 for the use of limestone, and from $249,400 to $305,000 for the use of sandstone. Alternate proposals for substituting Georgia marble for limestone range from $54,200 to $60,690, and substituting Georgia granite for limestone from $48,200 to $49,000 additional.

The amount available for the construction of the building is $250,000, and after setting aside a sum for lock boxes, vault shelving, and other contingent items it would not be possible to award a contract in excess of $230,000.

In reference to your conversation with the Supervising Architect relative to the use of granite marble for the facing, I have to advise you that if the contract should be awarded at the present time it would require an extension in the limit of cost for granite of approximately $60,000 and for marble of $66,000. If the work is to be held up pending further legislation, it would not be safe to fix the increase in limit at less than $70,000 for granite and $75,000 for marble.

The matter will be held until you have advised the department whether you wish the drawings revised to reduce the cost so that the contract may be let for the balance available or whether you wish the question held in abeyance until you ascertain if the limit of cost will be extended.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. SLOAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will yield first to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], as he arose first.

Mr. WILLIS. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that as a general proposition I am opposed to the policy of fixing a limit in one appropriation bill and subsequently increasing that limit. I do not know that I am opposed to this bill, and shall not know until I can get the facts. How have the conditions changed, if at all, since the bill was passed so as to make it obvious that the building can not be constructed within the appropriation? Whose fault is it?

Mr. HARDWICK. I am glad the gentleman has asked that question. The question is very pertinent and I am desirous of answering it. It is probably nobody's fault. Building material may be a little higher now than it was then; I do not know. Labor may be a little higher than in 1910; I do not know. I am not familiar with the facts about that.

But the fact is—if the gentleman from Ohio will consider it for a moment—that we merely estimated it when we fixed the amount at $250,000. The building we are asking this increase for is exactly the same building that was then authorized. If there was an error in the matter at all, it was an error of judgment on the part of the former Supervising Architect as to the amount that would be required—an error in which I shared, for I accepted his figures. In other words, we have not changed in one single iota the original plan with respect to this building. The Supervising Architect at that time thought that this building could be constructed out of suitable and durable material for $250,000, and I hoped and thought it could be. When he said he thought it could be done for that amount I said, "Then I will not ask for more than that."

Mr. WILLIS. Now, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me another question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. I understood the gentleman to say, in extenuation of the larger appropriation, that—

Mr. HARDWICK. Not in extenuation.

Mr. WILLIS. Then I will not use that language.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not object to that language, however.

Mr. WILLIS. I understood the gentleman to say that this was the only public building for which he had introduced a bill. My recollection is that some time ago, in the last Congress, when the public-buildings bill was under consideration, the gentleman spoke of another bill. Do I correctly understand the gentleman?

Mr. HARDWICK. I said this was the only building I had asked for. The fact is, I did introduce one other bill for the town I lived in, thinking that the post-office receipts of that office exceeded $10,000; but when I found that the receipts were not $10,000 per annum, I went to the committee and told them that I did not press the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I recall the gentleman's statement at that time. I was entirely satisfied with it then and am now.

Mr. HARDWICK. But this has nothing to do with that question.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand that.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SLOAN. Do I understand that the building shall be of marble or granite?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. And not of brick?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; nor of limestone.

Mr. SLOAN. I am willing that the gentleman from Georgia shall be able to say that he did as Nero did when he found Rome in brick and left it in marble. [Applause.] I hope it may be the same in Georgia. Does not the gentleman understand the parliamentary philosophy of legislation here in the House, so that when he desires a building of marble he will realize that under the beneficent results of the Underwood bill, which places granite and marble on the free list, he will be enabled to keep this amount within the appropriation and still obtain a marble building and also follow Democratic boasted economy? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. HARDWICK. I thank my friend from Nebraska for his suggestion, and hope his prediction will come true. If it does, I promise him not a single cent more will be expended than is required to build the building.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. COX. What was the material that the old building was constructed of?

Mr. HARDWICK. It was built out of brick and terra cotta.

Mr. STAFFORD. When was that building built?

Mr. HARDWICK. About 20 years ago; in 1888, I think.

Now I want to say this: Augusta is not growing very much. It is a great city of its kind, but it is not increasing very rapidly in population. This increase from 41,000 to 50,000 that I have just referred to comes about from the incorporation of some suburbs that were not included in the population of the city at the time the last census was taken; so that there is no probability that in a hundred years the city will outgrow the building which we are providing for now, and I honestly believe that unless we construct the building of the most durable material that can be found, in 20 years more some gentleman who will then be holding my seat in this body will be here asking for a large appropriation for still another new public building at Augusta. So it seems to me true economy to build now such a building of such permanent character that this will not occur.

Mr. COX. According to the report of the committee, that building has been sold by the Government to the city of Augusta.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. COX. How much was paid for it?

Mr. HARDWICK. My recollection is that it was $40,000.

Mr. COX. That has been paid into the Treasury?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes. I am glad the gentleman called my attention to that, because it brings me to some of the emergency features of this proposition. I see gentlemen here who are interested in the emergency features of the bill, and I will go into that right now. So far I have been dealing entirely with the merits of the main proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. Before the gentleman departs from the merits, will he bring out more clearly whether granite and marble were intended by the Supervising Architect in the original specifications?

Mr. HARDWICK. I have not seen the specifications. I will say to the gentleman, in all candor, that I am speaking from information received in conversations I had with the Supervising Architect at the time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was it originally intended by the gentleman himself to have this building of granite and marble?

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, yes. In order to illustrate that point I will say that they have a public building in the city of Macon, from which my colleague [Mr. BARTLETT] comes. Macon is the fourth city of Georgia, a rich, prosperous, growing city, but a little smaller than Augusta. In talking with Mr. Taylor I told him I wanted the Augusta building to be as nearly as he could make it a duplicate of the Macon building, which is constructed of Georgia marble, and he said: "While that cost $300,000, I hope I can build this one for $250,000;" and in every conversation I have had with him he has been fully aware that that was the purpose of the author of the bill, and that was the purpose of the committee, and I so explained to him, and I am sure he fully concurred in the idea that this Augusta building should be constructed of granite or marble.

Mr. COX. Right in that connection will the gentleman yield for another query?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes. I yield with pleasure, although I want to get on as fast as I can.

Mr. COX. What objection has the gentleman to constructing the building of limestone?

Mr. HARDWICK. Limestone and sandstone are not so durable in our climate. Of course, I know my friend from Indiana comes from the State of limestone, and I understand the reason he asks the question, which is loyalty to one of the great products of his State.

Mr. COX. The gentleman comes from the State where they have marble and granite.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; that is right. We may be mistaken, but in our judgment marble and granite are more durable than limestone; certainly, in our climate. That may not be so, generally, throughout the country, I do not know. In other words, we think this city is of a size, and character, and population, and wealth, that entitle it to a permanent building, practically for all time, and we want to build it of what we regard as the most durable material, as well as the most beautiful material that can be found on the continent.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. I understand that your emergency arises from the fact that the department is ready to build this house, but has been unable to secure bids to build the house according to plans and specifications within the limits of the authorization.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; that is true, although there are other emergency reasons for its present consideration.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for one other question?

Mr. HARDWICK. Not now. I want to complete my statement, and then I will yield to anybody and everybody with pleasure. In my judgment, there are certain reasons why this bill ought to be passed at this session of Congress, and those are the reasons that appealed to the caucus of my own party and to this committee that gave its unanimous approval to this bill, without regard to party. It is right that gentlemen should inquire what those reasons were, and I want to state them. This bill passed in 1910. The Supervising Architect's Office has a small force, and there are a great many of these propositions. After these bids were opened I was notified that unless this increase was made we would have to do one of two things—we would have to take a building constructed of the cheaper and less durable material, or we would have to see this project displaced, with no possibility of telling when it would be reached again.

On that subject I wish to invite the attention of the committee to a further letter which I have had from the Secretary of the Treasury on this subject, under date of August 27, which is also included in the report.

AUGUST 27, 1913.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to the letter addressed to you by this department on March 22 last in regard to the proposed new Federal building at Augusta, Ga. You will recall that there are sufficient funds to construct this building with limestone facing after making certain revisions in the drawings. The present limit of cost is not, however, sufficient to provide either marble or granite facing. Owing to the great pressure for the construction of buildings throughout the country, they are taken up in regular order, and unless the matter of the facing for this building is settled in the very near future there is a very strong probability that the necessary revision in the drawing might have to be postponed for considerable time. The longer that definite action is deferred the greater the probability is that this project will lose its regular place on the schedule.

If you have any further suggestions to offer, may I ask that they be sent here as soon as possible in order that the drawings may be either revised or laid aside as a deferred project until some future time?

I will say this to my friends on both sides of the House, that after we authorized this building in the act of 1910, the Government sold the present building and lot in which the public business is now transacted in Augusta, Ga., to the city of Augusta, and that city is going to tear down the building or remodel it or do something to it if they can and utilize it as a city hall. The price the city paid for it, according to my recollection, was about $40,000 for the lot and building, and that amount, less a small amount brought about by an exchange of sites between the city and the Government, has been covered into the general funds of the United States and paid into the Treasury. It is true that in the contract made between the Government and the city of Augusta express provision was made that the Government should reserve the use of this public building until it was ready to occupy the new building, after the completion of that new building. It was also provided that the city was to get no interest on this money, so that it gets neither the use of the property nor any interest on the money. Of course the city of Augusta bought at a reasonable price, perhaps at a low price, as some gentlemen suggest. I did not have anything to do with that, except to secure the legislation recommended by the Treasury Department which fixed the price. Of course I know that in fixing that price allowance was made for the fact that the Government would continue to use the building for two or three years, and that the city would be out of the use of the money for that length of time, but it does seem to me that if we are eventually to adopt the policy of having a building constructed for this magnificent city which is of permanent and durable material, and if we are to consider the equities in the case, we ought not put the city to any unnecessary delay, to any useless loss of either time or money, while we are waiting to get enough money authorized so that we can go on and have the building contracted for to be constructed out of the material that we expect and desire to use.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman explain why the additional authorization is for $75,000? As I understand the letter which the gentleman read a moment ago, the amount stated by the Supervising Architect is only $66,000. Why the additional amount?

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me answer in the language of the Secretary of the Treasury:

If the work is to be held up pending further legislation, it would not be safe to fix the increase in limit at less than $70,000 for granite and $75,000 for marble.

Mr. WILLIS. I read that language, and that was not clear to me. What is the change in circumstance? The letter in which that appears was dated March 14, 1913.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. The Secretary states that if the contract is let then it will require only $66,000 additional, but if it is delayed it will require $75,000.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will tell my friend frankly why I think the Secretary did that. It is no new policy of the department. They do not hold them down to exactly the precise figure needed, to the very cent. They probably figure $70,000 or $75,000, in round numbers, to cover unexpected expenses. They will not have to expend it simply because it is authorized. I did not seek to have an appropriation made for this purpose at the present session, because we have $230,000 already available. We will not need this money for some years to come, but we can not even let the contract, we can not even begin, and we will lose our place permanently in this schedule unless we get this authority from Congress and know how far we can go in making the contract, so that we can tell exactly what sort of material we can use.

Mr. WILLIS. Does not the gentleman think that he will see to it that the additional $9,000 is properly expended for the public weal?

Mr. HARDWICK. I have enough confidence in the Treasury Department to believe that they will not throw away any money.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. When were the new plans for the building drawn—how long ago?

Mr. HARDWICK. Probably a year ago. I do not know exactly. In any event the bids came in on the 3d day of last March, after 60 days' advertisement, and probably the plans were completed in the winter, some time in January. I do not recall from memory the precise date.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman state whether or not in the submission of this bid to the contractors there will be an opportunity given to the contractors to bid in the alternative for limestone, granite, and marble?

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, yes; we will do that. That was done before, and I suppose it will be done again; but it is our desire to have it either built out of marble or granite. I will say to the gentleman in perfect frankness that is our purpose in regard to the material, and I am afraid it will not come from the gentleman's State.

Mr. COX. If I am not mistaken, the capitol of the gentleman's State was built out of limestone.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is, and that is one of the reasons we do not want to build this building out of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we all of us recall the caustic expressions of our good-natured young friend from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] relative to the late public buildings bill. We recall that in the opinion of my distinguished young friend—

Mr. HARDWICK. If the gentleman will pardon me, if the gentleman will strike out the word "young," because I am like the gentleman—getting pretty old.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the gentleman is younger than I am, and I still claim to be young.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know.

Mr. BARTLETT. Apparently so.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman, as I recall it, was not at all pleased because cities of less than metropolitan size were given public buildings.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; if the gentleman will pardon me—

Mr. MONDELL. Brick buildings, wooden buildings, terracotta buildings—

Mr. HARDWICK. No—

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). Limestone buildings, any kind of a building—

Mr. HARDWICK. If the gentleman will pardon me, I know why he is making this statement. I objected to a lot of little cross-road villages that did not have any receipts or population getting appropriations; that is all.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, it is all very well to talk about cross-road villages when a gentleman talks of cities and towns in other districts than his own.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman would not compare, for instance, his proposition with my city down there of 51,000 population.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I have no feeling in the matter at all, although the gentleman did use a town or two in my State to point a moral and adorn a tale in the discussion of the bill when it was before the House. I am simply rising to call attention to the fact that while the gentleman from Georgia thinks that we who are not so fortunate as to have towns of 50,000 in our districts are not entitled to a building of brick or terra-cotta, when it comes to erecting a building in his district in a town of 50,000 people nothing but granite or marble will do.

Now, there are communities in this country that would be very well content with a building built of brick. I think the gentleman is entirely correct in his expression of opinion that it is a matter of economy to build this building of permanent material. I shall be glad to vote for the increase, because I am one of those who believe that when we build a public building we ought to build a permanent building, a building that will be an ornament to the town or city in which it is built. We had quite a bit of discussion here some time ago, apropos of nothing as far as I can recall, relating to public buildings, and I am glad that my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, modified the speech he then made before he put it in the Record, because I should very much regret as we go into another session looking toward a public buildings bill to have the chairman of the committee in the economical frame of mind that he seemed to be in the other day. One of the gentlemen who spoke thought that no town of less than 100,000 inhabitants ought to have a building at all, and some of those who spoke seemed to be of the opinion that we ought to plan a sort of glorified soap box, with tin ornaments, as a standard of public buildings in the small towns, if the small towns are to have buildings at all.

When it comes to the beautiful city of Augusta, in the State of Georgia, gentlemen are not insisting upon economy or standardization, but are insisting that the building should be built of the very best material obtainable and upon an artistic plan. I congratulate the chairman of the committee that while in his enthusiasm a few days ago he talked about standardization and incidentally about reduced cost of public buildings, when it comes to a concrete case down in Georgia—and that is a good place to start—he does not follow the policy which I understood he somewhat outlined the other day.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit me for just a moment?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. He does want a public building that will be permanent and that will be an ornament to the community in which it is built and an honor to the Nation that builds it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). And incidentally creditable to the Congressman who secured the appropriation.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will yield just a moment, I would like to say to him that I never had any idea of any plan of standardization—and I think I stated that the other day—where a number of governmental activities were carried on under the same roof. I did say, and I say now—and our commission is at work on a proposition—

Mr. MONDELL. I trust the gentleman will not go too far, because we want him to keep a liberal and open mind in regard to it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; but I do not want the gentleman to get me wrong. I want to say that the commission is now at work upon a plan—and I believe we will evolve one—by which we can standardize the smaller buildings, where there is nothing but the post office. I do not believe you can standardize these larger buildings where there is a Federal court and a customhouse besides all these various other things under the same roof.

Mr. MONDELL. I am glad that my friend from Florida does not go as far as some of the other gentlemen did in regard to standardization. I hope by the time he reaches the next public-building bill he will have forgotten all about standardization except as to details and, possibly, finish.

Mr. WILLIS. He will.

Mr. MONDELL. I have an idea that when this Government erects a public building in a small town or a large one that it ought to erect a building that will be a credit to the Government and an inspiration to the community. That is the kind of a building that we are going to have in Augusta, I hope, and we ought to follow that rule, whether the town be large or small. I can not agree with the proposition that you may build magnificent public palaces in large cities and hencoop-like structures in small towns.

The Government ought to erect as good a building in proportion in a small town as it erects in a large one. I do not know but that we should go a little further than that. We do not do very much in this country for the small towns. A Government building is about the only visible evidence we have in many localities, apparent to all, with the flag floating over its roof, of the power and the majesty of the Federal Government, and it ought to be a building that will inspire patriotism and a desire for better structures in the community. It ought to be a building that every man can point to with pride. And it is because I take that view that I am very glad, indeed, to agree with the proposition now presented.

And while we are discussing this matter, I want to call attention to this fact. We had supposed on this side that public buildings bills were foreclosed for this session, and that if it was not possible to erect public buildings in our respective districts within the limit of cost, we could not hope for an increase of the limit at the present time. In other words, we have not understood the elasticity of the rule which governs the Democratic caucus. A short time ago the Supervising Architect advertised for two public buildings in my State. It was not possible to erect the buildings or secure a bid within the limit of cost. Had I understood that situation constituted an emergency in the view of the Democratic caucus I certainly would have been here asking for an increase. As it was, we have had to substitute cheaper material, which I believe has been done, and so we are to get along out there with a less durable building than we had hoped to have.

Mr. COX. Of what material are they built?

Mr. MONDELL. Brick, terra cotta, and some stone, I believe; but we have a good climate out there, thank the Lord. Our buildings do not deteriorate. Now, down in Georgia, we are told, it is so wet that the moss grows on the buildings, and therefore they have to have better material, and in Kansas, according to the report on the bill we are coming to after this bill is disposed of, it is so all-fired dry that certain material will dry up and blow away, so that it is necessary to increase the cost down there.

Fortunately, in Wyoming we have a climate in which building material lasts a long time and we are willing to secure public buildings at the limit of cost fixed by the committee. Nevertheless we are happy to know that in the case of Augusta, notwithstanding the unmerciful manner in which the gentleman from Georgia belabored the last public-buildings bill, the committee have forgiven him and we all desire to join in approving a proposition for a public building that for a hundred years and more will be a monument to the energy of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] and the good lever of the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to say to the gentleman that the members of that committee are Christians. They return good for evil.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I knew they were Christians, but I did not understand just how much they controlled the Democratic caucus. Otherwise I should have been here for a few increases myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Christians, Mr. Chairman, are those who pay for things out of their own pockets. This is to come out of the Treasury. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I thought I had said all I had to say, but there is another thought that comes to my mind, and as an occasion of this kind may not occur again for some time I want to discuss it for a moment.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. ADAMSON. My suggestion is that if he and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] understood more about Christianity they would have more toleration for the Democratic caucus. [Laughter.]

Mr. SLOAN. That is, they would look after the heathen? Is that it?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know whether the gentleman from New York desires to answer that or not.

Mr. PAYNE. I did not understand the gentleman's observation.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not know that it is necessary to repeat it now. The incident seems to have been passed.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, what I understood was that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] observed that the Democratic caucus was prepared to throw itself upon the mercy of the Lord, realizing the fact that the people will have no mercy on it when they understand its methods. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. When the gentleman replied to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] as to the Christian character of the committee not comporting with the Democratic caucus, and the gentleman from New York made a similar observation, right there I tried to ask if the gentleman from Wyoming and the gentleman from New York knew more about Christianity, would they not be more tolerant of the Democratic caucus? And one reason that occurred to me was that the Savior himself recognized that all good things ought to be done in a discreet and secret manner, so as not to be hawked about to the derision and misrepresentation of enemies, when He commanded, "When thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door pray to thy Father which is in Heaven, who seeth in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." I will add, just as the people are going to reward the work of the secret Democratic caucus. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. As I read the history of that, there had been no example of a Democratic caucus up to the time those words were uttered by the Lord. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMSON. You are having a Democratic example now, and when you get the tariff bill and the currency bill before the country the people will all rise up, saying, "By their fruits ye shall know them," and glorify and perpetuate the Democratic Party. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. The first part of that statement is right, but the last one the gentleman will never see fulfilled. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Oh, we have heard the gentleman's prophecies for a long time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, let me add that the scripture says, "Men do not gather figs from thistles." I think our experience with the bills approved by the Democratic caucus and reported to the House will prove that if anyone expected the Democratic tree to be a fig tree they will be mistaken. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman is partly correct. They do not expect to get figs from thistles, and when a barren fig tree was found in olden times they dug around it, and dunged about it, and worked with it until they saw it was of no use; so it was cut down as cumbering the ground, just as the people have found and done with respect to the Republican Party, because it was a barren fig tree. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman thinks that the majority on his side of the House represents the repudiation of Republican policies by the majority of the American people, but he will find he is mistaken.

Mr. ADAMSON. The Democratic Congressmen were elected by a majority.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, at the close of these interesting interruptions I want to make this one observation: A few days ago, when we were discussing this public-building matter, some gentlemen from large cities with a very great deal of complacency and satisfaction told about the enormous postal receipts from their cities.

Why, one would imagine on hearing the gentlemen talk and noting the pleasure with which they made their statements that they supposed all of these vast postal receipts in our large cities came from billet-doux passing back and forth across the city. They forget, evidently, that if it were not for the country, for the little towns, for the rural communities, those enormous postal receipts would never be gathered into the large cities. While it is all very nice to talk about postal receipts running into the millions and to base a demand for a public building on the ground that the city or town has large postal receipts, yet when gentlemen in doing that insist that the small towns shall not have post-office buildings or public buildings of any sort let us remind them of the fact that if it were not for the country and the small towns the cities would not show the volume of postal receipts that they do. It is not fair to forget that it is the rural communities which in the aggregate furnish the vast postal receipts of the great cities; and therefore in constructing public buildings we must care for the communities that largely furnish the postal receipts that are collected into the great cities as well as care for the great cities themselves. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, unless there is some other gentleman who desires to debate this matter, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to that effect would not be in order in Committee of the Whole, but if no other gentleman takes the floor in general debate the Chair will direct the Clerk to read for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the limit of cost of the public building at Augusta, Ga., provided for under act of June 25, 1910, is hereby increased from $250,000 to $325,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHEPLEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7875) to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Augusta, Ga., and had instructed him to report the same back to the House without amendment and with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLARK of Florida, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BELOIT, KANS.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7596) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Beloit, Kans.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida calls up a bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Beloit, Kans., be, and the same is hereby, increased $8,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to meet the additional cost of construction of said building by the substitution of stone for trimmings instead of terra cotta and wood, as specified in the existing contract.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the bill explains itself. It is simply a matter of authorizing $8,000 more for the building at Beloit, Kans., which is now in course of construction. I am going to yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CONNELLY], who introduced the bill, in order that he may explain the emergency character of it.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill will appeal to the Members of the House as a plain business proposition. I have listened to my good friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], and I am sure that we western people who live in the sparsely settled country do not fully appreciate or indorse the proposition that only the great cities are entitled to recognition along these lines. My district, which is great agriculturally and in other ways, being 200 miles long and 100 miles wide, has only one Federal building. It was authorized two or three years ago and was to be a $50,000 building. When bids were submitted it was found that a building of sufficient size to accommodate the business of that office could not be built of brick and Bedford stone trimming; but in order to get a building of sufficient size it was necessary to reduce the expense somewhere, so the trimming was changed from Bedford stone to terra cotta with a wood balustrade, and I think there was a provision for some zinc or tin to be put on. Now, in this little town of something like 4,000 people, the largest town in my district, they have a good many very nice buildings. Right opposite the place where this Federal building is to be constructed the Catholics have built a church costing $285,000. The county courthouse cost $50,000 and is a very good building. When it became known that they were going to trim this post-office building with cheaper material my people in the town asked me to bring the matter before Congress, feeling sure that the Members would understand from a business standpoint that it was not good policy to put terra cotta and wood in a building of this description.

As to the emergency feature of the matter, I understand that the contractor who is putting up this building lives down here at some place in Virginia.

He takes a good many of his men out there to Kansas to put up this building. They want to complete the building before they come back this fall; that is, complete the walls and the trimmings. Consequently they are asking that this be made an immediate appropriation. I will say that I went before the committee, and my good friend BARTON, of Nebraska, who is a member of the committee and who lives just across the line 40 or 50 miles, can tell you something about these conditions, and I am sure he will bear out all that I say regarding climatic conditions.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I understand that this building is now being constructed?

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. And that if this bill should wait until next winter it would be too late, because the building would then be finished?

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. That is my understanding.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the chairman of the committee that public buildings from an economic viewpoint should be constructed of the best and most permanent building material, because in the last analysis any building material that is able to withstand the elements of nature and preserve itself in its original state will prove the most economical to the people. I want to say a few words, however, about the building at Augusta, Ga., in which my friend [Mr. HARDWICK] is so intensely interested. But I recognize that this is out of point and out of order at this time, but I desire to discuss briefly the report of the committee which accompanies Mr. HARDWICK's bill.

His bill proposes to increase the cost of the public building at Augusta, Ga., from $250,000 to $325,000. I believe the gentleman from Georgia made out a clear case for the necessity for an increased appropriation, and anyone who has read the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, embraced in the report of the committee, will readily agree with him. The original appropriation was $250,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury says in his letter that after deducting a sufficient sum for shelving and other contingent items there would be left but $230,000 of the original appropriation for the building. And the Secretary of the Treasury further says that he received bids ranging from $242,000 to $293,000 for the use of limestone, and from $249,400 to $305,000 for the use of sandstone. Alternate proposals for substituting Georgia marble for limestone ranged from $54,200 to $60,690, and substituting Georgia granite for limestone from $48,200 to $49,000 additional.

The report of the committee says that the only building material that will withstand the climate in Georgia is either Georgia marble or Georgia granite. I am not caring so much about the economy that would be effected by constructing this building out of limestone, although the Treasury Department's own figures show that anywhere from $48,000 to $60,000 could be saved by constructing this building out of limestone. It might be true that the report of the committee is true that Georgia marble and granite are the only building material that will withstand that climate, but if this be true one thing is evidently certain, and that is the Treasury Department is making a great many mistakes by erecting public buildings throughout the South out of limestone.

I know that within the past two years the Government erected a public building at Miami, Fla., out of Indiana limestone, and I am sure that if there had been any objections to Indiana limestone by reason of the fact that it could not withstand the southern climate, the ever-watchful and vigorous gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], now the chairman of the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, would have vigorously protested against it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to say to the gentleman that this report does not state that they must use the Georgia marble. There is no discrimination in this report against the use of Tennessee marble which does withstand the climate of Georgia.

Mr. COX. The gentleman is correct. There is no direct prohibition against using Tennessee marble, but there is practically a direct affirmation that Georgia marble and granite are the only materials that are able to withstand the climate. While this does not exclude Tennessee marble or Indiana limestone, yet it leaves the impression that the only material that can withstand the Georgia climate is the material found in the State of Georgia. While the report of the committee does not say that Indiana limestone can not withstand the Georgia climate, this is an inference that it can withstand it, but why mention in the report that Georgia marble and granite are the only building materials that can successfully withstand that climate?

I imagine that most of the Members of the House have within the last few months had occasion to observe the splendid and beautiful building, the new Bureau of Engraving and Printing, erected in Washington City out of Indiana limestone. There was, by the former Secretary of the Treasury, considerable opposition to constructing this building out of limestone, and yet by constructing it out of this material a saving was effected by the Government of $258,800. In other words, the act providing for the construction of this building required it to be built out of limestone, and the limestone bid was $258,800 below the bid for marble or granite or any other building material submitted by the Government in their specifications.

I believe the Government is interested in securing not only beauty but the best building material it can procure for the construction of its public buildings, and I am sure that the Government never would have accepted the building material in the new Bureau of Printing and Engraving unless it knew it was first-class building material. My friend from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] has just called my attention to the fact that the great Scottish Rite Temple, the home of that great order recently constructed in this city on the Avenue of the Presidents, is built out of Indiana limestone. Here is a building having behind it millions of dollars—no limit of money, no requirements that it be built within a certain limited price, and having the world from which to choose their material, and after passing over the marble and granite fields of Georgia and of New England settled down upon Indiana limestone, and did it, no doubt, for its beauty and durability.

So I believe the gentleman from Georgia has made a good case in asking for an increased appropriation; but I do not agree at all with the report of the committee, that accompanies this bill, when it undertakes to circumscribe the material out of which it is to be built and to leave the impression that the only material that will stand the climate of Georgia is either their marble or granite. I do not object to the gentleman from Georgia endeavoring to have his building built from material produced in his own State, but what I do object to is an apparent attempt to discriminate against Indiana limestone, the best, the most durable, and the cheapest building material in the world. I am sure he is not interested one way or another in the marble quarries of Georgia; neither have I any interest in any Indiana quarry or any other quarry.

I have no doubt of the permanency and durability of Indiana limestone to withstand any climate anywhere in the United States, or any place on this earth, for that matter. And if the limestone people are given a chance and an opportunity to bid upon these public buildings they can underbid any other building material used in this country, and at the same time furnish to the public a superior building material at cheaper cost than any other building material and thereby effect a saving of many hundreds of thousands of dollars, if not many millions of dollars, annually.

All I ask, and all I intend to ask, is a square deal for Indiana limestone. Give it an open chance in an open market with any and all competitive bidding, and it will meet all comers and goers on their own territory and give to the people an equal return in the way of good material for every dollar's worth of public money invested in their stone.

As an evidence of the fact that the Government of the United States is not afraid of the Indiana limestone, it is constructing and building to-day 90 per cent of its post offices from this material. It can not be proven that the Government is making a fatal mistake in selecting 90 per cent of its material from Indiana limestone, knowing that it can not withstand the climate in certain sections of the United States, but having tried it in every section of the country under any and all climatic conditions, it knows the material and is not afraid of it and therefore willing to give it a trial unless precluded from so doing by law.

My criticism is not against the attempt of the gentleman from Georgia in getting an increased appropriation to construct a public building at Augusta, Ga., nor is it because he wants the building constructed out of Georgia marble or granite, but my criticism is against the report of the committee reporting only in favor of Georgia marble or granite on the ground that this is the only material that will withstand climatic conditions in that country. But I am assured by the gentleman of Georgia that when the Government prepares its specifications and seeks bids for the construction of this building that limestone will be one of the materials on which bids will be asked, and I am content and will be content if the Treasury Department will ask bids in the alternatives, so as to give contractors a chance to submit a bid for constructing this building out of limestone. It will save the country anywhere from $50,000 to $80,000 if it be constructed of limestone, and this is clearly borne out by the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, and if it be built of limestone, in 10 years from now, and 20 at most, it will take an expert to tell the difference between granite and limestone.

In 10 years from now it will require an expert to tell whether or not the new Bureau of Printing and Engraving is granite or limestone, because with age limestone approaches in looks very much like granite. I have no purpose in sticking for limestone, except I do not believe it is right for a committee to make a report accompanying a bill which practically says that limestone is not suitable for the building because of climatic conditions when all history and experience proves the contrary.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. For a question.

Mr. MONDELL. What is the matter with Indiana sandstone?

Mr. COX. I do not know of any Indiana sandstone. I think they have that as building material in Ohio.

Mr. MONDELL. Have they not what is known as Bedford sandstone?

Mr. COX. That is limestone.

Mr. MONDELL. Is not the Bedford stone sandstone?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; that comes from Kentucky.

Mr. COX. They have several sandstone quarries in Ohio, but I do not know of any in Indiana that amount to anything. Mr. Chairman, I conclude by saying that Indiana limestone is unquestionably the best, the cheapest, and the most durable building material in all the country, and I only ask for it an equal chance and an equal opportunity along with any and all other building material, knowing full well that if it gets an equal chance by being given an opportunity to submit for this kind of material that it will meet all of its competitors on any field, anywhere, any place.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas] came before our committee and presented his case for the extension of the amount that had already been appropriated for that building. As a minority member of that committee I want to say, coming from a district that is just across the line—divided by an imaginary line—and as one who is familiar with the climate and conditions of that country, that if this was a case where each individual Member was erecting a building for himself and putting his own money into the construction of the building, selecting his material that would stand for all time to come and would be an ornament to that part of the country, also taking into consideration that there would be but one building in an area of country almost as big as some States which are represented here, there would be no question in the mind of each individual Member how they would vote on this proposition.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. BARTON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. How does the gentleman account for the very remarkable circumstance that in the case of each of these bills it was not discovered by the Treasury Department that the conditions of climate were so bad in each case as to require the more expensive material? How does he account for that very interesting circumstance?

Mr. BARTON. I would answer that by stating that there is a claim before the committee, which has not been reported yet, of a Government building that is only one year old that is claimed to be unsanitary, water supply insufficient, and other things of that character. I would say further that, in the gentleman's personal experience as to buildings, it is quite possible, indeed probable, that in the construction of buildings you sometimes are compelled to put a little more money in a building enterprise than when you first start out, on account of change of plans.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BARTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIS. Has not the Government erected buildings heretofore in this locality, and has it not had experience with this climate? I can not understand why this question of climate should come up here this afternoon.

Mr. BARTON. I will say that they have erected three buildings across the line in Nebraska, and those buildings are finished in marble and terra cotta rather than wood. So the Government has had some experience, and why they did not do this you will have to ask them instead of myself, because I am not informed.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to hear the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] this afternoon take up the cudgels in defense of Indiana limestone, and I want to say to him that in the southern part of his State they have some of the finest sandstone beds that I know of anywhere.

But it is not for that particular purpose that I want to address the committee. It is for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that some of our clerical gentlemen in America are awakening to true conditions, especially with regard to the methods of the Beef Trust. [Applause.] And I am glad my friend from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] is here to-day, so that he can learn something as to the methods that they employ. On Monday night of this week one of the reverend clergy of the city of Chicago was invited by the Beef Trust barons to attend a banquet, at which they sumptuously dined, and it seemed to me peculiarly befitting that at that gathering the waiters, instead of being clothed in the ordinary garb of their class, were garbed in hunters' red riding garments, imported from England purposely for the occasion.

I understand after the banquet was over they presented these garments to the waiters. I wondered if the people of the United States perceived any connection between this fact and the other pertinent fact that was brought out by the Rev. John J. Lawrence, of Binghamton, N. Y., that he saw Chicago dressed beef sold in the city of Hereford, England—and he so testified under oath—at 50 per cent less than the beef barons of Chicago sold it to the people of Jersey City or to the people of the great metropolitan city of New York. And I wondered just how long our Republican friends were going to continue defending the Beef Trust, and then how long the people of Nebraska were going to send men from their State—wealthy, progressive, glorious, as it is—who will say on the floor of this House that we should not discriminate, if you will, against the packers of this country; that we should not admit the meats of Argentina, the meats of Australia, or the meats of Canada and of Mexico into competition with the trust-controlled product of this country. The gentlemen may well feel aggrieved. They may well feel that the millions of dollars of revenue derived unjustly from the pockets of the American people are now going to dwindle as the result of the tons of Argentina beef that is now on the way from Buenos Aires, and since last week no less than three refrigerated ships emptied their cargo at the port of New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to continue for three minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to continue for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman is recognized for three minutes more.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I want to put this query to my good friends on the other side of the Chamber, especially those quondam honest Progressives. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman's words will be taken down. [Laughter.]

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I did not get the remark of my good friend from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. I said I hope the gentleman's words would be taken down when he refers to his colleagues in that way.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Yes; I hope they will be. I just love them—as much as the gentleman from New York does. I only hope they will keep on fighting in my district and in the districts represented by the rest of the Members on my side, so that we shall be here for a while longer. [Laughter.]

Now, if tons of Argentine beef can come into competition with American beef at this time by paying a cent and a half a pound duty, how much do you suppose will come into the country as soon as the Democratic Party, complying with the solemn pledges made to the people of this country last fall, removes entirely the duty not only from meats and meat products, but, thanks to the work done at the other end of this Capitol by another Democratic body, from cattle also?

I need now no longer defend my attitude both in the Democratic caucus and on the floor of this House when I refused to be guided by the will of the Democratic caucus in placing a 10 per cent tax upon cattle. Mr. Speaker, when my district speaks I obey. My people want free cattle. I promised to vote for free cattle, and I kept my promise. I introduced the proposition in the Democratic caucus, and I was beaten. I voted for it on the floor of the House against the instructions of the Democratic caucus and was beaten. I then carried the fight to the White House, and the result appears in the Senate bill. I believe that our brethren at the other end of the Capitol knew more than we did when they removed that tax, and I realize that many of the men on this side of the Capitol felt as I did, that the tax should not have remained on cattle in the bill that we passed here, and they will be glad, as I will, to support the measure in its amended form.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. BARTON. Oh, no. Let my colleague from Nebraska reply for five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. SLOAN. I was personally referred to by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD], and I would like to have five or ten minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does not the gentleman think he can get through in five minutes?

Mr. SLOAN. Well, let me have five minutes. Let us see how we can get along.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. All right. I want to be fair about it. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD] did me the honor to refer to me as being from Nebraska, and desired to know how long Nebraska will send men to this Congress who will oppose bringing beef and cattle and cereals, I presume, into this country free. Let me tell the gentleman, and let him carry it home to his Jersey "reds"—

Mr. MURDOCK. Jersey "reds"?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes; to his Jersey "reds," that we farmers of Nebraska toll out there from morning till night, demanding no eight-hour rule, and produce for the people of this country their beef, their pork, and their grain. Out in my country we are not protected by roofs from sun and storm in our daily toil. We gather together those products which you of the East live upon, and we are just as much entitled to the protection of American tariff laws as men in your part of the section are who toil short hours under protected conditions. When Nebraska concludes to take orders affecting her interests from New Jersey, she will probably stop sending me here.

The gentleman boasted about what the bill known as the revenue bill did for the people of this country as it left this end of the Capitol and how much it was improved at the other end of the Capitol. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that under the terms of that new bill 80 per cent of the products of the toilers of New Jersey is kept upon the protected list, while 35 per cent of the different articles which are the products of our toil is upon the protected list, and the rates of those duties are much less in proportion than those imposed on the products of New Jersey.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. For a question only.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. The gentleman makes this statement, that—

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I yielded for a question, but I do not propose that any parliamentary petty larceny shall take place here.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I just wanted to state to the gentleman—

Mr. SLOAN. I decline to yield, Mr. Speaker, except for a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield, except for a question.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that on articles produced in the district of the gentleman who is now addressing the House protection was not afforded either in the House or in the Senate, and that the gentleman from New Jersey did not request any protection, but that the House and the Senate in the matter of thread put 20 per cent on the raw material and 15 per cent on the manufactured product?

Mr. SLOAN. You are hanging your argument on a very slender thread. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. No, sir; I am not hanging my argument on a slender thread, but the gentleman is hanging his argument in regard to New Jersey upon what is not true.

Mr. SLOAN. The State of New Jersey is represented in the Senate by two great Senators; and what I have said was stated in their presence, and not contradicted by either of them; and the facts are as I state them, being fully advised, that 80 per cent of the products of the State of New Jersey are retained upon the protected list, while only 35 per cent of those in Nebraska are so retained.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. The gentleman is right to this extent—

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska declines to yield.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. The gentleman will—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SLOAN. And I want to tell the gentleman the reason for that discrimination. No man from the western three-fifths of the United States had anything to do with the making up of that bill. In that western three-fifths area of the United States are raised the meat and cereal products, the surplus of which is distributed in the United States away from the neighborhood of production, and yet the party that the gentleman speaks for denied the western three-fifths area of the United States representation in the make-up of the bill.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. SLOAN. I do not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SLOAN. I want to state to the gentleman and to the House that for the last 15 years the exportation of beef to the whole United Kingdom has constantly decreased, until now it is an entirely negligible quantity. To be more precise, I attach hereto a table showing exports of beef to the United Kingdom from the United States and also Argentina for 12 years:

Exports of beef from United States and Argentina to the United Kingdom for certain years.

	United States.	Argentina.
	Hundredweight.	Hundredweight.
1901.....	3,180,291	771,929
1902.....	2,290,465	923,748
1903.....	2,693,920	1,132,211
1904.....	2,395,836	1,675,271
1905.....	2,232,206	2,580,152
1906.....	2,426,344	2,795,913
1907.....	2,417,604	2,756,965
1908.....	1,432,142	3,706,245
1909.....	856,805	4,336,079
1910.....	477,147	5,041,138
1911.....	174,350	6,176,503
1912.....	6,111	6,813,578

Not 1 pound to Argentina's 1,100 in 1912.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SLOAN. I can not yield. Mr. Speaker, may I have the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SLOAN. I thank the Speaker; and I want to say that if the gentleman had made a study of the beef situation in England he would not have accepted the statement of any gentleman that American beef was sold generally 50 per cent cheaper in England than it is in America.

Mr. FORDNEY. The fact is right the reverse.

Mr. SLOAN. Had that been the fact and any considerable amount been exported, some Yankee would have bought it all up, shipped it back to America, paid the duty, and become rich. The fact is that these packers, for whom the gentleman from New Jersey seems to have so much solicitude and for whom I have no particular use, are chargeable with being shrewd business men if they are chargeable with being anything; and with the recent cry that they have not enough meat to supply the demand here in America, does the gentleman presume upon the ignorance of every man in this House to say that they would ship beef from America over to England, and there sell it for 50 per cent less than they could sell it here at home, after paying the freight?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Does the gentleman ask that as a question?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the interruptions, I ask that I may have five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to continue his remarks for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HARDWICK. Reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman ought to yield for a question.

Mr. SLOAN. I will yield if I get the extension.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. The first question I want to ask is this: Is it true that on the Payne-Aldrich conference committee which framed the last bill the great three-fifths of the West that the gentleman talked about were represented?

Mr. SLOAN. They were represented, and under that bill—
Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Now, I want to ask one more question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. I do not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SLOAN. It seems to me that even a wayfaring man, though he were from New Jersey, could see that I do not yield.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. It is very hard to tell whether the gentleman is complimentary or otherwise.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska has the floor, and declines to yield.

Mr. SLOAN. Under the Payne bill every product of which we are now talking, the meats and cereals of the great Northwest, were placed upon the protected list.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. And the people were well satisfied with it—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must not interrupt while sitting in his seat.

Mr. SLOAN. And that protection was so fair that tens of meat from Australia and Argentina and elsewhere are being shipped into America and are being sold here, and this Government has been and is receiving the duty. So the gentleman would have us throw away the large duties that we have been collecting at the ports of the United States, not only upon meats, but upon all agricultural products.

Gentlemen, in 1897, when you surrendered control of this Government, the agricultural schedule was bringing in only $8,613,987 in revenue. In 1912, G, the agricultural schedule, brought in $34,146,071 in revenue. In 1897 Schedule G was the ninth in the list of 14 as a revenue producer. In 1912 Schedule G was third as a revenue producer.

Since 1897 Schedule G has increased as a revenue producer 296 per cent.

It stands first now in value of importations of all the 14 schedules, and viewed from a protective standpoint it has been quite satisfactory. Viewed from a revenue standpoint, considering its rapid increase, Schedule G is the best of the 14, and viewed from a competitive-tariff standpoint it certainly ought to be one that should not be unduly disturbed. In the last six months, of course, Schedule G has reduced some in volume of its imports, because the importers were waiting for the relief of which the majority boast. It may serve a great purpose for the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD] to say to the people of the United States that those who live in the cities and in the congested East and South shall have 80 per cent or more of the products of their toil protected, but that those who till the soil, who herd and feed the cattle, who work every day in the year in storm and rain, 16 hours for your 8, shall have no protection. If there is anybody on earth who is entitled to protection now, it is the farmer, to encourage him in the production of the meat and grain supply instead of discouraging him. If, as a matter of fact, this meat was not coming into the country at this time and paying the duty, you would have a right to complain and say that the duty is prohibitive; but it is not prohibitive, because you boast of the amount that has been and is coming in now. The American people, at least 35,000,000 of them who are interested in the production of meats and cereals, will begin to think that the day for establishing this new aristocracy, of which we hear so much, consumer over producer, should be put off for a generation. We have heard little in revenue and tariff discussions except in behalf of the consumer. Who is the consumer that he should be so favored? What right has he above the one who toils? If there is any choice between the consumer and the producer, I am here to stand up for the producer. I would rather favor the man who would bend his back in honest toil than the man who would simply indulge his appetite. Would not the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Does the gentleman from Nebraska ask me that question?

Mr. SLOAN. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has again expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask that general debate on the bill now close and that it be read for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk again reported the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLARK of Florida, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FINLEY, for two weeks, on account of sickness.

To Mr. RAGSDALE, for 30 days.

To Mr. DUPRE, indefinitely, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. SMITH of Minnesota, for one month, on account of important business.

To Mr. CASEY, for a short period, on account of illness in his family.

NATIONAL CORN EXPOSITION, DALLAS, TEX.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, for the purpose of taking up and considering House concurrent resolution 17, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make an exhibit at the Sixth National Corn Exposition, to be held at Dallas, Tex., during the month of February, 1914.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and suggest that it is now past 5 o'clock.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order, that the Clerk proceed with the call of committees.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is easy enough to make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to return to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, to take up House concurrent resolution 17. Is there objection?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia objects.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Thursday, September 25, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington: A bill (H. R. 8470) authorizing the President to appoint a commissioner to supervise the erection of monuments and markers and locate the general route of the Oregon Trail; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. KALANIANAOLE: A bill (H. R. 8471) to ratify, approve, and confirm an act duly enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii relating to the franchise of the Honolulu Rapid Transit & Land Co., extending such franchise and otherwise amending the laws relating thereto; to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 8472) amending an act entitled "An act to establish postal savings depositories for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 8473) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to set aside certain lands to be used as a sanitarium by the Order of Owls; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8474) to establish a fish hatchery and biological station in the sixth congressional district of the State of Tennessee; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. BORLAND: A bill (H. R. 8475) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a commission to secure plans and designs for a monument or memorial to the memory of Abraham Lincoln," approved February 9, 1911; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. FERGUSON: A bill (H. R. 8476) providing for the expenditure of 25 per cent of the receipts from the national forests on road and trail construction; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. KEY of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 8477) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to set aside certain lands to be used as a sanitarium by the Order of Owls; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. AIKEN: A bill (H. R. 8478) dividing the State of South Carolina into two judicial districts, providing for the appointment of a district judge, etc.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GORDON: A bill (H. R. 8479) to repeal section 3 of article 110 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, enacted July 27, 1892; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 8480) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment," approved May 30, 1908; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. ADAMSON: A bill (H. R. 8481) to prohibit the slaughter, sale, purchase, shipment, and transportation through interstate commerce of calves and cows under certain ages and conditions; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BORLAND: Concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 18) repealing Senate concurrent resolution 32 of the Sixty-second Congress, third session; to the Committee on the Library.

Also, resolution (H. Res. 261) directing the Lincoln Memorial Commission to report facts relative to change of design and increase of cost due to the unsafe foundation at location selected; to the Committee on the Library.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 8482) granting an increase of pension to Oscar D. Welker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BAILEY: A bill (H. R. 8483) for the relief of Adam Earnest; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8484) for the relief of Harrison Desfbaugh; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BELL of California: A bill (H. R. 8485) granting an increase of pension to H. McFarlin; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BORLAND: A bill (H. R. 8486) granting a pension to Mary E. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BOWDLE: A bill (H. R. 8487) granting an increase of pension to Sarah Toomey; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8488) granting a pension to Harry L. Tompkins; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8489) for the relief of Mason M. Maxon; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 8490) granting a pension to Gambo C. Villines; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8491) granting a pension to Clarence F. Moore; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8492) granting a pension to America Pippin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8493) granting a pension to Nathan Hirshberg; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8494) granting a pension to Mary C. Lanier; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8495) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth M. Harper; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8496) granting an increase of pension to Arthur Scrivner; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8497) granting an increase of pension to Joe R. Pickle; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8498) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Jackson; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8499) granting an increase of pension to Margaret A. Bennett; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8500) granting an increase of pension to John W. Martin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8501) granting an increase of pension to John N. Smith; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8502) granting an increase of pension to G. W. Wheeler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8503) granting an increase of pension to Madison White; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8504) granting an increase of pension to Patrick Burton; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8505) for the relief of A. J. Wright; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8506) for the relief of William T. Wright; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8507) for the relief of Frederick W. Palmore; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8508) for the relief of the heirs at law of James E. Wilson, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8509) for the relief of heirs of Joseph Sivley, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8510) for the relief of the estate of Ferdinand E. Kuhn; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8511) for the relief of the estate of Thomas J. Hill, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8512) for the relief of the estate of Hiram Jenkins; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8513) for the relief of the trustees of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of Clarksville, Tenn.; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8514) for the relief of the trustees of the Lick Creek Methodist Episcopal Church South, Stewart County, Tenn.; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8515) for the relief of Gethsemane Baptist Church; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8516) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Hiram Binkley; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8517) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in case of Baxter Smith, administrator of estate of Hugh C. Jackson, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8518) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in case of J. Minnick Williams, administrator; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8519) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Jimmie A. Elliott, sole beneficiary of the estate of Adaline Elliott, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8520) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Jimmie A. Elliott, sole legatee of Thomas A. Elliott, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8521) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Virginia Carter, administratrix of estate of Felix Carter, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CAMPBELL: A bill (H. R. 8522) granting an increase of pension to Jefferson Hurst; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DEITRICK: A bill (H. R. 8523) granting a pension to Daniel J. Keefe; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8524) granting a pension to George Gregory; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8525) granting a pension to Mary D. Jenness; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8526) granting a pension to John R. Morrison; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8527) granting a pension to Catherine F. Wallace; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8528) granting a pension to Edward G. Eaton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8529) granting a pension to Thomas Comerford; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8530) granting a pension to Patrick Conley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8531) granting a pension to Mary E. Palmer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8532) granting a pension to Mary Lahey Murphy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8533) granting an increase of pension to Isabella B. Slayter; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8534) granting an increase of pension to John F. Shea; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8535) granting an increase of pension to George W. White; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8536) granting an increase of pension to Emerson W. Law; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8537) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Bowman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8538) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Ferrall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DERSHEM: A bill (H. R. 8539) granting an increase of pension to John M. Copeland; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8540) granting an increase of pension to Luther Detwiler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8541) granting an increase of pension to Alfred Clelan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8542) to correct the military record of David Mowen; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DONOVAN: A bill (H. R. 8543) granting a pension to George W. Bond; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ESCH: A bill (H. R. 8544) for the relief of Charles F. Fine; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FERGUSON: A bill (H. R. 8545) granting a pension to Felician B. de Alderete; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8546) granting an increase of pension to Secundina Guelachowski; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8547) granting an increase of pension to Pascualita J. Garcia de Anaya; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington: A bill (H. R. 8548) granting an increase of pension to Samuel D. Kingsbury; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8549) granting an increase of pension to William H. Johnson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8550) granting a pension to Arthur C. Dexter; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8551) granting a pension to Frederick P. Tuite; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8552) granting an increase of pension to Albert Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8553) for the relief of W. A. Miller; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8554) for the relief of George W. Trahey; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8555) for the relief of Harry O. Clark; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8556) for the relief of W. A. C. Baldwin; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8557) for the relief of Peter McKay; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8558) for the relief of James Bender; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8559) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of George W. Richardson; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8560) for the relief of the Alaska Commercial Co., a corporation, for money paid to teachers in and supplies furnished to the public schools at Kodiak, Alaska; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KETTNER: A bill (H. R. 8561) granting a pension to Nancy Jane McGinty; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8562) for the relief of Kinder & Nicol; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE: A bill (H. R. 8563) granting an increase of pension to Annie King; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: A bill (H. R. 8564) for the relief of the heirs of James and Eliza M. Lewis; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LLOYD: A bill (H. R. 8565) granting an increase of pension to Sarah J. White; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MCGILLICUDDY: A bill (H. R. 8566) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Octave Moussette; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAHAN: A bill (H. R. 8567) granting a pension to Emily E. Shelley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8568) granting a pension to Frances Dodge; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8569) granting a pension to Melissa S. Franklin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8570) granting an increase of pension to Mary Dolan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8571) granting an increase of pension to Sarah B. Davis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8572) granting an increase of pension to Albert Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. J. I. NOLAN: A bill (H. R. 8573) granting a pension to Mary Curtin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8574) granting a pension to Sarah E. Holton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8575) granting an increase of pension to Jerome McWethy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RAUCH: A bill (H. R. 8576) granting an increase of pension to William A. Schriber; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8577) granting an increase of pension to Robert A. Love; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REILLY of Connecticut: A bill (H. R. 8578) granting an increase of pension to Bridget Albinger; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 8579) granting a pension to Isaac W. Bilyeau; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8580) granting a pension to Elizabeth Newman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8581) to increase the compensation of rural free-delivery letter carriers; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. SELDOMRIDGE: A bill (H. R. 8582) granting a pension to William J. Brooker; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8583) granting a pension to B. Frank Smythe; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8584) granting a pension to Hattie Dannels; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8585) granting a pension to George W. Casey; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8586) granting an increase of pension to Edgar T. Ensign; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8587) granting an increase of pension to Orville Dunnington; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8588) granting a pension to Oliver F. Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland: A bill (H. R. 8589) for the relief of the heirs of Henry A. Butler; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8590) granting a pension to Lillie Garner; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TALCOTT of New York: A bill (H. R. 8591) granting a pension to Sarah Cronk Rowley; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GOULDEN: Resolution (H. Res. 259) authorizing the Clerk of the House to pay to Nettie Jacke, widow of Arthur C. Jacke, six months' salary and funeral expenses of said Arthur C. Jacke, late a United States Capitol policeman; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of John P. Grace, Charleston, S. C., relative to the election of R. S. WHALEY, Representative from the first district of South Carolina; to the Committee on Elections No. 1.

By Mr. BAILEY: Petition of sundry citizens of Barnesboro, Pa., protesting against the passage of the Sunday-observance bill (S. 752) relative to proper observance of Sunday in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CARY: Petition of Carpenters' Union No. 1053, of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring the reestablishment of self-government in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. ESCH: Petition of Carpenters' Local Union No. 1053, of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring legislation to reestablish in the District of Columbia the right of suffrage; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of Curtiss, Wis., favoring maintaining the present parcel-post rates; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. GOOD: Petition of sundry business men of the fifth congressional district of Iowa, favoring the passage of legislation compelling concerns selling goods direct to the consumer by mail to contribute their portion of the funds for the development of the local community, county, and State; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. KONOP: Petition of Carpenters' Local Union No. 1053, of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring the reestablishment of self-government in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MCGILLICUDDY: Petition of the Portland (Me.) Local of the Socialist Party, favoring the passage of legislation making an amendment to the Constitution of the United States granting the right of suffrage to women; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of sundry business men of the second congressional district of Maine, favoring the passage of legislation compelling concerns selling goods direct to the consumer by mail to contribute their portion of the funds for the development of the local community, county, and State; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. STEPHENS of California: Petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Oakland, Cal., favoring the construction of four battleships and a naval reserve for the Pacific coast; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, September 25, 1913.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday last was read and approved.

ESTIMATES OF APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury submitting estimates of appropriations relating to work in connection with public buildings involving projects of a character which it would seem, in the interest of public service, should receive attention at the present session, and requesting that the same may be provided for in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill (S. Doc. No. 192), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Public Printer submitting an additional estimate of appropriation in the sum of $30,000 for the installation in the Government Printing Office of a mail-carrying system, etc. (S. Doc. No. 191), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a record of judgment rendered by the Court of Claims, under the War Department, in the sum of $6,244.63, etc. (S. Doc. No. 195), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Navy reporting, under the provisions of the naval act of June 24, 1910, that the Navy Department has considered, ascertained, adjusted, and determined the respective amounts due claimants therein specified on account of damages for which the vessels of the Navy were found to be responsible, aggregating $722.39 (S. Doc. No. 194), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting, pursuant to law, a schedule of claims amounting to $43,303.99 allowed by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund, etc. (S. Doc. No. 193), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2727) to create an additional land district in the State of Nevada.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 6635. An act to authorize the county of Hamilton, in the State of Tennessee, to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River at Chattanooga, in the State of Tennessee;

H. R. 7469. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Little River at or near Lepanta, Ark.;

H. R. 7470. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across Black River at or near the section line between sections 8 and 9, in township 20 north, range 5 east, being a short distance south and east of the town of Corning, Clay County, Ark.;

H. R. 7472. An act authorizing Beaufort and St. Helena Townships, Beaufort County, S. C., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Beaufort River, in Beaufort County, S. C.;

H. R. 7596. An act to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Beloit, Kans.;

H. R. 7875. An act to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Augusta, Ga.;

H. R. 8364. An act to authorize the President to provide a method for opening lands restored from reservation or withdrawal, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 125. Joint resolution authorizing the President to appoint delegates to attend the Seventh International Congress of the World's Purity Federation, to be held in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota, November 7 to 12, 1913.

PETITIONS.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I submit a telegram from the Bankers' Association of Mississippi, which I desire to have read and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. There being no objection, the telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as follows:

JACKSON, MISS., September 23, 1913.
Senator JAMES K. VARDAMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

The executive committee of the Mississippi Bankers' Association in session to-day has unanimously adopted a resolution urging you to use all effort and influence to have removed from the Federal reserve act that provision which contemplates enforcing par remittance of individual checks and drafts between members of the Federal reserve association.

T. H. DICKSON, Secretary.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Oakland, Cal., praying that an appropriation be made for the construction of four new battleships, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying that the final enactment of the banking and currency bill be postponed until a later session of Congress, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PORT OF PERTH AMBOY, N. J.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 7377) extending to the port of Perth Amboy, N. J., the privileges of section 7 of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill reported by him. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Texas if the committee have considered this bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. This is one of that class of bills which does not require any formal meeting of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I know the regulation, but I should like to know whether the committee have had any meeting?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It has been considered by myself, as a subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce. As I understand, that is the custom in passing upon bills of this character. It simply extends certain privileges to a port in New Jersey.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BACON:

A bill (S. 3134) for the relief of the administratrix of the estate of William Pope, deceased (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 3135) authorizing the leasing of the lands embraced within the Hoh Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 3136) granting an increase of pension to Lewis B. Hunt; and

A bill (S. 3137) granting a pension to Isaac N. Troutman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 3138) granting a pension to Harry Wills (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NEWLANDS:

A bill (S. 3139) granting an increase of pension to John Thompson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 3140) granting an increase of pension to John Wright; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 3141) granting an increase of pension to Julia C. Nickerson (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3142) granting an increase of pension to Nancy E. Bradley (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3143) granting an increase of pension to Mary L. Wells (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3144) granting an increase of pension to Frances E. Berry (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3145) granting an increase of pension to Mary S. Barnum (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRADLEY:

A bill (S. 3146) granting an increase of pension to Mary Thomas (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PORTLAND, OREG.

Mr. LANE. I wish to introduce a bill for reference to the appropriate committee.

The bill (S. 3133) to amend the act approved March 4, 1913 (H. R. 28766), entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings and for other purposes," was read twice by its title.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to make a few remarks concerning the object of the bill, which will, I think, appeal to all Members of the Senate.

There has been an appropriation of $1,000,000 made to construct a post-office building in the city of Portland, Ore. The design of the architect called for a two-story building upon plans which are usually adopted by the Government, making a low two-story building.

In the city of Portland there is being expended by the Government $21,000 a year for the rental of offices for other Federal officials. The appropriation of $1,000,000 would construct a six or eight story building which would house all those officials and give plenty of room for the post office, and it would save that expenditure for rental.

The ground upon which the building is to be constructed is down in the heart of the city where it will soon be surrounded by skyscraper buildings. The type of construction which has been adopted by the Government for its post offices is one which they adopted from Grecian architecture, which came up out of Egypt. It is a type of building that is fitting if erected upon an eminence and surrounded by open ground and is to be used as a temple of art or worship, or something of that sort, but such buildings are ill ventilated and dark and not adapted to the climate of the north Pacific coast. If it were in Los Angeles or Arizona it would be the proper type of a building, but in Oregon and Washington where we need plenty of light, and buildings which are airy and roomy, the money could better be expended in the construction of a building of eight stories which would house the employees of the Government. The erection of such a building would call for no additional appropriation by Congress.

I wish I could get as prompt consideration of the bill as possible. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 for the preparation of designs and estimates for a national archives building in the city of Washington, D. C., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $15,000 for protecting the shore of Anastasia Island, Fla., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

THE OFFICIAL REGISTER.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I submit a proposed amendment to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. I desire to have the amendment read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert the following proviso:

"Provided, That hereafter the Official Register of the United States shall not contain the names of those persons heretofore published in Volume II relating to the postal service, namely, postmasters, assistant postmasters, clerks in post offices, city and rural carriers, employees of the sea-post service, employees of the Railway Mail Service, employees of the mail messenger service, and mail contractors, nor shall it contain the statement of allowances made to contractors for carrying the mails or the list of ships and vessels belonging to the United States as heretofore published in the said Official Register, and all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the foregoing provisions are hereby repealed."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment submitted has the hearty approval of the Postmaster General, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Director of the Census Bureau, the three officials having charge of the compilation and publication of the Official Register as it relates to the postal service. A similar change in the Official Register was recommended by the Printing Investigation Commission in its bill, S. 4239, which passed the Senate April 9, 1912. It also had the indorsement of the former Postmaster General, the former Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the former Director of the Census Bureau. A like provision is included in the printing bill, S. 825, now being considered by the Senate Committee on Printing.

The Senate Committee on Printing, when it reported the printing bill favorably in the Sixty-second Congress, made the following statement in regard to the proposed change in the Official Register (S. Rept. 414, 62d Cong.):

SEC. 72, PAR. 1. This paragraph amends existing law by providing that the Official Register of the United States shall not include the names of persons heretofore published in Volume II relating to the postal service. This amendment is recommended by the Postmaster General, who has advised the committee that "the entire second volume of the Official Register serves no useful purpose and should be discontinued." The Director of the Bureau of the Census, under whose direction the Official Register is compiled and published, concurs in this amendment, stating that he believes the omission of Volume II would hardly be felt at all by any of the persons who use the Official Register. * * * It is estimated that these changes in the Official Register will make a saving of at least $25,000 biennially in the compiling and printing of that publication.

SEC. 72, PAR. 2. This paragraph is a redraft of existing law with the exception that it eliminates from the Official Register the statement relating to ships and vessels of the United States and the statement of allowances to contractors for carrying the mails. Neither of these statements properly belong in an official register of Government employees. The Navy Department and the Department of Commerce and Labor issue reports relating to vessels of the Government that supply all the information contained in the Official Register. The statement of allowances to contractors for carrying the mails costs several thousand dollars to have it compiled biennially by the Post Office Department and serves no purpose whatever, each item being subject, as it is, to constant change. The Official Register should be simply a directory of Government employees.

The present law requires the Director of the Census to publish the next biennial edition of the Official Register on the 1st day of December of this year. Therefore, unless the proposed amendment is adopted within a short time, the Postmaster General and the Director of the Census will be put to the necessity of again compiling and publishing Volume II of the Official Register relating to the postal service, which is unanimously condemned as a useless publication by those most conversant with its contents. There seems to be no doubt that Congress will eventually authorize the discontinuance of this volume, the Senate having already gone on record in favor of so doing by the passage of the printing bill in the Sixty-second Congress. It seems to me, therefore, that if a saving of from $20,000 to $25,000 can be made by effecting this change now, Congress ought to do so. As a former member of the Printing Investigation Commission which prepared the printing bill containing this provision, I have taken the liberty of submitting it in the form of a separate amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill, that the useless expenditure of $25,000 every other year may be discontinued forthwith.

In this connection, I submit a letter from the Postmaster General under date of September 19, 1913. I ask that the letter be read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, together with the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., September 19, 1913.

HON. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Chairman Joint Committee on Printing, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: The Secretary of the Department of Commerce has written me with reference to the preparation of Volume II of the Official Register for 1913. That department, as well as this, has gone on record to the effect that this volume serves no useful purpose and should be discontinued. On January 24, 1912, the Postmaster General addressed a communication to the chairman of the Printing Investigation Commission of the Senate, wherein it was stated that the second volume of the register covering the postal service should be discontinued.

The time has now arrived, under the provision of legislation relating to the printing of the Official Register, for the preparation of the data for this volume. Its discontinuance has been provided for in recent printing bills introduced in Congress, and, I believe, is under consideration at this time in bill S. 825, introduced by Senator SMOOR on April 12, 1913, and referred to the Committee on Printing. Unless prompt legislation is obtained authorizing the discontinuance of this volume the department will be compelled to proceed with its preparation at an approximate cost to the Government of $20,000, for which no benefit accrues to the Government as far as the service which it covers is concerned.

Very sincerely, yours,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The letter and the amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

OHIO NATIONAL GUARD.

Mr. POMERENE. I submit a proposed amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill and ask that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Under existing statutes the moneys are appropriated each year for the National Guard. During the recent floods in Ohio a large part of the equipment of the National Guard was completely destroyed, and this amendment is for the purpose of making up that loss.

The amendment was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed and to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Arming and equipping the Militia—Allotment State of Ohio: For replacing military stores, supplies, and equipments lost by the National Guard of the State of Ohio during the recent floods in Ohio during March and April, 1913, $78,670.87.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. BRISTOW submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 183), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Senator JOSEPH L. BRISTOW be, and he hereby is, authorized to employ a stenographer at a salary of $1,200 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate for a period of 30 days from and including September 28, 1913.

EMPLOYERS' WELFARE WORK.

Mr. BURTON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 184), which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of House Document No. 1480, Sixty-second Congress, entitled "Employers' Welfare Work," for the use of the Senate document room.

MRS. FLORENCE E. QUIGLEY.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 185), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Mrs. Florence E. Quigley, widow of Thomas Quigley, deceased, late chief of police of the United States Capitol, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

WORLD PEACE.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of Senate Document 139, with some corrections.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator kindly advise us what the document is?

Mr. NORRIS. It is a sermon on world peace, delivered by Rev. T. M. C. Birmingham, of Beatrice, Nebr.

Mr. WALSH. It has already been printed?

Mr. NORRIS. It has already been printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands if there has been a report on what is known as the Hetch Hetchy bill.

Mr. MYERS. The bill has not yet been reported. I have it now on my desk, but I did not get it until after the order for reports of committees had been passed. I am expecting two other reports every second, and I have been waiting so that I might make all three at once; but inasmuch—

Mr. BORAH. The only reason why I made the inquiry is to know whether the Senator proposes to ask for its consideration to-day.

Mr. MYERS. I do not. I have not been requested to do that, and I do not intend to do so.

While I am on the floor I will ask leave, out of order, to submit the report. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 7207) granting to the city and county of San Francisco certain rights of way in, over, and through certain public lands, the Yosemite National Park, and Stanislaus National Forest and certain lands in the Yosemite National Park, the Stanislaus National Forest, and the public lands in the State of California, and for other purposes. (S. Rept. 113.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had, on September 17, 1913, approved and signed the following act:

S. 2711. An act to provide for the acquiring of station grounds by the Great Northern Railway Co. in the Colville Indian Reservation in the State of Washington.

POSTMASTER AT VALLEY CITY, N. DAK.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 182, submitted by Mr. McCUMBER on the 22d instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be directed to transmit to the Senate all papers, reports, and other information on file in his office relating to the removal of W. H. Pray as postmaster at Valley City, N. Dak.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let the resolution go over, Mr. President.

Mr. McCUMBER. The resolution has once gone over, and I presume I am, under the rules, entitled to have a hearing on it.

I will state to the Senator from Georgia that I asked at the last meeting of the Senate for a reconsideration of the vote by which several postmasters were confirmed. The request was unanimously granted, and I assume that the papers will be returned. In order that the Senate may act intelligently in one case which I desire to present, the Senate should have the papers that are now in the Post Office Department. I have no copies of them; hence it will be necessary to have them returned to the Senate in order that we may pass upon the question which I desire to present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it requires no resolution by the Senate to accomplish that result. The Post Office Department furnishes to the Post Office Committee, upon application, all papers of this kind, and we can obtain for the Senator such papers as he desires without any formal action by the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Georgia misunderstands the position of the matter. The subject is not now before the committee. The committee reported without having the papers in its possession. If the Senate will consent to have this matter, for which I have asked a reconsideration, go back to the committee, and then send for the papers, there will be no object in my asking for them through a resolution; but in order that the committee may properly ask for any papers, it must have the subject matter before it; and, I repeat, that at present the committee has not the subject matter before it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think the Senator from North Dakota is mistaken in the view he presents upon the subject. All he need do is to indicate to the chairman or any other member of the committee that he would be glad to have these papers brought back to the committee for investigation, and his request will be complied with. Even though the matter is before the Senate, not having been acted upon, the papers will be furnished the committee by the Post Office Department for the investigation of Senators. I can assure the Senator that, although the case is pending in the Senate, if he so desires, we will ask for the papers, if they are not now in the committee, for his inspection and for use on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. I believe the Senator from Georgia is a member of the committee?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well, Mr. President. I ask, then, that the resolution lie over, and I will ask the Senator from Georgia to get the papers before his committee. I will therefore necessarily ask that the case, which is on the calendar, shall go over until I receive the papers from the Post Office Department.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I request the Senator simply to give me a memorandum of the particular post office in which he is interested.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish it understood, if I do not press this resolution, that I shall desire the matter, which I would not attempt to delay in any manner, to go over until we receive the papers. I assume, of course, that that will be satisfactory.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have not charge of that particular nomination. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] have charge of those matters; I could not speak for their action as to delay; but I can speak for the committee, and I will say that we shall be glad to get any papers which the Senator desires for examination in connection with the matter. We constantly have such papers furnished to the committee, and so constantly do we have them furnished the committee that I was objecting to the resolution because it would simply formally commit the Senate to asking for something which we as a committee day after day ask for and always receive.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator that, if the matter had not passed out of the committee's hands, the proper method of securing the information would be through the committee. I insist, however, that the proper method, after the matter has been reported to the Senate, when the committee has not the papers and has not the subject matter under its jurisdiction, is to apply directly to the Postmaster General for the papers for the information of the Senate; but inasmuch as we are both seeking to obtain the same result, if the Senator from Georgia as a member of the committee desires to obtain the papers in the way he has indicated, I have not the slightest objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is barely possible, it has been suggested to me, that I am laboring under a misapprehension. Does the resolution submitted by the Senator from North Dakota apply to an appointment or to a removal?

Mr. McCUMBER. It applies to a removal, which is connected with the appointment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not sure that we are furnished papers connected with removals, though I know we are always furnished papers connected with appointments. I may be mistaken about that, and that is why, on the suggestion from another Senator, I rose to say that possibly I am in error. The only papers, I think, called for and always furnished have been papers connected with nominations.

Mr. McCUMBER. This nomination is so tied up with the removal that, I think, undoubtedly if the Senator from Georgia desires to obtain the papers in the way he has suggested they would be forthcoming.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to correct the statement made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] that I have those papers or have had anything to do with the matter other than presenting the papers to the Senate at the request of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

I will say, in answer to the suggestion made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], that I think it is not customary for the department to send papers which bear upon a removal to the committee upon the simple request of the committee, and I have my doubts about those papers being submitted to the committee without a resolution of the Senate, though I am not sure as to that.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. I know that I have obtained papers in that way from the department relating to the removal of postmasters on the request of the chairman of the committee. I do not know whether it is the usual practice, but I know that it never has been denied me when I have made such a request.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, it seems to me that it is decidedly preferable to first ascertain whether the papers can be obtained by the committee for the Senator from North Dakota. If that is done, the papers can then be returned to the department, as is usually the case. If, however, the papers are sent to the Senate, they will have to be copied, which takes a great deal of time. It is very difficult to get the original papers back from the Senate to the department. The record has been kept in all these cases for a great many years. I would suggest that the Senator from North Dakota address a letter to the chairman of the committee asking that these papers be sent, and I am satisfied they will be furnished as soon in that way as they would in the other. I repeat, however, that is decidedly preferable, because the papers will then be returned to the department when sent to the committee and not to the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thought that had already been practically consented to between us, and that the request was considered as having been made here. With that understanding, I had just as soon the resolution should go over until we can ascertain whether we may obtain the papers by the method suggested.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] will go over.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, a number of bills have been received from the House of Representatives, and no disposition has been made of them. I think there are one or two bills which ought to be referred at once.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Georgia will not insist on that. The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, is ready to make a request for unanimous consent for the consideration of one of those bills because we agreed yesterday to report out of the committee an identical bill, and we desire to get it up this morning.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will not insist upon a reference if the Senate is ready to act upon any of the bills. It was only to prevent delay that I desired the bills which the Senate could not now act upon referred to the appropriate committees.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 6635. An act to authorize the county of Hamilton, in the State of Tennessee, to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River at Chattanooga, in the State of Tennessee;

H. R. 7469. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Little River at or near Lepanta, Ark.;

H. R. 7470. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across Black River at or near the section line between sections 8 and 9, in township 20 north, range 5 east, being a short distance south and east of the town of Corning, Clay County, Ark.; and

H. R. 7472. An act authorizing Beaufort and St. Helena Townships, Beaufort County, S. C., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Beaufort River, in Beaufort County, S. C.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

H. R. 7596. An act to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Beloit, Kans.; and

H. R. 7875. An act to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Augusta, Ga.

H. J. Res. 125. Joint resolution authorizing the President to appoint delegates to attend the Seventh International Congress of the World's Purity Federation to be held in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota, November 7-12, 1913, was read twice by its title and, on motion of Mr. BACON, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

OPENING OF RESTORED LANDS.

H. R. 8364. An act to authorize the President to provide a method for opening lands restored from reservation or withdrawal, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, this is the bill to which I had reference. I believe the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] has not formally made a report on the Senate bill, but he has the report ready, and I will ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I understand the request to be for unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill which has just come over from the House?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. It has not been referred to any committee?

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that the Committee on Public Lands yesterday unanimously agreed to report an identical bill. There is no difference between the bill which has come over from the House and the bill which has been acted upon by the Committee on Public Lands. There is a particular reason, that I would be glad to explain, why this bill ought to be enacted at once, in order to give the Secretary of the Interior time to make necessary regulations and rules for the opening up of public lands that have been withdrawn from a forest reservation.

Mr. WALSH. Let me inquire of the Senator when the report from the Senate Committee on Public Lands was made?

Mr. NORRIS. On yesterday.

Mr. WALSH. There was no session of the Senate yesterday.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me a moment, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] asked when the report was made. The report was agreed to yesterday by the committee. If the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] will make the report on the bill at once, it will then bring the matter properly before the Senate, and the request for unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill can then be made.

Mr. BACON. Unless there is something of great urgency, like an invasion or something which could not be postponed for a day, I do not think the regular rules of the Senate ought to be departed from. There are numerous cases where good reasons can be given why it is unnecessary for a bill to be referred to a committee; but if the rule is varied from in one instance, we will have continually other instances presented in which equally good reasons can be given. If we wait until Monday, that will not be a long time for a matter of this kind, and I think the regular order ought to be observed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Georgia makes objection I should like to have him hear the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], who has the report on his desk ready to be made, and I should like to tell the Senator why it is very important that this bill should become a law at once.

Some time ago an order was made by President Taft restoring to the public domain certain public lands which theretofore had been in a forest reservation in the State of Nebraska. The order opening them to filing provides that they shall be opened on the 1st day of October. It was supposed, I think, that the Secretary of the Interior had authority under the law to make the necessary rules and regulations in such cases, so that there would not be an unnecessary rush of people to file on merely a few lands that are to be opened.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. NORRIS. I certainly will.

Mr. BACON. I understand all that, and I am perfectly willing that the bill shall be referred and reported back in 10 minutes. I do not object to that, but I do object, Mr. President, to the regular rules of the Senate being departed from.

Mr. NORRIS. I will ask the Senator from Montana if he will not make the report on the Senate bill, which is identical with the House bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BACON. I object, Mr. President; with the statement that I am perfectly willing to have the bill reported back as promptly as may be necessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that I have been trying for some time to make an explanation to the Senate, but this is the first opportunity I have had to do so.

A few days ago at the request of Assistant and Acting Secretary of the Interior Jones, Representative FERRIS, chairman of the Public Lands Committee in the other House, and I simultaneously introduced bills in the House and Senate, which were prepared in the Interior Department by Mr. Jones. He called Representative FERRIS and myself into his office. We went there and met jointly with him. He explained the situation to us, advised us of the urgent necessity of a bill of this character, and asked us to introduce the bill, respectively in the House and Senate. Believing it to be just and meritorious and needed, and a case of great emergency, we agreed to do so.

The bill was introduced in the House and Senate simultaneously; or, rather, it was introduced in the House a day or two before it was introduced in the Senate, because our meetings here, occurring only twice a week, do not permit the introduction of bills every day. It was introduced here in the Senate at the first opportunity. The Senate bill is No. 3121.

That bill in due course, or immediately, was referred to the Senate Committee on Public Lands. By the Senate Committee on Public Lands, as usual—although it was a mere matter of form in this case—it was referred to the Department of the Interior; and the Acting Secretary of the Interior immediately sent the bill back to the committee with a strong recommendation in its favor.

Yesterday at a meeting of the Public Lands Committee of the Senate the bill was considered in extenso, explained, debated, and talked over, and was unanimously ordered favorably reported by the committee. There was a quorum of the committee actually and corporeally present, representing both Republicans and Democrats, and they unanimously ordered the bill to be favorably reported. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] took quite an interest in it and explained the need of it in his State. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] was present, not as a member of the committee but merely as one interested in the bill, and spoke of the need of it in his State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair inquire whether the report is ready from the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. MYERS. It is. I have received it just this second.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair inquire whether the bill reported on by the committee is identical with the bill that has just come from the House?

Mr. MYERS. It is.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the Senator explain this bill?

Mr. MYERS. The nature of the bill is this: It appears that in cases where public lands have been withdrawn from entry and put into forest reserves or reclamation districts, or anything of that kind, or for any purpose have been withdrawn and then have been restored to public entry, there is no method of throwing them open to the public and letting them be entered except the old, ordinary, pell-mell scramble method of letting every man race onto the land and take a claim if he can get it. That often results in conflicts, in contests in the land office that drag their weary length along for years, in shotgun episodes, homicides, great confusion, and everything of that kind. Frequently considerable bodies of land are withdrawn and then restored to public entry.

The object of this bill is to provide, and it does provide, that the President of the United States may, in his discretion, promulgate rules and regulations suitable to the case for the method of throwing open to public settlement and making entry upon land that has been once withdrawn and then restored. In other words, he may make rules and regulations which prescribe the lottery method, the method of drawing a few days in advance, such as we have when we open Indian reservations in the Northwest. It is to put that power in the President, as I understand.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me ask the Senator whether the bill would give the President of the United States power to open any of these lands upon terms other than proprietorship? Would it give him the right to promulgate a rule that the lands should be leased?

Mr. MYERS. No; none whatever. It is merely for entering the land.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MYERS. I do.

Mr. JONES. As I understand, the bill says that the President may not only provide for disposing of these lands by a lottery system, but he may do this if he deems it advisable. For instance, if lands are eliminated from a forest reserve, if there is no provision made under which there is some delay in placing on these lands certain entries, they are subject to scrip entry; but this bill will give the President authority to say that for a period of, say, 30 or 60 days such lands shall be subject only to homestead entry by settlement, and that after the expiration of that time they shall be subject to the public land laws of the United States.

If the Senator will permit me further, I desire to say that I saw Assistant Secretary Jones this morning about another matter, and he called up this matter, and said that he hoped we would be able to pass this bill to-day, because of the circumstance mentioned by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]—that there was a reservation which under a previous order issued by President Taft would be opened on the 1st day of October, and that unless this bill should be passed enabling them to prescribe certain rules and regulations with reference to the entry of that land great confusion would result.

I hope that either the House bill will be reported from the Committee on Public Lands and taken up or some procedure of that kind will be adopted.

Mr. BACON. If I may be permitted to say so, my only objection has been to setting the precedent of passing a bill without its having been considered by a committee. Now, upon the statement made by the Senator from Montana that this identical measure has been considered by the committee and reported upon favorably, if I understand that correctly, I have no objection to its present consideration.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I will resume my statement. I am glad to have the Senator from Georgia, now, since he understands the matter, withdraw his objection. I will say, too, that Mr. Jones, the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, telephoned me this morning and expressed a very earnest desire that the bill, having passed the House, should pass the Senate to-day. I told him I would do what I could to get one or the other of the bills through. They are identical.

When the bill passed the House, it passed with an amendment which is agreeable to the Interior Department and has its approval. When the bill was considered in the Senate committee yesterday the same amendment was adopted. It was reported out with the House amendment incorporated in the bill. The committee recommends that it be amended as it passed the House.

I now ask leave to report the bill from the Senate committee with an amendment; and I ask that the report and the bill itself may be read in full for the information of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana reports from the Committee on Public Lands, with an amendment, a bill which will be read by the Secretary.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that the parliamentary method now is to withdraw the House bill from the Committee on Public Lands and, by unanimous consent, to put it on its passage before the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the bill now being reported is not the House bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not.

Mr. MYERS. I ask that the report and the bill as recommended for passage may be read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The bill (S. 3121) to authorize the President to provide a method for opening lands restored from reservation or withdrawal, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter when public lands are excluded from national forests or released from withdrawals the President may, whenever in his judgment it is proper or necessary, provide for the opening of the lands by settlement in advance of entry, by drawing, or by such other method as he may deem advisable in the interest of equal opportunity and good administration; and in doing so may provide that lands so opened shall be subject only to homestead entry, by actual settlers only, or to entry under the desert-land laws for a period not exceeding 90 days, the unentered lands to be thereafter subject to disposition under the public-land laws applicable thereto; and where any lands so restored are found by him to be susceptible of irrigation at a reasonable cost, he may fix and give public notice of farm units, which shall each represent the acreage which, in his opinion, is reasonably required for the support of a family upon the lands in question, and all homestead or desert-land entries thereafter made for lands so designated shall conform to the units so fixed and designated: Provided, however, That the President may, by general order to the Secretary of the Interior, provide for the modification or cancellation from time to time of units theretofore established.

SEC. 2. That where, under the law, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized or directed to make restoration of lands previously withdrawn, he may also restrict the restoration as prescribed in section 1 of this act.

[Senate Report No. 115, Sixty-third Congress, first session.]

OPENING OF LANDS RESTORED FROM RESERVATION OR WITHDRAWAL.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 3121:

The Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred S. 3121, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report it back to the Senate with the following recommendation:

"Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That hereafter when public lands are excluded from national forests or released from withdrawals the President may, whenever in his judgment it is proper or necessary, provide for the opening of the lands by settlement in advance of entry, by drawing, or by such other method as he may deem advisable in the interest of equal opportunity and good administration, and in doing so may provide that lands so opened shall be subject only to homestead entry by actual settlers only or to entry under the desert-land laws for a period not exceeding 90 days, the unentered lands to be thereafter subject to disposition under the public-land laws applicable thereto.

"SEC. 2. That where under the law the Secretary of the Interior is authorized or directed to make restoration of lands previously withdrawn he may also restrict the restoration as prescribed in section 1 of this act."

The purpose of this bill we find to be the same as that embodied in H. R. 8364, recently favorably reported to the House of Representatives by the Committee on Public Lands thereof. Said bill H. R. 8364 passed the House September 24, 1913, and reads the same as Senate bill 3121 as amended.

The committee appends hereto as a part of this report the letter of the Secretary of the Interior addressed to the committee in explanation of the views of the department with reference thereto.

As amended above the committee recommends that the bill do pass.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, September 23, 1913.

Hon. HENRY L. MYERS.

Chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate.

SIR: I am in receipt of your request for report on S. 3121, designed to authorize the President to provide methods for opening lands restored from reservation or withdrawal, and in reply have to advise you as follows:

From time to time this department, in the administration of existing public-land laws, is charged with the duty of restoring to disposition areas of public lands formerly included in national forests, of lands formerly withdrawn for the use of Indians, in withdrawals under the reclamation act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., 388), and of lands withdrawn under the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., 847). Some of these restorations involve comparatively large areas, while others are of small tracts. At the present time the department has before it the question of restoring to disposition in the immediate future a large and valuable tract of public land in Nebraska formerly included in the Nebraska national forest, a tract of about 100,000 acres formerly included in the Angeles national forest in California, and a third area of something more than 100,000 acres in Imperial Valley, Cal., withdrawn under the reclamation act. Portions of the latter tract are extremely valuable, being susceptible of irrigation and of producing citrus fruits, alfalfa, and other agricultural products.

Under existing laws lands restored by Executive action must be placed in statu quo subject to disposition to the first qualified applicant, according to their character and under the applicable land laws. This results many times in a rush to the lands themselves or to the local land office on the day of opening, the choice lands being thus acquired by the swiftest and strongest applicants, and many times resulting in confusion, contests, and long-drawn litigation between claimants for the same tracts. Since 1901 a radically different method has obtained with respect to the opening to disposition by acts of Congress of lands formerly embraced within Indian reservations. Various acts, such as those of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1093), March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1230), and May 30, 1908 (35 Stat., 558), have specifically authorized the President to open such lands to settlement and entry in such manner as he may deem advisable. Under this authority the lands have been opened by means of a drawing, under which all applicants to enter are registered. The cards or envelopes representing each of the applicants are placed in a common receptacle, shuffled, and drawn by a disinterested person, numbered in the order of drawing, Nos. 1, 2, 3, etc., and those whose numbers are first drawn are accorded the first right to select and enter a tract within the restored area. This method has proven more satisfactory than any other ever tried by the Land Department for restoring to disposition large tracts of public lands, and has largely eliminated the struggles and controversies incident to other methods of land opening.

At present no such authority exists in the Executive with respect to the class of restorations first hereinabove described, but S. 3121 will confer such authority. If enacted it will permit the President, in his discretion, to provide for the opening of such lands by settlement in advance of entry, by drawing or by such other method as he may deem best, taking into consideration the area, character, and condition of the land to be opened, as will secure equal opportunity to the public and avoid, so far as possible, conflicts and contests.

Congress has in the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, supra, and in other acts dealing with irrigable lands, recognized the fact that smaller areas than 320 or 160 acres of such lands are sufficient for the support of a family, and S. 3121, further recognizing this fact, gives the President authority to fix and give public notice of farm units of irrigable lands within restored areas, thereby permitting the distribution of such lands to a greater number of agricultural applicants than would otherwise be the case.

Section 2 of the bill gives the Secretary of the Interior similar authority in those instances where he is specifically authorized by law to make restorations. This at present applies particularly to restorations of lands withdrawn under the reclamation act but no longer needed for that purpose.

While the disposition of lands through registration and drawing has proven well adapted to the opening of large areas, there may be instances where small areas are to be restored or where the character or condition of the lands may render other methods more suitable. S. 3121 is so drawn as to vest discretion as to the form and manner of the openings in the Executive, so that he may in each instance apply what is, in his judgment, the best plan applicable to the lands involved, in the interest of equal opportunity to all settlers and claimants.

A similar measure (8081) was introduced in the House of Representatives, but upon consideration thereof the conclusion was reached by the Committee on the Public Lands that a shorter measure, omitting all that portion of section 1 which relates to the fixing of farm units, and omitting section 3, validating previous restorations, would be more likely to receive favorable action. H. R. 8364, designed to provide the desired authority, was thereupon introduced by Mr. FERRIS, and I have in report to the House Committee on the Public Lands (Sept. 22, 1913), recommended its enactment. I would, therefore, suggest that S. 3121 be modified to conform to the provisions of H. R. 8364, and in view of the present need of such authority in the Executive, recommend that S. 3121, so amended, be enacted. A copy of H. R. 8364 is herewith inclosed.

Respectfully,

A. A. JONES, Acting Secretary.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a question with relation to this bill. The limitation which is here imposed is:

And in doing so may provide that lands so opened shall be subject only to homestead entry, by actual settlers only, or to entry under the desert-land laws.

Would not that exclude the right to enter the lands under the stone act and the timber act, and would it not also exclude the right to locate a mine? There is lots of this land that is now withdrawn from public entry that consists of mineral land. If it is restored and opened for settlement, it seems to me it ought to be restored and opened for settlement under all the laws of the United States. I am afraid that limitation would be one which would not be to the interest of the development of the West. It specifically says that it shall be open only to actual settlers, or to homestead entry, or to entry under the desert-land laws.

If that is the case, I am very much opposed to the consideration of the bill. As to the lands withdrawn from public entry, which in my State consist of millions of acres of land above timber line, where most of our mines are located, if they can not be relocated except under the homestead laws or under the desert-land laws, I believe it will to a very large extent interfere with the development of our mines. For that reason I should like to have an explanation of the matter.

If that limitation exists—and it seems to me that it does exist—it ought to be so modified as to make these lands open to entry under the land laws of the United States, which would take in mineral entries and would take in the timber and stone acts and several others that are not included in the desert-land act and the homestead act.

We have in the State of Colorado certain lands that are subject to preemption entry. That was provided by treaty with the Indians. Even to-day, although the general law with regard to preemption has been repealed, yet notwithstanding every entry that is now made in the old Ute Indian Reservation is still made under the preemption law. That ought to exist still, and does exist to-day. But if you limit it by this bill simply to homestead and desert-land entries, it seems to me it will be clearly a limitation upon the power of a person to enter land under these acts.

Mr. JONES. Does not that limitation apply only for a certain period of time? If the Senator will read a little further I think he will find that is the case. That is my recollection.

Mr. SHAFROTH (reading)—

Shall be subject only to homestead entry by actual settlers only or to entry under the desert-land laws for a period not exceeding 90 days.

Mr. JONES. Yes; for a period not exceeding 90 days.

Mr. SHAFROTH (reading)—

The unentered lands to be thereafter subject to disposition under the public-land laws applicable thereto.

I do not know what those words would mean. It struck me as a limitation upon the right of the entryman, and I am opposed to it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will notice that it need not be even 90 days. It gives the discretion to the President, though, to limit it to homestead entry of actual settlers for a period not exceeding 90 days. I suppose we would not run any risk in permitting the local officers to fix that time if we put the limit of 90 days on it, because if it were a restoration of land not fit for homestead entry that limitation perhaps would not be put on; but if it is land that is fit for homestead entry and for farming purposes, it gives the President the right to say that for 90 days this land shall be subject to homestead entry only, or for 30 days, or for 10 days, and that after that time it shall be open for any kind of entry that can be made under the general land laws.

I wish to say to the Senator that the intention is simply to get some regulation to cover these cases that now are unregulated. If you restore to entry a portion of forest-reserve land, which is being done continually, and that land happens to be in a locality where it is valuable, there would be such a rush for filing on the land that we would have confusion, we would have injustice, we would have contests and litigation, and it is very unsatisfactory. This simply gives to the President the authority to make regulations and rules such as we always provide by law shall be made in case we are opening an Indian reservation, for instance.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the committee has thoroughly considered this bill and thinks the power of the President in relation to the matter would not extend beyond the 90 days and would not in any manner curtail the right of the entryman under the other land laws of the United States, I have no objection to it. I should like to hear the chairman of the committee in regard to it, however.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I will resume my statement. The bill is short. The language is plain and simple. It speaks for itself. I do not think there is any manner of doubt that the utmost limitation that the President could put on the measure is 90 days, and it need not be so much as that.

I shall undertake to engineer the conduct of the bill on the floor of the Senate. As to its wisdom, I will leave it to the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who are vitally and directly and immediately interested in it, to speak for the urgent necessity of passing the bill at this time.

The report of the Senate committee having been made, I was unable to learn in the confusion, and I will therefore ask, what has been done with the House bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The House bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MYERS. I endeavored very strenuously to get recognition immediately, in order to get the matter up. I understand the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] asked that it be referred to the committee.

Mr. BACON. Pardon me. In order that my intervention may not work an injury, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the reference to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MYERS. I move that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill, and ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration of the House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill S364.

Mr. MYERS. It is the same as the Senate bill.

Mr. LANE. Does the Senator wish to substitute it for this bill?

Mr. MYERS. I wish the House bill substituted for the Senate bill. They are identical.

Mr. BACON. I suggest to the Senator that the simple course is to take up the House bill and pass it, without making any substitution at all.

Mr. MYERS. Very well; I withdraw my request. I ask unanimous consent that the House bill be taken up for immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I understood the matter had been disposed of and that the bill had been referred to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has now been withdrawn from the committee by unanimous consent.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like an opportunity of getting a copy of the bill, to see what it is that we are considering.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Before consenting to present consideration I should like to learn what the emergency is. I did not hear the statement of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I stated to the Senator from Georgia when he first objected to the present consideration of the House bill that the real emergency is this: There is in Nebraska a forest reserve. President Taft some time last year issued an order restoring a portion of the lands embraced in that forest reserve to the public domain, and the order provides that this land so restored shall be subject to entry on the 1st day of October.

The reason why it is desirable to pass this bill now is to give to the proper officials in the Land Office an opportunity to prepare and the President to issue the necessary rules and regulations governing the opening of those lands for settlement. Unless we do pass the bill now it will be practically an impossibility for the officials to make the necessary rules and regulations, and the result will be great confusion and a great deal of dissatisfaction and perhaps a good many cases of contest and litigation.

The bill itself is general; it applies to all lands similarly situated. But that particular case is immediately in point, because only a few days will elapse before the land will be open to entry and there will be perhaps 50 applicants for parcels of land that are embraced in the land restored. In the first place, there is not any objection that I can see or that has been urged anywhere against the bill; and, in the next place, the urgency is very great, as I think the Senator from Washington must certainly see.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Is the bill now before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was just inquiring whether there is any objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. S364) to authorize the President to provide a method for opening lands restored from reservation or withdrawal, and for other purposes, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter when public lands are excluded from national forests or released from withdrawals the President may, whenever in his judgment it is proper or necessary, provide for the opening of the lands by settlement in advance of entry, by drawing, or by such other method as he may deem advisable in the interest of equal opportunity and good administration, and in doing so may provide that lands so opened shall be subject only to homestead entry by actual settlers only or to entry under the desert-land laws for a period not exceeding 90 days, the unentered lands to be thereafter subject to disposition under the public-land laws applicable thereto.

SEC. 2. That where under the law the Secretary of the Interior is authorized or directed to make restoration of lands previously withdrawn he may also restrict the restoration as prescribed in section 1 of this act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to say that upon a hasty reading of the bill I felt that perhaps there was good sound reason for the suggestion made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] to the effect that evidently the lands were excluded from appropriation under the mining laws; but that upon consideration is, as I think, no objection to the passage of the bill. It is true that the lands under the order may be excluded from mineral entry for a period of 90 days, but if in the meantime any mineral lands shall have been made the subject of entry, under either the homestead or the desert-land law, that entry as a matter of course would not preclude a mineral location within the bounds of the entry, and then the right of the agricultural claim or of the mineral claim would be determined in the ordinary method.

Now, let me add, the bill does, it is true, exclude timber and stone, and it likewise excludes all scrip entries of all character. That, I think, the Senator from Colorado, upon reflection, will approve most heartily. It occurs to me that he will join in the conviction that the first chance at these desirable lands should be given to the citizen who desires to make a home for himself and his family, and those who may chance subsequently to appropriate them under any scrip act should be postponed in their choice until the opportunity is given to subject the lands to homestead and desert-land entry.

Furthermore, Mr. President, the Senator will recall that lands which are valuable for homestead entry or for desert-land entry are by the terms of the law excluded from the operation of the timber and stone acts, because lands open to entry under them are only such as are chiefly valuable for stone or timber. But if it were otherwise, Mr. President, and the lands could be entered, I think the Senator will agree that it would be wise to postpone the appropriation of any of these lands under the provisions of the timber and stone acts or any related act until first an opportunity is given for homestead entry.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I do not think there is any just criticism to be made of the bill because it does postpone mineral entries for a period of 90 days, because the mineral entryman will be in no manner prejudiced by the prior entry under the provisions of any of the agricultural acts. In the second place, with respect to other character of entries, it would seem to me to be exceedingly wise that the right to enter those should be postponed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, of course my interrogation of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands arose from the fact that the bill was brought in here suddenly, and I could not tell its exact terms by a cursory reading. I would rather, now, that the bill should have permitted entry under all forms of location, but inasmuch as the Senator from Montana says it is not likely that mineral entries will be made where homestead entries are proper, I do not regard it as of very much importance. The limitation of 90 days, then, makes it such that I would dislike to stop the passage of the bill by an objection.

Yet I want to ask the Senator another question that arises in my mind in looking at the bill in the few minutes I have had to examine it. Does it place power in the President to delay the time when he will issue his proclamation for the entry or lottery or whatever system may be devised for the location of these lands? Does it give him discretionary power to keep that in abeyance for one, two, three, four, or five years, if he wants to do it? That is something which has occurred to my mind, and I will ask the Senator from Montana to look at the bill and see whether, in his judgment, that is proper.

Mr. WALSH. As the Senator has addressed his question to me, I will say that the power to restore now rests in the President. He may restore or not, as he sees fit. So the unlimited discretion is now reposed in him by the law. The bill simply provides that whenever he reaches the conclusion that land should be restored to the public domain, or, as in the case of lands included within irrigation projects, restored to general entry, he may then make this provision; so that it gives him no greater power to hold lands outside of the general public domain than he now has.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then I understand the Senator to construe the bill to be a limitation only as to the entries for mineral lands, or under the timber and stone acts or under any other of the public-land laws, for a period of 90 days. While I would rather have had the bill provide for entries of all the forms prescribed by law, I will not make any objection to it, inasmuch as the limitation of 90 days is there.

Mr. WALSH. I have an inquiry to make with respect to the bill. I find that the Senate bill introduced by my colleague [Mr. MYERS] contains a section not found in the House bill. It is section 3.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state for the benefit of the Senator from Montana that the Senate committee in its report recommended that that section be stricken out.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to inquire why section 3 was excised.

Mr. MYERS. I ask my colleague if he is speaking now about some portion of the Senate bill as originally introduced?

Mr. WALSH. I have before me a copy of Senate bill 3121, introduced September 18. It consists of three sections. Section 1 and section 2 appear to be in entire conformity with the bill which has come to us from the House, but the Senate bill contains section 3, as follows:

That any restoration heretofore made in a manner authorized by this act is hereby ratified and validated.

I desire to inquire why that is not found in the House bill and why it was excluded from the Senate bill when it was reported.

Mr. MYERS. The bills which were introduced in the House and Senate were identical. The bill introduced in the House first found its way to the Public Lands Committee of the House. There an amendment was recommended which eliminated that section, and in that shape it passed the House. The same amendment was recommended by the Senate Committee on Public Lands, making the Senate bill conform to the House bill as it was recommended by the House committee and passed by the House. The reason for that is set forth in the report of the House committee. The change in the House bill was approved by the Acting Secretary of the Interior in a letter to the Senate committee, in which he uses the following language:

A similar measure was introduced in the House of Representatives, but upon consideration thereof the conclusion was reached by the Committee on Public Lands that a shorter measure, omitting all that portion of section 1 which relates to the fixing of farm units and omitting section 3 validating previous restorations, would be more likely to receive favorable action. H. R. 8364, designed to provide the desired authority, was thereupon introduced by Mr. FERRIS, and I have, in report to the House Committee on Public Lands (Sept. 22, 1913) recommended its enactment. I would therefore suggest that S. 3121 be modified to conform to the provisions of H. R. 8364, and, in view of the present need of such authority in the Executive, recommend that S. 3121, so amended, be enacted.

The chief reason, I will say, for the action of the Senate committee was because it found no harm in doing so, there was no valid objection thereto, and the Senate committee felt under the present urgency of the situation that by making the Senate bill conform to the House bill it would more readily pass both branches and become a law.

I was under the impression that the House report made some allusion to the reason why this amendment was made, but the report is voluminous, and I do not readily find it. I will simply say that the Senate committee felt that it would be better to conform the Senate bill to the bill as amended by the House, that it would give it greater opportunity for speedy passage. They saw no objection to omitting the section that was omitted in the House and did not feel that that section was necessary to the principle involved in the bill and the principal object of the bill. For these reasons I have thought it better, as a matter of expediency, to make the bill conform to the measure passed by the House. It has received very careful attention.

That is all I care to say.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I can not refrain from expressing my regret that we are not furnished any further enlightenment in relation to the reason for the exclusion of this very important provision of the Senate bill. It is quite obvious that when the bill was drafted—and I understand the draft came from the Interior Department—it was deemed necessary to make provision for some cases in which the Land Department had followed this procedure without any apparent direct sanction of it in the law, and it was intended that the benefits accruing from this act should avail in those cases as well as in cases in the future.

Now, whether that was wise or unwise would, as a matter of course, depend upon the circumstances attending the occasion when that procedure had been adopted by the department in the past. The fact that the section has been excluded without any apparent reason for it at all naturally gives rise to a suspicion that there is some ulterior purpose in its exclusion.

In the same way, Mr. President, I likewise regret exceedingly that the apparent exigency of the case forbids us to take the time necessary to consider the advisability of incorporating in the House bill by amendment the provision which is found in the Senate bill in relation to fixing the size of units in cases of the restoration of lands capable of irrigation in the judgment of the President. He has now no such power, and you are confronted with this condition: Here is a tract of land included within a forest reserve; it is desirable that that should be restored to entry at once; it has no proper place in a forest reserve; but it is land which is capable of irrigation, which would be exceedingly valuable if it could be subjected to irrigation; it offers, we may say, a most inviting project for irrigation. Under the Senate bill, in the expectancy that it might be subjected to irrigation by some proper work, the President was to be given power to fix units of 40, 80, 120, or 160 acres, or such other unit as he might think advisable. Under the provisions of the House bill that power is denied him; the lands become subject to homestead entry; and every entryman has the right to go in there and take an entire 160 acres of land.

I see no good reason whatever for excluding that provision from the bill. I think it an exceedingly wise one. Let me show you how the thing operates. In our State an irrigation project was proposed and the lands were segregated for that purpose, but no units were fixed. Settlers went in and were permitted to make entry of 160 acres under the provisions of the homestead law. Then, after they had selected their 160 acres, had made entry, and had improved those lands to a certain extent, the department comes in and fixes units and establishes those units at 40 acres in some instances and 80 acres in other instances, and the entryman is forced to abandon half of the land that he took up. Not infrequently his improvements were upon one 80-acre tract and his plowing and cultivation upon another 80-acre tract, and he was obliged to forfeit either his buildings and other improvements of that character or he was obliged to surrender the land which he had improved by his own labor. Under the act as it now is all lands of that character within a forest reserve capable of irrigation are to be made subject to entry, under the homestead law 160 acres, or under the desert-land law to the extent of 320 acres, and no power is given to the President to fix units.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I sympathize with the ideas that the Senator has been expressing, but I want to call his attention to the fact—at least I think it is a fact—that the President would have authority under general law to withdraw lands subject to irrigation. Does the President not have that authority?

Mr. WALSH. Undoubtedly.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, then, if there were lands in a forest reserve that could be irrigated and the President wanted to restore them, as far as the forest-reserve land law is concerned he could withdraw them before they could be entered under the other laws pertaining to the Reclamation Service.

Mr. WALSH. Let me say to the Senator that the land spoken of as withdrawn for the purpose of being irrigated remains subject to homestead entry.

Mr. NORRIS. That may be.

Mr. WALSH. They remain subject to such entry. The President has no power to set aside a tract of land to be irrigated under the reclamation act and to deny any homesteader the right to go on that land if he wishes to do so.

Mr. NORRIS. Perhaps not in as broad terms as that, but if there were any reclamation projects the President would have the right—and it is always done when a reclamation project is started—to withdraw the land from entry under any law.

Now, I should like to call the Senator's attention to this fact: Suppose we do not pass this law and the land is restored from a forest reserve, the benefits that would come from the kind of a bill which the Senator would like to see enacted would not come because we have no such law. As I have said, I agree with the Senator to a great extent, but I have found on investigation that in the House Committee on Public Lands there was great objection to that part of the bill as it was originally introduced. They had further consultations then with the officials of the General Land Office and agreed upon the bill as they finally reported it. I think we could well take up and consider the question which the Senator has presented, and that was originally involved in the bill, but the pending bill does not exclude that. The pending bill does not go so far as the Senator would like to have it go. If I were drawing a bill, I should draw it differently from the pending bill; but if we enact the pending bill into law it simply improves what would otherwise be a very bad condition in a great many instances and does not in any way hinder future legislation that may be deemed necessary for reaching the question which the Senator is now arguing.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate fully what the Senator says. I desire simply to say, further, that the Senator from Nebraska has correctly stated the conditions. This would be better than no law at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. But what concerns me particularly is to find out why these two provisions, which, as it seems to me, make the bill a commendable one, should have been taken out in the other House. Of course, the very fact that they were so taken out excites my suspicion that there was some reason for it.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me further, I referred to one of the provisions only, and I have given the Senator all the information that I have on the subject; but I did not refer to his question regarding section 3. I think he made some reference to that. Section 3, as it was originally in the bill, provides:

That any restoration heretofore made in a manner authorized by this act is hereby ratified and validated.

Of course, the Senate committee was moved to a great extent with a view of meeting present exigencies, and wanted to conform to the House bill if they could, in order that this law might go into effect before the 1st of October; but I learned upon inquiry that that particular section was taken out by the House committee because there was very serious objection—a very great deal of objection, as I understood—on the ground that Members did not want to validate acts of the President or of the department about which they have no information. It is quite a far-reaching proposition to validate anything that has taken place in the past.

Mr. WALSH. Let me ask the Senator why should they not have that information? Why should not the Department of the Interior give to Congress the identical cases to which that applies?

Mr. NORRIS. It should; but I do not think that is involved in this proposition. I will say to the Senator that this section simply would validate, without specifying in particular, what no one knows the extent of. This was general in its terms, and it was thought that it was not advisable to go into the question that far; that, if they did go into it, it would necessarily consume a great deal of time, because it would necessitate the examination of everything that had occurred in all of the restorations that had taken place in the past, and that, perhaps, would bring up a very great debate as to whether they were right or wrong. Out of abundance of caution they decided that this section should go out of the bill. As I am informed—I was not present—practically unanimously the committee agreed, as I understand, to strike out the section. Later the department consented to it, thinking that they were perhaps asking too much to be considered when the time was necessarily short.

Mr. WALSH. Can the Senator give us any information at all as to the reasons that were urged for taking the other provision out?

Mr. NORRIS. Which other provision?

Mr. WALSH. The provision giving the President the power to fix units.

Mr. NORRIS. There were a great many members of the House committee who were opposed to giving him that authority. They thought the provision went entirely too far. As I have said to the Senator, I am in sympathy with that proposition, although I do not know but that it ought to be limited more than it was as originally provided in the bill. I think the argument presented by the Senator is, to a great extent at least, convincing, and I should like to see legislation enacted on that question. The committee thought, however, in addition to the fact that the provision was giving to the President too much power, that it would necessitate careful surveys of every tract of land that was to be restored; that it would be expensive; that it would take a great deal of time; and, then, the very fact that it was in the bill would lead to very great debate, and there would be no possibility of getting the bill through in time to meet the present conditions that are confronting us.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I regret that any suspicion should have arisen over anything connected with this bill. I wish frankly to say that the principle involved in the bill and the reasons presented for the passage of it very strongly commended themselves to the members of the Senate Committee on Public Lands, and they forcibly realized that in order to secure the passage of this bill at this time we would have to take the House bill or nothing; that if we began to differ with the House and to open up points of dispute the present chance of passing the bill would simply amount to nothing at all. As they believed in the principle of the bill and believed there was need for the main provisions of it, their idea was to conform, so far as appeared right, to the provisions of the House bill in order to secure the speedy passage of the legislation.

As to the amendments, while they were not particularly considered by the committee and are not now before the Senate on their merits, I think as to each amendment there is a good chance that it would give rise, in a discussion on its merits before either branch of Congress, to a wide divergence of opinion and to much contention and debate.

So far as I am personally concerned, I do not see any objection to the first elimination at the top of page 2 of the original bill in regard to irrigated lands and units. I take it that under that provision where a settler takes up land which he himself by his own labor may bring under irrigation the President would be given the power to say whether he should take 40, 80, or 160 acres. I believe under average conditions in the West to-day that if a man goes out and hunts up a quarter section of land which borders on a river or on a creek, and by his own labor and capital digs a ditch and puts water on that land in the ordinary case he is entitled to a quarter section of land. Practically all of the public lands in the Bitter Root Valley of Montana were settled under the homestead and Bitter Root preemption laws. Water was put on the land by the capital, the labor, and the efforts of the settlers themselves, and they all took 160 acres apiece. I do not believe that any of them got any too much for the purpose of making a home and providing themselves for the future.

As to the last amendment, omitting section 3, if that were being considered on its merits I would say that I do not much believe in the principle of retroactive laws and in putting blanket provisions of that kind in a bill to validate what may prove to be thousands of cases without regard to the particular facts in each case. As a general rule, I believe that a man who puts himself in a certain position toward the law should stand by under the law as it then existed and take what rights the law gave him, no more and no less, and not have to depend upon retroactive laws to do any validating for him.

If I had seen on principle and merit any urgent objection to making these two eliminations, I would have objected to making them, notwithstanding that it would have delayed and might have defeated the bill at this session of Congress; but not deeming them so vital as to take that view of them and to let them interfere with the good that was contained in the rest of the bill I and all the other members of the committee unanimously thought that it was best to accept the bill as it came from the House, and so we have presented the bill to the Senate as it came from the House.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee for some explanation in regard to this measure. Does it place in the hands of the President the power to do these things? The bill provides:

That hereafter when public lands are excluded from national forests or released from withdrawals the President may, whenever in his judgment it is proper or necessary, provide for the opening of the lands by settlement in advance of entry, by drawing, or by such other method as he may deem advisable in the interest of equal opportunity and good administration, etc.

The President can not certainly attend to all this business in person, and it necessarily, therefore, would be put into the hands of the Interior Department, would it not?

Mr. MYERS. It might. I suppose the Interior Department would have the first handling of it and act for the President in an advisory capacity.

Mr. LANE. The administration of the law would naturally devolve upon that department, would it not?

Mr. MYERS. I should judge so.

Mr. LANE. Then, if that is the case, I wish to say, from my somewhat limited experience, that I find about nine-tenths of my work is in connection with matters affecting the kind of rules in regard to the disposal of the public domain which the department has adopted or is going to adopt and which may be and are changed from time to time. We are getting day by day dozens of letters from settlers all over the country involving such considerations. You allow here a broad grant to an executive department to legislate as to the method in which they shall dispose of public land. This bill does that. It is open to that wide objection.

Mr. MYERS. I do not think the bill confers legislative authority at all; I think it is executive.

Mr. LANE. I consider that it does, and that it is vital and important. Such matters have taken up about two-thirds of my time, and I am getting a little tired of it. I think the legislative authority of this Government should remain where it legitimately was intended to belong in the first place. We should keep that power pretty well in hand and not allow these large grants of authority. We should not delegate the authority of Congress to somebody to make rules and then allow somebody else to change those rules, and so on ad infinitum, until no man—not even a Philadelphia lawyer—can figure them out, and the settler is left up in the air.

Senators who should be attending to more legitimate business are obliged to consume much time in connection with such matters, and unless it is specifically changed and regulated in some manner so that we will know just what we are doing, I am going to enter an objection to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. MYERS. The bill has passed that point, as I understand, and is before the Senate on its merits.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator from Oregon will yield to me a moment, I wish to say that the object, as I understand, of this bill and the object that will be attained by it is simply to give to the authorities—the President is designated in the bill, but, as the Senator says, it will be the Secretary of the Interior and the officials of that department—

Mr. LANE. Right there I wish to say, if the Senator will allow me, that that department has become top-heavy. It has had too much responsibility loaded upon it and it is reeling and staggering on its feet. Now, I would not add to its burdens. It is bad business management.

Mr. NORRIS. In the last several years every time we have opened up, for instance, an Indian reservation we have provided by law that the Secretary of the Interior shall have the power to provide a method by which the applications can be filed without every man rushing in there on the same day and a great many people applying for the same piece of land. We have done that so often that I think it has been supposed that the Secretary of the Interior had the right to make regulations where the President had restored some of the forest reservations to entry under the public-land laws; and I believe for a while it was considered that no legislation was necessary. But now we are confronted, let me say to the Senator, with this kind of a predicament: Here is a lot of land that has been withdrawn for forest reserves. The law gives the President the right to withdraw it. The law gives the President the right to restore it, or any part of it, to the public domain, and it will become subject to entry. Here is an instance where he has withdrawn land for a forest reserve, and several years afterwards, for reasons that he deems sufficient, he desires to restore it to entry. In the meantime the country has settled up, the land has become more valuable than the ordinary public land, and there will be a dozen men trying to get every quarter section of land.

This bill is to relieve that situation and nothing else. It does not do anything else. It will not have any other effect. We want to relieve the situation and give to somebody authority to make rules and regulations by which this confusion and injustice and litigation will be avoided.

It is a difficult thing. I have always found, like the Senator from Oregon, a great deal of complaint whenever these Indian reservations have been opened because of the regulations that have been made; but we have never put them in the shape of laws.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. JONES. Right on that point I wish to call attention to a situation that existed in my town about a year or two ago. There were a few tracts of land that were to be restored to entry, and I think for three months before those lands were opened there were men and women lined up at the land office, and they stayed there night and day, waiting to get a chance to enter those lands.

Mr. LANE. I would like to ask the Senator, if he will allow me, if the town advertised to the community at large, to the public of the United States, that that land was going to be subject to entry about that time, and got those people to come there?

Mr. JONES. Oh, no; they were people from the locality. They knew that those lands were going to be restored to entry. They were valuable lands just for the reason that the Senator from Nebraska said. The country had been settled up, and these lands were valuable, and there were only a certain number of tracts. If the department had the authority given by this bill, it could prescribe the very method by which these lands could be entered. Yet it did not, and they were subject to entry by the first comer at the land office. As I say, I think for three months men and women stayed there day and night and had their meals brought to them, and slept there at the land office, waiting to get a chance to enter that land.

Mr. LANE. That is the trouble with it; they change the rules. They make a rule and then they change it. I find that a good many complaints come in where these lands are contained in a forest reservation, the foresters themselves file upon them as homes for foresters, and a man who wishes to make a farm of the land is unable to secure possession of the tract of land. All of that is done upon a ruling made under a general grant from this body, which is guilty nearly every day of delegating its authority to some executive department or other of this Government until it has gotten into such a condition that this country is administered and its legislation is enacted, not by the body which is sent here with that power, but by the executive departments.

I object to it upon the broad principle, and I say, further than that, that this thing has got to stop. We have got to remain within the limits which properly belong to us in this respect. Here there is lodged free, wide-open authority to manage these affairs in any method which the gentleman of the Interior Department thinks fit and proper, and he can change his mind at any time he likes, and his successor can revise his action.

So it goes on down the line until my mail comes burdened day by day with a stack of letters, all upon these rulings, upon which, instead of consulting the law passed by Congress pertaining to the matter, I have to hunt up some department here, some third assistant or forty-eighth assistant secretary to somebody else, to find out what ruling he made and what ruling the man who preceded him three terms ago made in contradiction to it, until it has become a jungle and a maze of contradictory rules and of maladministration of public affairs.

If this is one of those bills, and it seems to be, which gives loose authority, delegating the authority of this body to some one else, I am opposed to it constitutionally and unalterably; and if an objection to it will stop it, I will make the objection right now, and will keep on doing so with all such bills.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator would remedy the situation, he would have to provide rules and regulations by law.

Mr. LANE. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. If it would not be necessary for us to provide many by law, it would not be necessary for many to be provided by the land department. The facts are that what would be a good rule, perhaps, in the opening of one section of land might not apply to another one. It would be difficult to draft a law to cover the matter. If the Senator insists that no rules and regulations shall be made for the opening of these public lands, but that the whole public shall be invited to rush pell-mell one over the other, it would mean that no man but the strong would be able to get any land, and that those who were weak—the women, for instance—would be practically excluded from making application.

If the Senator means to do that, then he ought to be here with a bill that would provide by law for the rules and regulations that would cover the situation.

Mr. LANE. I will answer that very promptly for the Senator. I do not wish to administer the law against the weak. I want all to have a fair chance. It is just that identical thing that I am talking for; but I would insist that if they made one rule they should stick to that rule, and not change it.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator as to that. I think that is true. I am not defending the rulings and regulations, many of which I think have been erroneous, perhaps.

Mr. LANE. That is what they are doing now. Here you are giving this man a power—

Mr. NORRIS. But what would the Senator do to relieve the situation of which the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] has spoken? I know of another such case, where men and women were sleeping in the street all night, waiting for the land office to open in the morning. If we do not pass some law like this, there will be instances where only the strong will be able to get any of the land, because the weak will be crowded out. They will camp in the street; they will sleep in the street.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LANE. Just a moment, and I will be through. I was just going to say that all the evils which you say may happen to persons who wish to acquire land you have provided for here so that they can legally happen.

Mr. NORRIS. I assume and go on the theory that the department will not provide any rule which will not give relief from what would happen if no rule were provided. If we do not pass some bill of this kind, only the man who is able to get up to the land office first will get the land, and those who are not able to endure the hardships and the trials and tribulations necessary to stand in line long enough will get nothing. It seems to me that the Senator, if he is objecting to this bill, at least for the present, is only injuring the people that I know in his heart he likes to help.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I sympathize most keenly with the strictures made by the Senator from Oregon in relation to vesting in the Secretary of the Interior the power to make rules and regulations effecting the disposition of the public lands. I know how much justice there is in the animadversions he makes upon the practice of establishing one rule one day and another rule another day. I sincerely sympathize with his disposition to curtail that power as much as possible, and to legislate as far as we can in relation to the disposition of public lands, leaving no more to the discretion of executive officers than the exigencies of the case reasonably require. But I believe if the Senator from Oregon will consider the circumstances which called forth this legislation he will not find it in his heart to urge any objection in the present instance.

I do not see how it would be possible for Congress to frame a law that would meet the case. We would not like to provide a general law that in every case in which land is restored to public entry it shall be opened to homestead entry by drawing, because usually when land is restored to public entry there is no such rush as is contemplated in this particular act. The ordinary operation of the law will meet all the requirements of the case. Heretofore the President has thrown open 100,000 acres of land within a forest reservation, and has said nothing further. The general land laws operate, and the land is opened to homestead entry, desert-land entry, timber and stone entry, and so forth. But the Senator will recognize that not infrequently land that is exceedingly valuable is restored to public entry.

I agree with my colleague, who says that under all ordinary circumstances a man ought to have 160 acres of land, whether it is capable of irrigation or not. But we are not considering the case of ordinary lands upon the ordinary public domain. We are considering the case of lands that are highly valuable, that have been kept from public entry until the surrounding land has all been taken up and developed and schools and churches and all the attendants of civilization are around in the immediate neighborhood. Those lands are then thrown open to public settlement, and they are so inviting because of their value that people come in crowds and storm the doors of the land office and sleep on the sidewalks over night in order to get an opportunity to enter those lands.

We can not make a general provision—at least, I can conceive of none that could be made—that would enable us to pick out the particular tracts thus restored to entry to which legislation of this kind ought to be made applicable. I know of no way to vest the power to say whether the circumstances require the operation of an act of this character or do not require the operation of it, except to repose it in the ordinary executive officers of the Government.

The Senator from Oregon will remember that in practically every case of the opening of an Indian reservation within the last 10 years this flocking of entrymen has been observed, and it became necessary to make special provision, in the opening of each one of these Indian reservations, for a drawing, or some similar provision, in order to meet the conditions that this bill is intended to cover. This is intended to serve the purpose of a general bill to meet all those conditions which have heretofore been met by special legislation, which we all desire to avoid as far as we can.

I believe that although the evil the Senator from Oregon has pointed out is inherent in this system, we can not very well get along without reposing such powers as these in the executive officers charged with the administration of the public lands.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I move that Senate bill 3121 be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

RIGHT OF WAY NEAR ENGLE, N. MEX.

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (S. 3112) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain right of way near Engle, N. Mex., and I submit a report (No. 114) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] to the bill.

Mr. CATRON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. I object to the present consideration of the bill. It is too serious a measure to pass without further consideration than can be given to it at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 7 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, September 29, 1913, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate September 25, 1913.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Byron R. Newton, of New York, to be Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in place of Sherman P. Allen, resigned.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

William H. L. Pepperell, of Kansas, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Kansas, in place of Fremont Leidy, superseded.

ASSISTANT APPRAISER OF MERCHANDISE.

Christopher C. Keenan, of New York, to be assistant appraiser of merchandise in the district of New York, to fill an existing vacancy.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Hooper Alexander, of Georgia, to be United States attorney, northern district of Georgia, vice Farish C. Tate, resigned.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Henry H. Wilson, of Pennsylvania, to be United States marshal for the western district of Pennsylvania, vice Enos Hadsell Porter, removed, effective October 1, 1913.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

GENERAL OFFICERS.

Col. Eli D. Hoyle, Second Field Artillery, to be brigadier general from September 24, 1913, vice Brig. Gen. Marion P. Maus, retired from active service August 20, 1913.

Col. Charles J. Bailey, Coast Artillery Corps, to be brigadier general from October 10, 1913, vice Brig. Gen. Ralph W. Hoyt, to be retired from active service October 9, 1913.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

Lieut. Col. John D. Barrette, Coast Artillery Corps, to be colonel from September 21, 1913, vice Col. Isaac N. Lewis, retired from active service September 20, 1913.

Maj. Thomas W. Winston, Coast Artillery Corps, to be lieutenant colonel from September 21, 1913, vice Lieut. Col. John D. Barrette, promoted.

MEDICAL CORPS.

First Lieut. Llewellyn P. Williamson, Medical Corps, to be captain with rank from September 22, 1913, after three years' service.

PROMOTIONS AND APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

Capt. Joseph Strauss to be Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance in the Department of the Navy with the rank of rear admiral for a period of four years from the 21st day of October, 1913, vice Rear Admiral Nathan C. Twining, resigned.

Lieut. Commander William P. Scott, an additional number in grade, to be a commander in the Navy from the 1st day of July, 1913.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy from the 6th day of June, 1913:

John W. Rankin,
Charles H. Davis, Jr.,
Albert M. Penn,
Martin J. Peterson, and
Thomas M. Tipton.

Midshipman Charles L. Foutz to be an ensign in the Navy, from the 7th day of June, 1913.

The following-named citizens to be assistant surgeons in the Medical Reserve Corps of the Navy from the 12th day of September, 1913:

James D. Bobbitt, a citizen of Indiana;
Ovid C. Foote, a citizen of North Carolina;
Howard Priest, a citizen of Pennsylvania;
Martin B. Hiden, a citizen of Virginia; and Arthur E. Beddoe, a citizen of Pennsylvania.

Carroll R. Baker, a citizen of Delaware, to be an assistant surgeon in the Medical Reserve Corps of the Navy from the 15th day of September, 1913.

Charles S. Stephenson, a citizen of Tennessee, to be an assistant surgeon in the Medical Reserve Corps of the Navy from the 17th day of September, 1913.

William S. Wentzel, a citizen of Pennsylvania, to be an assistant surgeon in the Medical Reserve Corps of the Navy from the 18th day of September, 1913.

Pharmacist Paul J. Waldner to be a chief pharmacist in the Navy from the 3d day of July, 1913.

John D. P. Hodapp, a citizen of Indiana, to be an assistant paymaster in the Navy from the 18th day of September, 1913.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Hilmar Schmidt, of Wausau, Wis., to be register of the land office at Wausau, Wis., vice John W. Miller, term expired.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

S. L. Dorroh to be postmaster at Reform, Ala. Office became presidential April 1, 1913.

W. T. Morris to be postmaster at Ragland, Ala. Office became presidential October 1, 1912.

D. F. Sugg to be postmaster at Ensley, Ala., in place of T. J. Kennamer, removed.

GEORGIA.

Annie P. Harper to be postmaster at Stillmore, Ga., in place of W. J. Evans, resigned.

P. D. Wootten to be postmaster at Abbeville, Ga., in place of Leon P. Wimberly, deceased.

ILLINOIS.

W. S. Cabeen to be postmaster at Keithsburg, Ill., in place of F. P. Burgett, resigned.

MINNESOTA.

Charles Spillane to be postmaster at Waseca, Minn., in place of Fred A. Swartwood, resigned.

OHIO.

Louis W. Dean to be postmaster at Rocky River, Ohio. Office became presidential July 1, 1913.

OREGON.

W. A. Delzell to be postmaster at Klamath Falls, Oreg., in place of C. K. Brandenburg, removed.

PENNSYLVANIA.

John A. Thornton to be postmaster at Philadelphia, Pa., in place of Thomas B. Smith, resigned.

TEXAS.

C. A. Howard to be postmaster at Bronson, Tex. Office became presidential July 1, 1913.

Mrs. Jesse O. Wheeler to be postmaster at Brownsville, Tex., in place of Robert B. Rentfro, resigned.

WASHINGTON.

R. B. Smith to be postmaster at Prescott, Wash. Office became presidential January 1, 1913.

WISCONSIN.

L. L. Henthorn to be postmaster at Viola, Wis., in place of Warren I. Griffin, resigned.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate September 25, 1913.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS.

J. Clifford Brown to be United States marshal, southern district of Florida.

James B. Perkins to be United States marshal, northern district of Florida.

SURVEYOR GENERAL OF WYOMING.

Charles L. Decker to be surveyor general of Wyoming.

POSTMASTERS.

ARKANSAS.

John L. McCain, Crossett.

GEORGIA.

Marion Lucas, Savannah.

ILLINOIS.

J. J. Baker, Mount Vernon.

PENNSYLVANIA.

John A. Thornton, Philadelphia.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Simms Powell, Parkersburg.

REJECTION.

Executive nomination rejected by the Senate September 25, 1913.

POSTMASTER.

Susano Ortiz to be postmaster at Las Vegas, N. Mex.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, September 25, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, on earth, and in the hearts of men, we thank Thee for the conscious realization of Thy perpetual presence and for the blessed assurance that nothing can separate us from Thy love.

"If I ascend up into heaven, Thou art there; if I make my bed in hell, behold Thou art there."

"For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Give to us, we beseech Thee, patience, gentleness, and humility, with courage, perseverance, and integrity, that whatsoever we do this day we may conscientiously ask Thy blessing upon. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COMPENSATION OF STAR-ROUTE AND SCREEN-WAGON CONTRACTORS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] is recognized.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I call up House resolution No. 229.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee calls up a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 229.

Resolved, That the Postmaster General is hereby directed to inform the House as to what steps have been taken toward the readjustment of the compensation of star-route and screen-wagon contractors on account of the establishment of the parcel post, as provided in the parcel-post law; the character of the action which has been taken, the extent to which a determination has been reached as to the amount of extra compensation to which such contractors are entitled, and what steps, if any, have been taken to provide for the payment of the sums adjudged to be due by reason of the readjustment.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

[House Report No. 87, Sixty-third Congress, first session.]

Mr. Moon, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, submitted the following report, to accompany House resolution 229:

The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was referred House resolution 229, submitted the same to the consideration of the Postmaster General. On September 13, 1913, he made the following reply:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., September 13, 1913.

Hon. JOHN A. MOON,

Chairman Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads,

House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of the 5th instant, with which you transmitted a copy of House resolution No. 229, directing me to inform the House as to what steps have been taken toward the readjustment of the compensation of star-route and screen-wagon contractors on account of the establishment of the parcel post, as provided in the parcel-post law; the character of the action which has been taken; the extent to which a determination has been reached as to the amount of extra compensation to which such contractors are entitled; and what steps, if any, have been taken to provide for the payment of the sums adjudged to be due by reason of the readjustment.

In reply I have the honor to inform you that, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved on August 24, 1912, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1913, instructions were issued to the postmasters at offices on star routes in Alaska and at offices having screen-wagon service, which resulted in the weight being taken of all mail and equipment transported over such routes during the months of October and November, 1912, and March and April, 1913, in order to determine whether the weight of the mails handled by the contractors had been materially increased by the adoption of the parcel-post system.

As it was impossible owing to the nature of the service performed on screen-wagon routes to weigh the parcel-post matter separately from the other classes of mail matter handled without great expense to the department and delay to the mails, the postmasters were required to keep a record of the aggregate weight of mails handled over the various routes during the periods mentioned without regard to the class thereof and to forward to the department, under proper certificate, a statement showing the aggregate weight of the mail and equipment carried during the months of October and November, the aggregate weight of the mail and equipment carried during the months of March and April, the increase in the weight of mail and equipment carried during March and April over that carried in October and November, and what per cent of such increased weight of mail and equipment was due to the adoption of the parcel-post system, as ascertained from personal observation and information on file and from reports made to the postmasters by their subordinate officers personally familiar with the conditions on the routes.

With a view to ascertaining whether as a result of the adoption of the parcel-post system the weight of mail and equipment handled on screen-wagon routes had been so increased as to involve the contractors in material additional expense in the performance of the service they were requested, under date of July 19, 1913, to prepare and forward to the department a statement showing the additional employees, horses, wagons, and other equipment necessary, the additional mileage traveled, and other expenses incurred in the performance of the service as a direct result of the adoption of the parcel-post system. The contractors were required to submit such statement under oath, accompanied by the certificate of the postmaster cognizant of the facts as to the correctness of the statement.

Upon the receipt in the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster General of the data referred to it is examined by a committee especially appointed for the purpose of reviewing it to determine whether as the result of the parcel-post system the weight of the mails handled by any particular contractor has been materially increased, and making appropriate recommendation to the Second Assistant Postmaster General with respect to the action that should be taken in connection with the readjustment of such contractor's pay. If the approval of the recommendation of the committee on any particular case involves a readjustment of the contractor's compensation, the necessary order will be issued authorizing such readjustment, when the additional amount allowed and due will be paid to the contractor.

The number of screen wagon routes in operation on the date of the adoption of the parcel-post system on which the contractors' compensation is subject to readjustment is 265. Of this number of routes there are 207 on which the required data have been received. Of the latter number the data on 40 routes have been examined by the committee and recommendation prepared for submission to the Second Assistant Postmaster General for approval, and it is expected that all of the cases will be disposed of at an early date.

As practically all of the star routes in Alaska are covered by contracts under which the contractors can not be required to carry an amount of mail exceeding a specified weight limit on each trip, and as the reports of the weight of mails carried on the routes on which the contracts are not on a weight-limit basis do not indicate any material increase owing to the adoption of the parcel-post system, no readjustment of the pay of the contractors on these routes appears to be necessary.

Respectfully,

A. S. BURLISON,
Postmaster General.

This letter of the Postmaster General gives all the information now obtainable on the subject of the resolution. The committee therefore recommends that the resolution do lie upon the table.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, the resolution itself was rather general in its requirement for information from the department on the subject of screen-wagon service and star routes. It is very clear from the reading of the reply of the Postmaster General that all possible information that can be obtained up to this time as to the additional cost of the screen-wagon and star-route service on account of the parcel post has been given in this letter. I think the minority of the committee have no objection to the report of the Postmaster General so far as the screen-wagon service is concerned. It is insisted by some of them, however, that the report is not sufficiently accurate and definite as to the star routes. Now, that is purely a matter of construction. The Postmaster General uses in connection with star routes and screen-wagon service the term "all contractors." The letter covers the contractors, in my opinion, of both classes, and he specifies the manner in which the adjustment of the pay is to be made.

However, in order to save any delay about this matter and that this resolution itself may be disposed of, the committee on its own initiative has sent, totally disconnected with this resolution, a request to the department asking for specific and definite information on the star-route subject, along the same line that was given on the screen-wagon service under this resolution. We deem it best to let this resolution come here and lie on the table, and when that other information comes in it will be available to the House.

Before making a motion to lay the resolution on the table the gentleman from Wyoming desires to be heard. I yield to him such time as he wants.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like about 20 minutes.

Mr. MOON. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the parcel-post law, in contemplation of the increased cost its adoption would entail on star-route contractors, contained a provision under which the Postmaster General was authorized to readjust the pay of the star-route contractors; also to readjust the pay of the screen-wagon contractors for increased weight carried and increased expense incurred by reason of the establishment of the parcel post.

In the western part of the country our postal system is still and will for many years continue to be largely a star-route system. We have vast areas where it is not practicable to establish rural free delivery, where, as a matter of fact, the modified and improved star-route service is more satisfactory than the rural free-delivery service under the conditions existing. The inauguration of the parcel-post policy has not only increased very largely the weight of mail carried by the star-route contractor, but it has at the same time very largely reduced his income, for the star-route contractors have heretofore made their bids in view of the fact that it is the common practice on such lines for the carrier to do errands for the people along their routes—carry small packages for them—and on many routes the compensation received for local express business, if we may so term it, constituted a considerable portion of the income of the star-route carrier.

Very soon after the establishment of the parcel post those of us who represent communities where there are a large number of star routes began to hear from our star-route contractors, complaining, first, of the decrease in their compensation heretofore received for carrying small packages, and, second, of the increased cost due to the increased weight of mail, requiring, in many instances, a change from a saddle to a wagon route, or from a two-wheeled cart to a two or four horse wagon, to carry the parcel-post mail. A number of contractors in my State have assured me that the cost of carrying their routes had nearly doubled since the establishment of the parcel post, while their income had been very considerably reduced by reason of the fact that packages for which they had heretofore been receiving pay from individuals are now carried by the parcel post, and therefore they have been seriously inconvenienced and put to a very large additional expense.

With a view to determining what action the department had taken in carrying out the provisions of the parcel-post law, to which I have referred, I introduce House resolution No. 229, calling on the Postmaster General to inform the House what steps had been taken toward the readjustment of the compensation of the star-route and screen-wagon contractors, the character of the action that had been taken, and the extent to which determination had been reached as to the amount of extra compensation to which the contractors were entitled; also what steps had been taken to determine the sums adjudged to be due by reason of the readjustments.

That resolution, which was privileged, was introduced on August 29, but as the Post Office Committee had not held any meetings at that time I have not called the resolution up, but waited until the committee has had an opportunity to act upon it. The committee now proposes, in view of the letter of the Postmaster General which has just been received, to lay the resolution on the table, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, has stated that the majority of the committee did this because the letter of the Postmaster General contained all the information which the department could give us on this subject at this time.

If gentlemen have listened to the reading of the letter from the Postmaster General, they will have discovered that the letter of the Postmaster General contains no direct reference whatever to the readjustment of the pay of star-route contractors. It does have reference in the first and in the last paragraph to the pay of carriers in Alaska. It refers in several paragraphs to screen-wagon contractors.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MOON. I think that a proper construction of that letter shows that where the writer uses the term "contractor" in discussing the two subjects he uses it to cover both the star-route and the screen-wagon service, because he follows it with a statement of the manner in which the adjustment is made. It may be a dubious construction, but I think that is correct.

Mr. MONDELL. It may be possible that the gentleman who wrote that letter had in his mind the readjustment of star-route contracts; but if he did, he did not convey to the committee any information upon the subject, unless that information may be hidden in the paragraph that refers to the screen-wagon contracts. The fact is that the department has taken action with regard to a large number of these contracts to which no reference has been made at all in this letter.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the gentleman again?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman's resolution is general in its terms. It does not ask for that specific information which the department has already given on the screen-wagon service, and which it might have given if it had deemed it proper on the other service, but omitted it. But I will state to the gentleman, as I remarked a while ago, that it seems that this information is all that is available in its present shape at this time. But the committee, for the purpose of obtaining any possible information that may have come since that letter was written, has on its own initiative asked for that detailed character of information with reference to star routes which the letter communicates in reference to the screen-wagon service.

Mr. MONDELL. I understood that the committee, on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] did take such action.

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. And I want to express my appreciation for that action on the part of the committee. But it does strike me as a little peculiar that the committee should refrain from reporting the resolution which calls for this information and at the same time should approve a motion which, in similar terms, asks for the information that the resolution asked for.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman allow me there?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MOON. That would seem inconsistent, but the majority of the committee thought that the letter was entirely explicit, and that it did respond fully and completely to the demands of the resolution. It was only a matter of courtesy to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], and not because we had any doubt about it, that we voted for a separate resolution of similar character in part.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] appreciates the courtesy, and I am sure the gentleman from Wyoming appreciates the courtesy, but I find it a little difficult to understand why the committee declined to report my resolution and immediately and forthwith called upon the Postmaster General for the information that my resolution sought to bring out.

Mr. MOON. I will explain that to the gentleman if he does not understand it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Right there, if the gentleman will permit, so as to have the record correct, I wish to say that the motion to call upon the Postmaster General for further information was not made upon my initiative, but upon the initiative of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BELL], who recognized that there was no information furnished by the Postmaster General in this letter touching the star-route question.

Mr. MOON. Well, it may be that the gentleman from Wisconsin is right that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BELL] made the motion instead of himself. The gentleman from Wisconsin, however, made a motion in the same line.

Mr. STAFFORD. My motion was to call on the Postmaster General for all information in his possession covering the question of the cost of parcel-post service, upon which he revised the rates recently and changed the rates and distances in the first two zones.

Mr. MOON. Conceding that the gentleman is exactly correct in both statements, still it is true that the majority of the committee were of the same opinion that I have expressed here, that this reply of the Postmaster General is entirely responsive to the resolution. He went further on the wagon-screen service than the resolution required him to go, by giving the actual number of contracts and amounts, and so on, which he need not have done, but he did it. Possibly he might have gone further on the other if he had seen proper to do so; but by the very terms of the resolution the word "contractors," applied generally to the whole resolution, means the star-route contractors not only in the United States but elsewhere—that is, in the District of Alaska—and it means screen-wagon service. I think the resolution is clear upon that point. A majority of the committee thought that the letter was purely and fully responsive to the resolution and reported it back to lie on the table simply because the information desired was obtained; and I do not think that the gentleman should now undertake to obtain any advantage in this discussion in order that two gentlemen on the committee might have more detailed information than the resolution really demanded, after the committee, out of courtesy to them, of its own initiative, requested a reply from the Postmaster General outside and inclusive of this resolution.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the gentleman does not misunderstand me. I appreciate the courtesy of the chairman of the committee. I appreciate his courtesy in giving me time, when he might have insisted on a vote; and I do not desire to criticize the committee at all. I did not introduce the resolution in a spirit of criticism of the department. As a matter of fact, the resolution was introduced with the idea that the department had taken steps toward the readjustment of these contracts, and that I could, by introducing a resolution, secure information that I could send out in response to the very many letters I am receiving, not only from my own State but from other States, asking what the department has done and what it proposes to do and along what line it is proceeding, with a view of determining what ought to be done. I had no idea that the committee would hesitate for a moment in reporting the resolution favorably; and had the committee done that, I think we would have received full and detailed information from the department. I think we would have had it at this time. I am not criticizing the department for what it has done or for what it has failed to do. I simply wanted to know how rapidly the department was moving in this matter and just what it had accomplished in order that I might inform these gentlemen who are writing me what the prospects are of their receiving increased pay for the increased burden placed upon them. I repeat that only by a rather strained interpretation or by implication can this letter be held to contain any reference whatever to the principal subject matter of my resolution. It refers to the screen-wagon service and it refers to the Alaskan service. The Alaskan service is all based on weight in any event, and I was in no wise interested in learning what the increased weights were in Alaska. I was interested, as many others are, particularly in the South and West, where there are many of these routes, to know what the department had done, what action it had taken, what progress it had made in investigating the conditions and in providing for increased compensation. It is a curious thing that the letter of the Postmaster General should be confined exclusively, so far as its language indicates in its reference to continental United States, to the screen-wagon service. The screen-wagon service is a very important part of the mail service, but the screen-wagon contractor carries his mail over paved and asphalted streets in large cities, and he is not laboring under the difficulties and the handicaps that the star-route carrier is laboring under. Therefore our sympathy does not go out to him in just the same degree that it does to the fellow who has to travel over mud roads, over the mountains, and over the prairies, and through the forests in all kinds of weather and amid all sorts of difficulties, delivering the mail to the people who live in isolated communities.

Mr. METZ. I will say to the gentleman that he does not have to go to the mud roads in the country in order to obtain a case which is entitled to consideration. The city of New York had a screen-wagon service in which I was particularly interested, because I was an indemnitor for the surety on the bond of the contractor. The contract expired on the 1st of July, but was extended until the 1st of September. The contract was for the ordinary service, but in the last months of his service, from January 1 to September 1, the contractor had the entire parcel-post service dumped upon him, and has had to carry it with his old equipment, and he has not received a dollar for that, and is not likely to receive any.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Tennessee kindly give me about 10 minutes more? My time has been taken up quite a little.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is so rarely heard that I will be very glad to yield him 10 minutes more.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's courtesy. I would not take up any more of the time of the House in regard to this matter if it were not for the fact that I fear that the Post Office Department does not fully realize the injustice that is being done the star-route carrier. So far as the thickly settled regions of the country are concerned, they have been covered very largely and very properly with rural free delivery routes; but in our western and mountain country there is a great deal of territory where it is impossible to establish the rural free delivery system, where there may be a considerable settlement—a comparatively dense settlement—up and down streams and valleys; but where there is no other settled valley or road in the vicinity over which a carrier could return, as is done in the case of the Rural Delivery Service carrier, where it is necessary, owing to the isolated character of these communities and settlements, to maintain post offices and to provide for the supply of those offices as well as serving the people en route, these star-route carriers are the poorest paid of all of our public servants. There is no one under the flag that performs as arduous service for as little pay as the star-route contractor, and the parcel post has caught him, as the darky attempted to do with the coon in his celebrated trap, a-coming and a-going. It has increased his weight of mail, without any increased compensation, and it has taken from him those sums which he has heretofore received for carrying parcels and doing errands for the people along his route.

The Post Office Department has readjusted some of these routes, and I regret to say that some of those readjustments are, in my opinion, speaking respectfully—because I think the Post Office officials are trying to do their duty—ridiculously inadequate for the increased service and for the loss of revenue. They say that they can not take into consideration the fact that when a man made a contract with the Government on these routes he understood that he would receive, if he was active, energetic, and obliging, a considerable income for carrying small parcels. They say they can not take that into consideration. I can not agree with the gentleman in that regard.

The authority vested in the Postmaster General by the parcel-post law is broad. It certainly authorizes him to take into consideration all of the changed conditions which these carriers are compelled to meet by reason of the establishment of the parcel post.

Speaking again of the screen-wagon service, I suggested a moment ago I did not have the same degree of sympathy for those gentlemen that I have for my star-route carriers, but I sympathize with them, nevertheless. The Government ought to be just with them, and my understanding is that the department has been almost as parsimonious in its increases for the screen-wagon service as it has for the star-route carriers. These gentlemen ought to be liberal. If the people are to be benefited by the parcel post, they ought not to be benefited at the expense of a few poor contractors. The Government is certainly able to pay for the increased cost of the parcel post. It is going to be, and it is already, a great benefit to the people, and I am sure there is no one within the sound of my voice, no one responsible for appropriations, who would not gladly appropriate every dollar necessary to meet the proper obligations of the Government in these matters. I regret that it seems to be necessary to constantly appeal to the House—not so much to the House, for I am appealing through the House to the Post Office Department—that the Post Office Department be fair with these people. They should recognize the fact that conditions have changed; that this law has reduced their income and increased their cost.

Mr. METZ. Mr. Speaker, to complete what I started to say when the time of the gentleman expired, the department, or the Second Assistant Postmaster General, told me that they had tabulated the excess weights with a view of arriving at some compromise in respect to conditions in New York; but the point is that, though equipped to handle the regular service, they were compelled to carry under their contract the extra parcel post, for which not a cent has been granted them; they did not receive any more than before they carried this extra matter, and it is not fair to figure the parcel-post expense without taking that into consideration.

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly not. The gentleman is entirely correct. The figures of the cost of the parcel post are not accurate if they do not include all increases of cost. They do not state the facts accurately unless they include the increased cost to those who are performing the service. Because these men are under contract to the Government, under contracts under which they receive very small pay, is no reason why the Government should try to drive a hard bargain with them.

I was down in a mountain pass leading into the Valley of Virginia, and chanced upon a star-route carrier down there. I encountered him in a mud road that was practically impassable. He complained in bitter terms of the increased cost to him and of the decrease in his compensation since the establishment of the parcel post. So this is not wholly a western question; it is a question that applies everywhere where the Government has a contract with a man for carrying mail over country roads on star routes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Is not there a surplus to the account of the parcel post at this time?

Mr. MONDELL. I thank the gentleman from North Dakota for his suggestion. There is, I understand, a surplus to the credit of the parcel post at this time, and it is not honorable to the Government that we should be creating a surplus at the expense of these illy-paid men traveling over country roads carrying Uncle Sam's mails under the law that we have provided. I realize that the committee probably felt it was doing the proper thing—that is, the majority of the committee—in tabling this resolution and then asking for the information itself. I can not agree with the committee that that is proper procedure. Why not have the House instead of the committee ask for the information? Of course, I am not asking for any post-office appointments at this time, as are gentlemen on the other side, but still I am asking favors—not favors but justice—of the Post Office Department. I have no reason to complain of the treatment my requests receive. I have no desire to criticize the department. There is no ground for criticism, in my opinion, except that they seem to have been carried away with the idea that it is the duty of the department and the officials at the head of the department to save the Government a few dollars by refusing to fully recognize the just claims of these contractors. I hope that that parsimonious view of the matter, that unjustifiable kind of economy, will be departed from in the future, and the star-route carrier will be justly and liberally treated.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, how much time has been used?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has used 7 minutes and the gentleman from Wyoming 30 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the chairman of the committee yield to me?

Mr. MOON. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin—all I can yield now.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the Members on the other side of the aisle are more deeply concerned with this question of the increase, and the just increase, of compensation to star-route carriers, screen-wagon carriers, railroad carriers, and all contractors engaged in carrying the mails, by reason of the establishment of the parcel post, than the gentlemen on this side of the aisle, and for the following reason: Most of you know—some Members may not who have just come into the House—that the country is divided into four territorial subdivisions to determine the weight of the mails carried and to ask for contracts for carrying the mails for the quadrennial period. Upon that weighing that is ascertained at this annual weighing, taken respectively once only every fourth year in these four geographical sections, is based the pay which is allowed to the railroads for the four ensuing years. Star-route and all screen-wagon contractors and all contractors with the Government for the carriage of the mail have the same four-year term as that applying to the railroad carriers, and no increase is allowed them for the increasing weight of mail that accrues after the contract is made. The weighing of the mails usually is taken in the spring of the year, except in one contract section, and that is the first contract section, which consists of the New England territory, where the weighing of the mails is taken in the fall of the year, running from September to late in November. In the rest of the first section, comprising New York, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and West Virginia, the weighing of the mails is taken in the spring of the year as in the other four contract sections. The last weighing of the mails took place in the first section—that is, last fall—in New England, and this spring in those four States of the first section that I have named. That is to say, only in those four States the weighing of the mails will be based upon the added tonnage occasioned by the establishment of the parcel post. Next spring the weighing of the mails will be taken in what is known as the fourth contract section, or all the far-western section; and in the spring two years hence the weighing of the mails will be taken in the third contract section, which comprises the Middle West, all that territory comprising the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, North Dakota, and South Dakota; and in three years from now the weighing of the mails will be taken in the southern section, in that territory south of us, extending to as far west as Texas. So these star-route carriers, railroad carriers, and other contractors for carriage of the mails in the South will not receive any compensation by reason of the increased weight of mails occasioned by the establishment of the parcel post until four years hence. So I say that you gentlemen on the other side who come from the Southern States are more concerned with this question as to a fair return and a just compensation to the star-route and screen-wagon carriers than even the gentleman from Wyoming, in whose district new contracts will be entered into, based upon the additional parcel-post service, beginning with July, 1914.

I have no star-route carriers in my district; I am not personally interested in this question, except from the viewpoint of fairness to this large army of contractors who have no special organization like the rural mail carriers. Twice in this House have we increased the pay of the rural mail carriers, predicated upon the expectation of the establishment of a parcel post. Once in 1911, effective July 1, 1911, and again a year ago we increased the pay, each time $100. But the star-route carriers, who are without any organization, who are giving the Government the very best service at the lowest price, based upon competitive contract, have had suddenly thrown upon them an added service for which they are receiving no compensation at all. I ask you gentlemen whether it is fair that this great Government should throw upon a special contractor added service, amounting to possibly hundreds of dollars, for which he is not receiving any compensation whatever.

Believing that this report from the department was but a partial report and failed to respond to the significance of the resolution which was drafted in the words of the Post Office appropriation act for 1913, passed August 24, 1912, the minority representatives present in the committee felt they could not consistently report that this resolution lie on the table when the department might have in its possession some information concerning the star-route service. Or, if the department did not have the information, it was the duty of Congress to prod the department to get busy and stimulate them to activity to repay these unorganized contractors their just dues by reason of this added burden that has been cast upon them. [Applause.] I take it that if any one of these contractors saw fit to throw up his contract, whether he be a railroad carrier, a screen-wagon carrier, or whether he be a star-route carrier, by reason of the added work that has been cast upon him because of the parcel post, he would be justified by the decision of the Supreme Court to withdraw from that contract by reason of the added burden thrown upon him that was not in the contemplation of the parties when the contract was entered into.

Now, here we have this letter. The gravamen of the chairman is that the letter is a full report. Let me call your attention in justification of the position of the minority to just what the department saw fit to respond to. It is the preamble, you might say, of this letter. I will only read this one paragraph to show you by proof positive that the writer of this letter—and I do not say that the writer of this letter was the Postmaster General, because we all know that the Postmaster General is too busy with the distribution of patronage and of parceling it out during this session of Congress to give his personal attention to this proposition, and therefore I hope that Congress will soon adjourn, so that the Postmaster General may be able to give some time to the more engrossing questions of this great postal service. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. If I can get further time, I will be glad to yield. But the gentleman from Tennessee says that he can give me no more time, so I must continue. Otherwise, I would be glad to yield. Here is the paragraph I refer to:

In reply I have the honor to inform you that, in accordance with the provisions of the last act of Congress, approved on August 24, 1912, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, instructions were issued to the postmasters at offices of star routes in Alaska and at offices having screen-wagon service—

There is nothing said there about star-route carriers over the rest of continental United States—which resulted in the weight being taken of all mail and equipment transported over such routes during the months of October and November, 1912, and March and April, 1913, in order to determine whether the weight of the mails handled by the contractors had been materially increased by the adoption of the parcel-post system.

And then the letter, as you have heard, goes on to say that they had the weighing of the mails on the star routes of Alaska—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

THE TARIFF.

The SPEAKER. A great many Members have inquired of the Speaker about the prospects of the conference report on the tariff bill. For their benefit I sent over to the conferees to find out, and the answer is that there is no prospect of a conference report on the tariff bill coming in before Saturday. I thought the Members would be interested to know the situation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on paragraph 254½ of the bill H. R. 3321.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to inquire of the gentleman upon what subject? What is that about?

Mr. RAKER. It is on paragraph 254½.

Mr. WILLIS. On what subject?

Mr. RAKER. On the subject of vine culture, pure food, and sweet wines.

Mr. WILLIS. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a subject of great importance, and I think it ought to be discussed openly in the House, although I do not want to be discourteous to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. It is a matter pending before the Senate and one of the vital matters to be discussed, and it seems as though a Member ought to have a right to be heard on it at this time.

Mr. WILLIS. I think it ought to be discussed, and ought not to be inserted in the RECORD without its being heard. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] objects.

Mr. RAKER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill H. R. 8364, which passed the House yesterday, in regard to the disposal of lands after their withdrawal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the bill named. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman propose to extend his remarks on the subject matter of that bill or of another?

Mr. RAKER. No, sir. When I say I will extend my remarks on a certain bill, I shall extend my remarks on that bill alone and nothing else.

Mr. WILLIS. That is satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

COMPENSATION OF STAR-ROUTE AND SCREEN-WAGON CONTRACTORS.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, there is a question pending before the Congress, not connected with this bill, but of the utmost importance to every Member of this House and to the country.

The proposed tariff bill leaves the rate on sugar until March 1 next unchanged. Then until May 1, 1916, it reduces the tariff 25 per cent.

There is no language in the bill now pending which declares that from March 1, 1914, until May 1, 1916, Cuban sugars shall come into the United States at 20 per cent less than the general 25 per cent reduction made on sugar from all countries in the pending bill.

There is, therefore, nothing in the pending bill which gives a preferential to Cuban sugars. If there is to be a preferential for Cuban sugars after March 1, we must find it in the treaty with Cuba and the act of Congress approving that treaty.

The treaty and the act of Congress provide in Article II that—

During the term of the convention all merchandise from Cuba shall come into the United States with a reduction of 20 per cent of the rates of duty thereon as provided by the tariff act of the United States approved July 24, 1897, or as may be provided by any tariff law of the United States subsequently enacted.

It will be observed that this article of the treaty gives all Cuban products a preferential of 20 per cent below existing or future tariff taxes fixed by the United States.

This provision would take care of the subject if there was nothing else in the treaty; but further on in the treaty tobacco is exempted from this provision, and with reference to sugar it is declared that—

While this convention is in force no sugar imported from the Republic of Cuba, and if the product of the soil and industry of the Republic of Cuba, shall be admitted into the United States at a reduction of duty greater than 20 per cent of the rates of duty thereon as provided by the tariff act of the United States approved July 24, 1897.

Thus it will be seen that this paragraph in the treaty expressly declares that the 20 per cent reduction given to sugar shall not go lower than 20 per cent below the tariff schedule of 1897.

The pending bill makes no provision for a 20 per cent preferential for Cuban sugar below our general 25 per cent reduction on sugar, and the treaty and act of 1903 expressly declares that sugar shall not have, coming from Cuba, a reduction of greater than 20 per cent from the act of 1897.

Construing, therefore, the two together, as we have the bill, while we reduce sugar generally 25 per cent, we are only reducing Cuban sugar 5 per cent below the rate under which it now comes in under existing law between March 1, 1914, and May 1, 1916, when sugar goes on the free list.

Now, I know that this is not what the House meant to do, and I know that it is not what the Senate meant to do. I am making this statement after careful examination of the legal questions involved, together with an equally careful examination of the treaty and of the act of Congress of 1903, and after careful consideration of both of them in connection with the Underwood bill, in the earnest hope that the conferees may correct this mistake.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, this is indeed a very simple proposition before the House. Here is a resolution in general terms asking for information from the Postmaster General as to star routes and screen-wagon service.

By order of the committee that resolution was forwarded to the Postmaster General. He made a reply. The committee considered that reply strictly responsive to the resolution. Therefore, having obtained the information that was wanted, it was deemed best to report the resolution back to the House with the information, accompanied by a motion that it do lie upon the table.

The objections of my friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], I regret to say, seem to me to be captious and whimsical. There certainly could be no reason on the part of the Postmaster General for not giving full information in reference to this matter. In his reply he starts out by saying:

The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of the 5th instant, with which you transmitted a copy of House resolution No. 229, directing me to inform the House as to what steps have been taken toward the readjustment of the compensation of star-route and screen-wagon contractors on account of the establishment of the parcel post—

And so forth.

Taking this as the context of the letter, how can these gentlemen say that the letter has no application to anything except screen-wagon service? It is plain. It is a matter of ordinary common-sense construction of the English language. What follows in reference to the action of the contractors must have its application to the original proposition of the screen-wagon contractors and the star-route contractors; and, in order to make the matter more clear, you will find that the Postmaster General has directed, as stated in his letter, a general weighing of all mails over all routes, screen-wagon and star-route service, upon which to make this basis of settlement between the parties under the act referred to; and, again, it is so very clear that I do not see how any man in the world could see it any other way when he speaks of the general basis upon which the settlement is made:

Upon the receipt in the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster General of the data referred to, it is examined by a committee especially appointed for the purpose of reviewing it to determine whether as the result of the parcel-post system the weight of the mails handled by any particular contractor has been materially increased—

What data? The star-route data, the screen-wagon data—that which he was requested to report upon. To continue:

and making appropriate recommendations to the Second Assistant Postmaster General with respect to the action that should be taken in connection with the readjustment of such contractor's pay. If the approval of the recommendation of the committee on any particular case involves a readjustment of the contractor's compensation, the necessary order will be issued authorizing such readjustment when the additional amount allowed and due will be paid to the contractor.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. When the gentleman had the floor before, did I understand him to say that the committee proposes after this is laid on the table to ask the Postmaster General for further information upon the subject?

Mr. MOON. No; the gentleman does not quite understand me. There were two or three gentlemen on the committee who thought that this was not sufficiently definite. The chairman responded, and the committee agreed with him, that the Postmaster General had really gone beyond the terms of the resolution in giving the detailed information on screen-wagon service, but that he had not given that particular information as to star routes. He had, however, given all the information demanded by the resolution, and he could not give the detailed information, owing to the vast number of star routes, the matter not having yet been fully adjusted, only two months being covered. The committee thought it was entirely responsive to the resolution, but inasmuch as some gentlemen on the committee desired to have additional information in reference to the star routes similar to that which had been given with respect to the screen-wagon service, although the resolution did not demand it, the committee, out of deference to the views of those gentlemen and not in view of this resolution, did make a request as coming from the committee, and not the House, for some private information to the committee from the Postmaster General upon the subject, not due to the fact, in any way, that we did not regard the reply of the Postmaster General as entirely responsive to the resolution. The fact is, he had gone a little further on one branch than was necessary.

Mr. PAYNE. I desire to ask the gentleman what objection there would be to having the committee report such resolution to the House and letting the House make the inquiry of the Postmaster General. There is no implied censure of the Postmaster General in a resolution of inquiry. In some way or other there seems to have grown up here during this session the idea that if the House makes an inquiry of a department there is an implied censure. There is no implied censure upon the department.

Mr. MOON. There is no implied censure on the department.

Mr. PAYNE. The inquiry is made on the theory that the reply will exonerate the department.

Mr. MOON. The majority of the committee—and all the committee except two—were of the opinion that the Postmaster General had fully complied with the request. Having done that, it was unnecessary to pass the resolution.

Mr. PAYNE. Still the committee concedes that there is something further to do in order to get the further information; and my suggestion is—

Mr. MOON. The gentleman is mistaken. The committee have no such idea. The gentleman will find that the proposition of Messrs. BELL and STAFFORD does not come directly under this resolution. It is true that it calls for information that would, perhaps, extend this information; but we considered that the reply of the department was ample and sufficient for the general terms of the resolution and responsive in every sense of the word. Now, when that information comes back to the committee, if the House desires, of course it can get it.

Mr. PAYNE. I agree with the other statement, that there ought to be some further inquiry suggested by the spirit of this resolution.

Mr. MOON. No; the truth is, I am sorry to say, that my friend, the gentleman from Wyoming, although we were particularly courteous and kind in asking for some further information not called for specifically in his resolution, thought it was necessary to take advantage of it on the floor of this House as apparently, but not really, inconsistent with the report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution do lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the resolution lie on the table.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. MONDELL) there were—ayes 91, noes 51.

Accordingly the resolution was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL SATURDAY.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next.

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, I should like to know from my colleague why he does not ask that we adjourn until Monday, and not come back here Saturday.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Speaker made the announcement that the conferees on the tariff bill expected to be able to report on Saturday.

Mr. PAYNE. I did not so understand.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. And then it will have to be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next?

There was no objection.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees.

The Committee on Education was called.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Education I desire to call up Senate joint resolution 5, and request that it be read.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. On the call of committees, is it the rule that they be called from the head of the list?

The SPEAKER. No; the rule is to begin where the call left off yesterday. This resolution is on the Union Calendar and can not be called up until after the expiration of 60 minutes, or when the call of committees is finished. Then the Chair will recognize the gentleman to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

SIXTH NATIONAL CORN EXPOSITION, DALLAS, TEX.

The Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions was called.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions to call up House concurrent resolution 17. I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read the title of House concurrent resolution 17, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make an exhibit at the Sixth National Corn Exposition, to be held at Dallas, Tex., during the month of February, 1914.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the resolution is not properly on this calendar. It necessarily involves an expense to the Government, and therefore it should be on the Union Calendar instead of the House Calendar.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Clerk to read the report of the committee, in which there are amendments provided that relieve the Government of any expense in connection with this exhibit.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution and the report.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 17.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized to make such exhibit as may be convenient and practicable at the Sixth National Corn Exposition, to be held at Dallas, Tex., during the month of February, 1914.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, to whom was referred House concurrent resolution No. 17, having carefully considered the same, unanimously report the said resolution favorably, with amendment, and recommend that it do pass:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized to make such exhibit as may be convenient and practicable at the Sixth National Corn Exposition, to be held in Dallas, Tex., during the month of February, 1914."

At the end of line 6, after the word "fourteen," insert the following: "SEC. 2. That the said exhibit shall be of such nature as the Secretary of Agriculture deems appropriate: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall make such arrangements with the proper officers of the said exposition that the Department of Agriculture shall be at no expense for transportation of said exhibit to and from the exposition: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall also make such arrangements with the proper authorities of said exposition that there shall be no expense to the department for any breakage or damage that may occur to the exhibit, nor for the living expenses of such appointees as he may see fit to send to said exposition to demonstrate the exhibit sent."

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, Mr. Speaker, on the point of order I respectfully contend that whatever the amendment might be that might lift the resolution out of the rule of the House that makes it a charge upon the Treasury, the Speaker in considering whether it should be on the House or Union Calendar must take the resolution as it is before the House. We do not know whether the amendment reported by the committee will be adopted or not. The Chair can only consider whether it is properly on the House Calendar by considering the phraseology as it exists, and it being patently a charge upon the Treasury, I respectfully contend that it should be on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Now, the Chair will ask the gentleman a question. Is not the amendment as offered by the committee as much a part of this resolution we are going to consider as the original text?

Mr. STAFFORD. According to the original resolution before the House there is no amendment reported; there is no amendment on the face of the resolution. We do not know whether the committee will offer the amendment. It may be presumed it will be offered, but suppose the House votes down the amendment? It is then a charge upon the Treasury, and because it involves a charge upon the Treasury which they seek to lift you can not consider whether it will be lifted or not.

The SPEAKER. You can not tell whether the resolution will pass or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Further on that point. If this resolution does not involve a charge upon the Treasury, then it is not a proper resolution to consider in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; but if it is, when this resolution is presented for consideration the Chair must necessarily forthwith refer it to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, because it involves a charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, if the Speaker's suggestion is correct, that the amendment reported by the committee is a part of the resolution, there is no bill or resolution that could come before the House involving a direct appropriation but what could be taken out of the rule if it simply provided that nothing therein contained should be a charge upon the Treasury of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is not that the truth? If they put that proviso in the bill, is not that as much a part of the bill as any other part?

Mr. PAYNE. But it is not in the resolution. The resolution that the House is to consider is a resolution introduced, and in the report an amendment is offered by the committee. The House is to consider whether this resolution shall be finally amended so there shall be no charge on the Treasury of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Of course, the House has to decide whether it will pass the resolution at all.

Mr. PAYNE. Why, my colleague from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] might as well come in here with a general appropriation bill, and at the end of it report a committee amendment that there should be no charge on the Treasury, and because of that contend that it should not be considered in the Whole House on the state of the Union. It destroys the rule.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the rule is well established that it must clearly appear upon the face of the bill or resolution that a charge upon the Treasury is involved. There are numerous decisions that where the expenditure is a mere matter of speculation it is not sufficient to require consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I might call the attention of the Chair to one very remarkable case which will not escape his memory. When the so-called Vreeland-Aldrich bill, the present emergency currency act, came back from the Senate it had a provision for the printing of certain emergency notes. A point of order was made at that time that the printing of those notes would necessarily involve some cost or expense to the Government. Mr. Speaker Cannon held that that was a matter of argument; that it did not appear on the face of the bill that it would do so.

There is another reason, however, Mr. Speaker, why this point of order does not lie against this resolution. This is a concurrent resolution. A concurrent resolution, following the practices of the House, is used merely to express the opinion of the Congress. It is not a legislative resolution. It is not such a resolution as would be sent to the President for his approval; and it can not in any way in its present form involve any expense to the Government or any charge upon the Treasury. I believe that if the Chair will examine the precedents in Volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents, they will sustain these contentions.

Mr. PAYNE. I can admire the acuteness of my colleague's mind in the idea that this resolution as it originally reads simply presents a matter of argument as to whether there should be any charge on the Treasury or not and as to whether those employees were to go there without any expense on the Government. As a matter of argument it is as plain as the nose on my colleague's face.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is no more a matter of argument than it was a matter of argument that to print certain bank notes would require expenditure of money. It seemed very clear that a provision requiring certain notes to be printed necessarily would involve a charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. PAYNE. It authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to make this exhibit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Speaker Cannon held otherwise, and upon an appeal taken from his decision the gentleman from New York moved to lay the appeal on the table. And the majority on that side laid the appeal on the table under the lead of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. MONDELL rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, while it is true that there is an amendment pending which provides that there shall not be any expenditures for certain purposes, that amendment, if adopted, would not prohibit expenditures for other purposes. As a matter of fact, the resolution can not be carried out, even if the amendment be adopted, without expenditure. There must necessarily be some expenditure connected with an exhibit of the sort contemplated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is just simply entering into a speculation as to what might happen.

Mr. MONDELL. I think not, Mr. Speaker. I think the resolution shows on its face that some expenditure will be necessary. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, to the consideration of the matter, and I would not raise the question myself, but it having been raised, of course it is important it shall be correctly decided, which I am sure the Speaker will do. But the resolution on its face clearly indicates that there must be an expenditure. It would be impossible for the Secretary to make any sort of an exhibit without paying, at least, the salary of the men who had charge of it, and while they had charge of the exhibit they would not be performing their ordinary duties, so there would be an additional charge upon the Treasury. The amendment simply provides that there shall not be any expenditure for certain purposes, but there must be expenditures for other purposes, even though the amendment be adopted.

The SPEAKER. This point of order of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] involves two or three different parliamentary propositions at one time. In the first place, this resolution on the face of it does not provide for any outlay of money from the Public Treasury. Of course, you can speculate, just as the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] was speculating. That was exactly what he was doing.

Mr. MONDELL. May I ask the Speaker just one question for illustration?

The SPEAKER. Yes; certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. Suppose it was a resolution authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to erect a public building?

The SPEAKER. That would be such a clear proposition that it would not admit of argument.

Mr. MONDELL. It would be an expenditure of money.

The SPEAKER. That involves the expenditure of money. The Chair will not bother the gentleman to argue the other side of it.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to help the Speaker out by giving an illustration.

The SPEAKER. All right.

Mr. AUSTIN. Two years ago at the Knoxville Exposition we had an exhibit from the Agricultural Department which did not cost the Government anything, because we paid all the expenses of it, and the same thing can be done in this case.

The SPEAKER. Whether this resolution on the face of it means that there shall be an appropriation is purely a matter of speculation; that is, the resolution itself. The Secretary of Agriculture, if he wanted to do so, if this resolution were passed without any amendment, might very readily say to the people down at Dallas that if they wanted a Government exhibit at that corn show they should bear the expenses themselves, whatever they are. He could do that of his own motion. But this amendment clearly relieves the resolution, even if there were any doubt about the resolution itself. It has been held, and the authorities are abundant, that in considering whether a bill or resolution shall go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the House takes into consideration the amendments that are pending. In one case the Speaker decided the other way, and the House overruled the decision and said, in determining whether a bill or resolution goes to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the House takes into consideration the committee amendments pending. So the Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. There are abundant precedents for the ruling, but there is no use to quote them. The Chair would decide that way even if there were no precedents.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment to the enacting clause.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read the committee amendment, as follows:

At the end of line 6, after the word "fourteen," insert the following: "Sec. 2. That the said exhibit shall be of such nature as the Secretary of Agriculture deems appropriate: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall make such arrangements with the proper officers of the said exposition that the Department of Agriculture shall be at no expense for transportation of said exhibit to and from the exposition: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall also make such arrangements with the proper authorities of said exposition that there shall be no expense to the department for any breakage or damage that may occur to the exhibit, nor for the living expenses of such appointees as he may see fit to send to said exposition to demonstrate the exhibit sent."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "the Senate concurring" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and the Senate of the United States of America in Congress assembled."

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out in the heading the word "concurrent" and insert the word "joint."

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I accept the amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I want to make one or two observations on the subject of the bill before the amendment is voted on. My remarks can come in here as well as anywhere else.

The House was informed by my colleague [Mr. FITZGERALD] awhile ago that this resolution would not involve the Government in any expense, because it is a concurrent instead of a joint resolution. Then, having got the resolution before the House, he moves to strike out "concurrent" and make it "joint."

Now, the committee and the House, in order to make it sure that there shall be no charge on the Treasury involved in this resolution, and that the language shall not imply it or clearly express it, have put into it a good deal of language, trying to save the Government from any expense in regard to it, but they do not succeed in doing it by their language. They say that the Government shall not be at any expense on account of breakage; but suppose there is an expense on account of breakage and repairing? There is nothing said about repairing.

There is a good deal of language here that makes it difficult, in addition to the fact of its being a concurrent resolution, to save it under the rule and make it proper to consider it here in the House. There are altogether too many amendments to convince me that the House is entirely convinced of the correctness of the Speaker's ruling. However, I do not doubt the integrity of the Chair and the honesty of his ruling as made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had the right to appeal. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution as amended.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. UNDERHILL, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call of committees.

The Clerk proceeded with the call.

Mr. PAYNE (when the Committee on Insular Affairs was reached). Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] moves that the House do now adjourn. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

Mr. WEBB rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Carolina rise?

Mr. WEBB. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to ask unanimous consent to present a bill from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The proper request to make is to ask unanimous consent to return to the call of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WEBB. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the call of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] asks unanimous consent to return on the call of committees to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. WEBB. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BARTLETT. I move that the House do now adjourn. The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RUCKER. Division!

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] still insist on his point of no quorum?

Mr. PAYNE. I do.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes 31.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. On this motion, the yeas are 81, the noes 31. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has made the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, it does not require a quorum to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That is true; but the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HUGHES] demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, 22 Members, not a sufficient number, rising to second the demand.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn is agreed to.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the House, under the order heretofore agreed to, adjourned until Saturday, September 27, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3602) granting a pension to Boaz Adkins; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 4921) granting a pension to Orville Fox; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 1257) granting an increase of pension to Mary C. Round; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDERSON: A bill (H. R. 8592) to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Owatonna, Minn.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 8593) amending the building regulations of the District of Columbia by providing for the better protection of persons engaged in and about the construction, repairing, alterations, or removal of buildings, bridges, viaducts, and other structures; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MORRISON: A bill (H. R. 8594) to make it lawful for railroad companies and other common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to grant annual passes and other free transportation to former employees in certain cases; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WOODRUFF: A bill (H. R. 8595) providing additional compensation for rural mail carriers for maintenance of horses, buggies, and such other equipment as is necessary in the discharge of their duties, and granting them leave of absence of 30 days annually with pay; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. HAYES: A bill (H. R. 8596) to limit the denomination of silver certificates, United States notes, and Treasury notes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. KIRKPATRICK: A bill (H. R. 8597) to provide for the punishment of any person in the employ of the United States and any member of the Army or Navy of the United States who shall gamble or play at any game of chance or bet on any game whatsoever in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HOWARD: A bill (H. R. 8598) to establish postal savings banks, to enable the Government to borrow money directly from the people, and to market its bonds directly to the people in small and varying denominations through the medium of the post office, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. FRENCH: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 131) expressing the opinion of Congress on the question of making offenses under the white-slave law extraditable and directing the Secretary of State to undertake proper negotiations with all foreign countries looking to the defining of such offense as extraditable; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BELL of California: A bill (H. R. 8599) granting a pension to Ora M. Larkin; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PALMER: A bill (H. R. 8600) granting an increase of pension to Joseph H. Gouger; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin: Petition of Carpenters' Local Union No. 1053, of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring the passage of legislation granting the right of suffrage to the citizens of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. GARNER: Petition of sundry farmers of Texas, protesting against the standardizing of gin boxes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HOUSTON: Petitions of 371 employees of the Pennsylvania works of the American Sheet & Tin Plate Co. at New Kensington and 1,232 employees of one of the subsidiary companies of the United States Steel Corporation at Monessen, Pa., protesting against a dissolution of the United States Steel Corporation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KEISTER: Petition of 1,232 employees of one of the subsidiary companies of the United States Steel Corporation at Monessen, Pa., protesting against a dissolution of the United States Steel Corporation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 371 employees of the Pennsylvania works of the American Sheet & Tin Plate Co., located at New Kensington, Pa., protesting against a dissolution of the United States Steel Corporation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania: Evidence in support of bill (H. R. 7642) for the relief of George J. Horton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAPES: Petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Michigan, favoring certain changes in the interstate-commerce law; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. PROUTY: Petitions of sundry citizens of Maxwell, Collins, Borderant, and Dawson, State of Iowa, favoring certain changes in the interstate-commerce law; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. RAKER: Petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Oakland, Cal., favoring a stronger Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of the Board of Trade of Los Angeles, Cal., favoring 1-cent letter postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. WALLIN: Petitions of sundry citizens of Schenectady, N. Y., protesting against the establishment of a national holiday to be known as Columbus Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, September 27, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, in whom is all wisdom, power, and goodness, increase our faith and renew our confidence in Thine almightiness that we may work and faint not, reaping where we sow, that discipline may have its perfect work until we all come into oneness with Thee in intent and purpose.

We count time, but with Thee one day is as a thousand years and a thousand years as one day, and Thou art patient.

The air is full of farewells to the dying, and men go about the streets mourning, unmindful of the immortality of the soul. Again Thou hast put forth Thy hand and taken a Member from this body to the larger life—young, strong, vigorous, with high hopes and noble aspirations, leaving behind him an enviable record. Comfort us and all his friends, and be to the stricken wife and children a power of faith and hope and confidence, that they may look forward with bright anticipations to a family reunion in love and affection where partings shall be no more forever. And glory and honor and praise be Thine, in Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, September 25, 1913, was read and approved.

THE INCOME TAX.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the following amendment which I send to the desk to be read be considered and referred to the committee on conference having in charge the tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the proposed amendment will be read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 222 add the following paragraph, to be known as paragraph P:

"That for the calendar year ending December 31, 1913, the tax under this section shall be imposed only in the event that at the end of the fiscal year, computed to the 31st of December, 1913, the actual surplus in the United States Treasury shall be less than the sum of $275,000,000, including as a part of said surplus the amount then expended in the construction of the Panama Canal from the general fund and not reimbursed by the sale of bonds.

"That this section, so far as it imposed an income tax, shall become operative for the year 1914 and thereafter only in the event that at the end of the fiscal year of 1914, and of any fiscal year thereafter, the actual surplus in the United States Treasury, including as a part of said surplus the amount then expended in the construction of the Panama Canal from the general fund and not reimbursed by the sale of bonds, shall not be less than the sum of $250,000,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the proposed amendment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama objects.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection until I explain my view?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will reserve my objection.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, when the constitutional amendment providing for an income tax was before Congress for consideration, and the legislatures of the country, especially New York, it was stated that the tax would only be levied as a war revenue or in time of dire necessity. While taxation of this sort is most obnoxious and odious, yet if the necessities of the country warrant its imposition I am heartily in favor of this method of raising revenue.

It has been stated on this floor that after the enactment of this bill into law there will be a deficit from internal-revenue taxes, customs receipts, and other incidental sources amounting to approximately $69,000,000. This being the case, let us ascertain if such a tax will be needed to meet this deficiency. At the present time there is in the general fund of the Treasury $124,900,554.60 cash, and the balance expended out of the general fund reimbursable from proceeds of Panama Canal bonds not yet sold is $183,335,447.28—which is equivalent to cash in the Treasury—making the enormous total of $313,236,001.88. During the nine years and four months which the Panama Canal has been under construction there has been expended the sum of $286,936,316.30, or an average of $30,754,160.38 annually. With the canal nearing completion, our annual expenditures will decrease about $30,000,000, and thereby cause the general fund in the Treasury to increase annually by this amount. The surplus in the Post Office Department since the inauguration of the parcel post has been greatly increased, and I venture to say that during the present fiscal year it will amount to approximately $20,000,000. This surplus will undoubtedly continue to increase annually, as the system has proven very popular. Why not allow the corporation-tax law to remain on the statute books, instead of repealing it, and thereby add to the Treasury funds between $35,000,000 and $40,000,000 annually. In my opinion, this bill will not create a deficit, but, on the contrary, I am convinced that during the first six months of its enforcement the revenue from customs receipts will greatly exceed the amount collected under the present law, as the importations will be much larger, owing to the lower rate of duties that will be imposed. It must therefore be perfectly clear to everyone that with the increased surplus in the Post Office Department occasioned by the parcel-post law, the revenue derived from the present corporation-tax law, and the increased collections from the vast importations which will undoubtedly follow the enactment of this bill into law, any deficit occasioned by the bill will thus be overcome and render the imposition of the income tax unnecessary at a time when our Treasury will be overflowing.

After the bill has been placed upon our statute books, should anything unforeseen arise which would cause a deficit, the deficiency should be paid out of the general fund of the Treasury until the surplus therein decreases $50,000,000. I am opposed to a full and overflowing Treasury; it excites the cupidity of everyone whose business it is to promote enterprises requiring public money. There would be no incentive for a raid upon the Treasury if it were bare, and, in my judgment, it would be the safest safeguard that could surround the administration.

Under the income-tax law which was passed and authorized owing to the drain on the Treasury, due to the War between the States, the States of Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania paid over two-thirds of the entire tax collected. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue in his annual report for the year ended June 30, 1871, shows a total net receipt of $18,077,551 from the income tax, and the aforementioned States paid $12,145,128 of this amount. At that time no complaint was entered by them, as the Government was in dire need of money to replenish its impoverished Treasury; but at the present time they do register their protest against the imposition of this tax when we have a full and overflowing Treasury. Of the amount paid by these four States New York alone paid $7,000,000 of the $18,000,000 collected, or more than one-third of the entire tax.

Samuel J. Tilden was elected President of the United States on his opposition to the income tax, and shortly thereafter it was repealed. The income tax has been the cause of financial distress in every country where it has been imposed. In England, for instance, since the levying of the income tax the number of "soup houses" has been constantly increasing. I entertain grave fears for the party that causes the imposition of this unwarranted and obnoxious taxation on the people of this country without any just cause and at a time when we are at peace with the world and have an excessive surplus in the Treasury.

FRANZ DANIEL PASTORIUS (H. DOC. NO. 244).

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama objects.

MR. BALTZ. Mr. Speaker, on the 31st day of August, 1683, there landed in America one Franz Daniel Pastorius, the first German to land in this country. The event was recently celebrated by the German-Americans of Cincinnati, at Chester Park, in that city. The English oration was delivered by Hon. STANLEY E. BOWDLE, a Member of Congress from the first district of Ohio. The subject of his address was "The influence of German life and thought on American civilization." It is entirely nonpartisan and nonpolitical. I ask unanimous consent to have it inserted in the Record and also printed as a public document.

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BALTZ] asks unanimous consent that a speech delivered recently by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOWDLE] on "The influence of German life and thought on American civilization" be printed in the Record and also as a public document. Is there objection? There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The speech referred to is as follows:

"Gentlemen, it is with a good deal of trepidation that I appear here to-day, for I am not a German and I know but one German word, 'Gesundheit.' I am not quite sure where I learned that, although you may guess.

"People have lately become so sensitive about the performance of public duties that I feel obliged to say to you at the outset that I am here by special invitation of your worthy president, who invited me on your behalf and with your consent, and I am here at my own charges.

"In a way, I am glad to have a day's relief from Washington weather and from currency questions. Gladstone once said that every man he had known in English life who had studied the currency question either took to drink, went crazy, or was sued for separation. I don't know what fate awaits me, but whatever it is I am glad to postpone it a little by coming out here to see you. It may serve to break the journey to the mad-house or the divorce court.

"When Judge Bode first wrote me I declined his invitation, for I could see no reason for my presence here; but he wrote again, saying that I was invited because of my well-known sympathy with German thought. This made me pause, and then assent, for I do claim knowledge of German thought in so far as that thought has been translated into good English, and much of that thought has become part of my mental life.

IMPRESSED BY GERMAN.

"For a few years of my life I worked daily in close association with a German, whose humble and obscure personality interested me very much. He was one of those intensely valuable citizens whose genius makes this civilization possible, yet of whom nothing is ever heard. He was Bob Cook, a German from Stettin, who spoke no English, who for years was the most valuable machinist employed at the Cramp ship yards, at Philadelphia. Bob assembled the engines of the great ships turned out at that yard. When the giant parts had advanced to the point of assembling he it was who was always called on to erect the monster, and as an apprentice I found myself assigned to help him. These were happy days, gentlemen. To build things and see them grow, and see the steam turned on and your work move—pray, where is pleasure equal to that!

"Day after day I have worked with him on great engines, he directing me in the sign language, and I have often sat down at 9.30 and shared his Schweitzer and tried to understand his words. Little did he suppose that his apprentice would, 23 years later, be telling of him, the first great German that I knew; wherever he may be in the world unseen, I am sure that he is talking German with Vulcan and forging his thunderbolts; but may he, above the din, know that I am paying him this brief tribute.

ONE GREAT DAY.

"And so this day is dedicated to the landing of a great and brave German citizen on these shores—Franz Daniel Pastorius. He did not come on the Mayflower, and I am glad of it, for that historic boat certainly was overloaded. He waited a little while, and a great many Germans waited still longer and took much faster boats; but I am glad Pastorius came and that, like all good Germans, he multiplied himself greatly.

"A great many people pride themselves on their past. This is because they have no present. Right here is Germany's greatness. The German people have a wonderful 'now.' When you are asked to talk about some people you simply turn to the encyclopedia. There is no other way of learning anything about them. But with Germans it is different.

"The German people have never forgotten the simple life, and that is why its people and nation are so strong. The other day, coming home from a baseball game, I cut over toward Harrison Avenue and then over McMicken Avenue, and I stopped to see a German friend and client of mine in that quarter. There was the brick house; the brick walk leading to the rear had been washed and reddened; the front of the house had been scrubbed as high as the lintels; the windows shone; the curtains were drawn down evenly; two negatives of Niagara Falls hung in the windows. I walked around to the rear. There was a tanbark walk under a grape arbor; there stood a green table—one of those tables with the mysterious space under the top where one can keep so many interesting things in dry territory.

MADE THEM HAPPY.

"A parrot talked in the arbor. The wife came out, offered me a chair at that table, and in a moment brought me some grape juice and insisted that I have some schmier cheese that she had just made while I waited for Heinie.

"And the whole place was clean and sweet, and Heinie's parrot talked contentedly, and the cat looked happy; and there we sat, and this mother told me that everybody was well and that her husband and son had money in the bank, and not one word was said about the Thaw case, not a word about politics. We just talked pleasantly while I ate the cheese and refreshed myself rationally. And when I left that simple, wholesome yard and that green table and the tanbark and that good mother I felt happier.

"I felt that I had met the people who really make this world. I had met those minds that make this civilization possible. There was a family with which you could build an enduring empire or preserve a republic. Do you wonder that that type of family is influential in Brazil, as was exhibited in the person of Dr. Lauro Muller, who has recently visited this country? Do you wonder that men of that type have the trade of Mexico? Do you marvel that that type is so powerful in America? Happy is that country with such families.

GERMAN IS GOOD THINKER.

"The greatness of the German is that he is a good thinker and is a simple liver. There is more good, simple living among the Germans than among any other class on earth. Among us Americans the simple life is lost, strayed, or stolen. We talk a good deal about it, but nobody wants to live it. We demand the low-necked, short-sleeved, rubber-tired life, with the broiled birds, the box party, and the alimony trimmings. Why, the simple life has gotten so far from us that it was no wonder that Frenchman, Pastor Wagner, made $100,000 writing about it. But I have not heard of anyone adopting the simple life as the result of Wagner's sermons.

"The simple life has this profound advantage: It leads men to hate debt. Right here you have one of the sources of German strength. They are frugal; they like to know that there is a little money in the bank. To me debt is a horror. 'That the borrower is servant unto the lender' is as true to-day as when Solomon said it. Debt is the hold another fellow has on me. To the extent that it exists, to that extent I have cashed in my independence.

"Some years ago, when I was not in very good health, I spent a good deal of time around the city of Guadalajara, Mexico. My companion at the breakfast table during one winter was a German citizen of Buenos Aires, who came regularly to Mexico to look after a mine. He was a fine, solid old man, who spoke Spanish and German, and he taught me some Spanish. I remember him saying one day, 'You Americans don't mind debt.'

ALL DEPENDS ON MONEY.

"If you want a fire engine or a town flagstaff, you issue bonds, and you forget that bonds are in fact bonds. You need to learn that debt is a curse. This is a sad fact. We overwork credit. Much of the sadness of modern life is due to debt. Much of our divorce troubles are due to the irritation in the home due to debt. Much of our national illness is caused by the lowered vitality due to the worries over debt.

"Cemetery statistics do not always tell us accurately of what a man died. Debt has carried off more people than the hardening of the liver. Divorce decrees rarely state the true cause of the difficulty. It was the irritation and impatience resulting from debt. If I were a doctor, called in to see the head of a family, immediately after feeling the pulse I would ask to see the bank book. I am a lawyer, and when a troubled spouse calls to see me about divorce I ask to see the savings-bank book. Much true history of families and nations, if written, would take the form of a ledger account.

"John Morley once said to a graduating class: 'Show me your cash account, young man, and I will tell you the rest.' Yes; we Mayflower Americans have a lot to learn from the Germans, who came later and faster. Hatred of debt is one of those things, and the simple life fosters that. A house and lot cures socialism. Let a man get a brick house, a little grape arbor, some tanbark, a green table built as I have indicated, a German wife, and a bank book, and I tell you what it is, there will be few quarrels, no divorce, and no general grouch over the condition of society.

PRAISES GERMAN FRUGALITY.

"I have met a good many persons who talked about the man being above the dollar, but they generally borrowed what I had before the conversation ended. The old apostolic doctrine, 'Owe no man anything,' has been practically followed by the German people, and we Americans would do well to think more of it. This sensible frugality has done much to make Germany.

"Yes; Germany walks the heights, but she lives simply. Her people are a serious people, therefore; but, like all serious people, Germans understand the meaning of rational enjoyment. To them life is not a continuous garden party, as some people try to make it, and lose out. The German head may be in the clouds of philosophy, but the German foot is on the ground. Her philosophical output is matched up by her 'made in Germany' output. Her philosophers have been keen to see the injustice of this world, but they have never become grouchy. They have been thankful always for the good that man has attained.

"German philosophers know mankind so well, and they know how long it has taken him to develop even what he is, that evil does not shock them. Man's goodness is what perpetually surprises them. To them goodness is the daily enacted miracle. That man should be good at all is what proves to the German mind the existence of the Deity and makes immortality certain. What is this being wandering about the earth, made of blood and bones and thatched with hair?

PHILOSOPHY OF HEGEL.

"Why should this assemblage of matter develop goodness? Ah, gentlemen, right here is where that kingly German mind of Hegel set up his philosophy. He saw in goodness the operation of spirit, the Divine Spirit, which is destined to subdue all things unto itself. While I believed in God and immortality before I read Hegel, I believed chiefly because the Bible required it. But Hegel's thought placed that belief above the mists of doubt. He made that belief the law of my being. Germany, especially in the first quarter of the nineteenth century, had much reason to become utterly pessimistic.

"Hegel himself had seen her cities devastated by Napoleon. Destruction was everywhere. Men had but to look from their windows to see fire, famine, and death. History never seemed so meaningless. All life looked like a solemn joke. If God lived, he certainly seemed absent from his world. Sorrow and infinite perplexity were everywhere. Pessimistic philosophers abounded. It took a divinely ordained man to see the good working out amid such ruin. But Germany had such a man; yes; she had two—Hegel and Fichte—and all Germany listened as they talked.

"These men did much to resurrect Germany from her ruins. But the German mind is a serious mind, and quickly responded. Frivolous France could not permanently beat serious Germany. Light persons are interesting, but, like candy, you do not want much of them. It is this seriousness that has made Germany all she is. I should like to say all he is, for Germany is above all things masculine. He is the great male among the nations. The mollycoddle is not native to Germany. Germany turns out male men and female women.

GERMAN TEAMWORK.

"The German home is a little nation where the man is secretary of foreign affairs and the woman is secretary of the interior. He manages the state, she manages the home. This teamwork between German men and German women is a marvelous thing. It is a great state asset. Man is king in the German state, and woman is queen; and he believes that the queen should rule when the king is dead, or becomes a mollycoddle—yet at that she rules, even now, in the empire of gentleness, and in that empire I am not so sure but that the destinies of the race are more in her hands than she is aware.

"And German men being thoroughly masculine, marry. And German women bear children. The other day Ibsen delivered an address to a Swedish society, and somebody asked what he thought the great mission of women was. He replied, as I recall it, 'I can not be far from it when I say that the presentation of a good child to the world is the greatest feature of that mission.' Ibsen wisely answered. The world was made for life. Surely, then, the production of life is the divinest of missions. Our divorce courts would not be so crowded with young people if they knew the softening influence of a child's prattle.

"What storms of temper have been silenced by the pleading eyes of a child. What a moral anchorage they have been to us in this sin-tossed world. Yes, Germany knows the mission of children.

CHILDREN SOFTEN JUDGMENT.

"At the table this morning my little girl said to me, 'Daddy, chickens sit on eggs to get chickens, what do they sit on to get eggs?' Gentlemen, if a quarrel had been brewing with my wife, do you suppose it would have continued to brew after that? Children postpone wrinkles; they retard age; they soften our judgments; they modify our passions; and they excite that in us which keeps us true to the best ideals of our age.

"Our age needs more marriage and more children. Our age needs a new baptism of old-time masculinity—and that baptism should be by immersion.

"Germany knows the value of masculinity, marriage, and maternity, and her sun is to-day in the zenith. And her women honor her men. No German matron ever pulled Bismarck's whiskers; no squad of German women ever egged Von Bülow.

"But above all things I am grateful to Germany for her philosophical literature. Here, indeed, are unsearchable riches.

"It is a curious thing to me that so few persons are interested in philosophy. The thing most needful to man is, as usual, the thing he wants least. Metchnikoff points out that were it not for death man would need no philosophy. I do not agree. A thousand sorrows this side of death are assuaged by philosophy. As Emanuel Kant has well said: 'The argument for philosophy is that a man can live by it.'

GERMAN PHILOSOPHY.

"What a wonderful company of philosophers she has furnished to us. Hegel, Kant, the Schlegels, Lessing, Fichte, Schopenhauer—why, gentlemen, we could cover a page of world-renowned German names right down to the present hour when the works of Harnack and Eucken are widely read—men whose works will be read with solemn pleasure a thousand years hence.

"And when will the world forget German music? Why, gentlemen, should I get to heaven, no matter how lovely it may be, I shall want some day to ask for a rain check and come back here for a day to listen to Wagner or Mozart or Bach. And what is the secret of that music? Well, I think it is due to the fact that Germany's musicians were philosophers. They knew the depths of man's nature and aroused these depths. We never tire of that music, because it appeals to the sublime in our natures.

"What countless thousands of gripless men have been nerved to renewed effort by her music. I said a while ago that Germany walked the heights but lived simply. Name any department in thought or science or art and I will name you a troop of men whose names will live while there is an eye to see or a brain to understand.

"This age is asking us some curious questions. One is whether we desire to frame a civilization which is favorable to the life of weaklings and degenerates or favorable to the life of normal men. This question looks at us at every point. I wish German seriousness might be ours in deciding this question.

GERMANY FOR THE NORMAL MAN.

"Germany has decided it. The German nation is not racked continually by this question. She has decided in favor of a civilization favorable to the life of a normal man. Her solicitude is for the normal man, and when the normal man has lost his vigor and becomes old, she is arranging to care for him.

"Our own national development, amid untold riches, has been so rapid that we have produced but few philosophers. But this era of money-making and money seeking is closing. America is entering a period which will be productive of philosophers. We as a people stand in great need of philosophy and true religion. Materialism is playing out. The game is over. The signs of a greedy money debauch are all about us. The luscious fruit of a few years ago is seen to be mere apples of Sodom—Dead Sea fruit. If we are to be happy as a people, our philosophical powers must be developed. If the magnificent external world that we have created is to be enjoyed, we must be prepared to secure a new mortality.

"Up to this time our energy has been mainly expended on the external world, and we have made it grand; but development there is rapidly closing up. We are living in the days of finality. By that I mean just this: We seem to be reaching the limit of improvement in the external world.

"It is not necessary to tell mechanics that the turbine engine leaves nothing to be desired.

"It is not necessary to say to electricians that wireless telegraphy renders further progress impossible.

"It is not necessary to say to engineers that aerial navigation leaves no other element to be navigated.

GESUNDHEIT.

"Printers know that the linotype and monotype machines are the finality of printing, as fully as duplex telegraphy is the end of that science.

"Photographers know that the biograph and kinemacolor apparatus leaves no further field for photography.

"Marine engineers are aware that the limit of marine architecture has been passed and that the monsters of the deep are already degenerate in size and equipment.

"But let me not multiply simple facts. The realm to be conquered next is the realm of the mind. We must create within a spiritual kingdom of developed powers if we are to enjoy this well-nigh completed material world. The world does not satisfy; it can not satisfy; it was not made to satisfy us. It was made as the matrix for the gestation of spirit. This was Hegel's view; this is Eucken's view; this was Moses's view; this was Christ's view. To the creation of that kingdom Germany has furnished and is furnishing a vast amount of material.

"And now, gentlemen, I have finished. I am glad that Franz Daniel Pastorius landed in America, and I am glad he did much more than land. Permit me to salute him and all his descendants with my one precious German word, 'Gesundheit.'

THE CURRENCY.

Mr. BROWN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record upon the subject of the currency bill for this reason: A week ago Thursday I was erroneously recorded as having voted against the so-called gold amendment to the currency bill. That matter was corrected in the Record on the first opportunity, but, owing to the publicity which the newspapers in the neighborhood of the first congressional district in the State of New York gave to the matter, the impression is still abroad that I voted against that gold amendment. I therefore ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks upon that subject in the Record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record upon the subject of the currency bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I presume those remarks are to be golden.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma object?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. No; I do not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk will call the roster of the committees.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer a resolution which I think is privileged.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee sends up a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the House finally disposes of the conference report on H. R. 3321 it stand adjourned until Monday noon, November 10, 1913.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. AUSTIN) there were—ayes 112, noes 52.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SHACKLEFORD, for six days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BREMNER, indefinitely, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS IN THE RECORD.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—

Mr. RAKER. I hope the gentleman will reserve the right to object for just a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman let us know in regard to what subject he desires to extend his remarks?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I reserved the right to object.

Mr. RAKER. I will state it. Mr. Speaker, the question of viticulture, pure food, and sweet wines is involved now and has been for some time in the present tariff bill. The gentleman in the Senate has been able by the courtesy of the Senate to print his views in the Record and circulate them to all the Members of the House and the Senate, and I believe a Member of the House, coming from the State of California, who represents this great State, ought to have the same right to extend his remarks in the Record upon the same subject, so that the views of both sides may be had by the House. I do not desire in any way to be objectionable in this matter, but other Members are permitted to extend their remarks in the Record, and I do not want to be put in the position, when I rise and ask to extend my remarks, that I shall be objected to, while other people obtain that privilege. Now, I feel I have the right to do so, and I know the Members will give me the right if they understand my position. I have not objected to any man extending his remarks; I have made no objection upon those matters; but this is a legitimate matter now under consideration by the Members of the Senate and the Members of the House, and I think I ought to have the right to present California's side to Members of Congress in order that they might know what is going on.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wyoming rise?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman from California a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. Are the gentleman's remarks in the nature of a protest against the provisions of the tariff bill?

Mr. RAKER. It is not in the tariff bill now, but they are trying to get it in the tariff bill, and it does not belong there.

Mr. FOSTER. Has it not been taken out?

Mr. RAKER. It has been taken out of the tariff bill, but there is a consistent, persistent, ever-working effort to get it back in the bill, in season and out of season, day and night, and I believe that in justice to California interests we ought to put the facts before the Members of this House, and this is the only way to do it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman if it is not true that this matter he wishes to publish in the RECORD is a statement published by some outsider advocating some of this sweet-wine business? It is not his own speech at all.

Mr. RAKER. I could make just as good a speech, and better. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] objects.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles:

H. R. 8364. An act to authorize the President to provide a method for opening lands restored from reservation or withdrawal, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 7377. An act extending to the port of Perth Amboy, N. J., the privileges of section 7 of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had, on September 11, 1913, approved and signed Senate joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 68. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to advance to the chairman of the commission appointed under the act approved June 30, 1913, such sums of money as may be necessary for the carrying on of the commission, etc.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8364. An act to authorize the President to provide a method for opening lands restored from reservation or withdrawal, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 7377. An act extending to the port of Perth Amboy, N. J., the privileges of section 7 of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 2727. An act to create an additional land district in the State of Nevada.

BEEF-TRUST INVESTIGATION.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. RAKER. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Let it be read.

The SPEAKER. Is it a privileged resolution?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I asked unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and coupled with it I ask unanimous consent that when that is read I be permitted to insert my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. You can not do that.

Mr. RAKER. I can make the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] has a perfect right to object when the matter is up. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 262.

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee is hereby directed to investigate into the workings of the packers' combination, known as the Beef Trust, especially as to any effort to control the output of the Australian and Argentine markets.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I make the point of order that that resolution is not privileged.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I am asking unanimous consent for the present consideration of the measure. The gentleman knows that we can do anything by unanimous consent.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not believe that is a proper way to make an investigation by this House, and I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is that that resolution go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. RAKER. Just one more moment, Mr. Speaker. I ask unanimous consent that my statement be read in order to see whether the Members will give me unanimous consent to have it printed.

Mr. BORLAND. I will have to object to that also. In that way anybody could get a speech in the RECORD, whether anybody wanted it put in or not.

Mr. WEBB. I demand the regular order now.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of the roster of the committees.

PROCEDURE OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] offers what he says is a privileged resolution. [Laughter.] The Clerk will report the resolution and the Chair will decide whether it is privileged or not.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the respective committees of the House are directed to take up for consideration and report to the House such bills as they may favorably recommend for passage.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is not privileged.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, that is not a privileged resolution, I think.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. Have not the committees the right, under the rules of the House, to do what the resolution purports to tell them to do now?

The SPEAKER. They undoubtedly have.

Mr. GARNER. Then why a resolution giving the committees authority to do things which they have a right to do now under the rules of the House?

Mr. MURDOCK. Is it not a fact that these committees can not act without prior action of the caucus?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. AUSTIN. Under the rules this resolution is not undertaking to ask the caucus to do anything.

The SPEAKER. One gentleman at a time.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman yielded to me.

The SPEAKER. What the gentleman from Tennessee states was what the Chair was trying to say to the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MURDOCK. As a matter of fact, the caucus does not have to take this action.

The SPEAKER. As a matter of fact, the House and the Speaker have nothing to do with the caucus. The Speaker is governed in his actions here, and so are the Members of the House, by the Constitution of the United States, the laws of the land, and the rules of the House.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, before that question is decided I want to call attention to the precedent that was cited by my colleague from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] the other day, when a resolution was offered in the House by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. I think in that case a resolution had been introduced, requesting the Speaker of the House to appoint a Committee on Insular Affairs. That was held to be a privileged matter, a matter of the highest privilege, because it related to the business of the House. It seems to me that it comes pretty near to being a precedent in regard to this resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, that was merely a matter of creating an agency of the House to carry out certain duties under the rules. This resolution proposes to instruct committees to do certain indefinite and intangible things not mentioned in the resolution. So far as the rules of the House are concerned, the passage of the resolution proposed by my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] does not add a single iota to the power that the committees possess now without the passage of the resolution.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to suggest to the gentleman that his resolution, which he offered in the House when Mr. Speaker Cannon made the ruling, did not add anything to the powers of the Speaker, but simply directed him to carry out the powers he already had under the rules.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It proposed to create a committee to take jurisdiction of the legislation that was presented.

Mr. PAYNE. The Speaker had the power to appoint that committee, and the excuse of the resolution was that he had not exercised that power and had not performed his duty.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The rules provided that the committee should be appointed by the Speaker unless otherwise specifically ordered.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The rules of the House are designed to take care of just such situations as the gentleman from New York speaks of now.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would yield, but I have not the floor.

Mr. MONDELL. I mean the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] if he knew why the committees were not reporting bills and considering legislation?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There is no concealment about the matter at all.

Mr. MONDELL. I supposed there was not, and that was the reason why I asked the question, so that I could have a direct answer.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This is for a specific purpose, and the purpose is to carry out those large matters of legislation. The Democratic caucus has decided that that should be done, just as it has been done heretofore again and again.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is assuming that the caucus is above the rules of the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And it will hereafter be done again and again until the Government ceases, no matter what party is in power.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman recall any case where such action was had heretofore?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I recall distinctly that there was no legislation enacted in the first session of the Sixty-first Congress except the tariff bill, and I recall that at that session the committees were not appointed until the day when that session of Congress adjourned. It has always been so in tariff sessions.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman remember the time when, committees having been appointed, they were ordered by a caucus not to report bills?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; at the last session of Congress—the last extra session. The gentleman's memory is very short.

Mr. MONDELL. I know that was done at the last extra session of Congress, in a Democratic Congress; but I mean prior to the last Democratic Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. This resolution is not a privileged resolution. It is not on all fours with the case that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] cited in his debate with his colleague from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. That was a question that went to the organization of the House, and it has been held time and time again that all questions like that are privileged.

Somebody got up once and raised a point about this glass ceiling being in dangerous condition. One of these pieces of the skylight over the Speaker fell in one day and nearly killed somebody, and that is the reason why the netting was placed there. That was regarded as a matter of privilege, because it affected the safety of the Members of the House.

The resolution that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] objected to on the other occasion mentioned went to the organization of the House. This resolution does not go to the organization of the House. It instructs the committees to do precisely what they are doing now under the rules of the House. If it were in order at all, I suppose it could be offered and would go to the Committee on Rules; so that the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is sustained.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. The House having disposed of the Calendar to Discharge Committees, how can the House now order a committee to report a bill?

The SPEAKER. It can do it under the rules. The rule provides that on the first and third Mondays, which shall be suspension days, the Unanimous Consent Calendar shall be called first, and so forth. If business under that calendar is exhausted, then the Chair recognizes Members to move to suspend the rules. When the business under suspension of the rules is finished, then the Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees is reached.

Mr. AUSTIN. But, Mr. Speaker, I understood that the resolution—

Mr. FITZGERALD. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. If any gentleman sends a resolution of inquiry to one of these committees and they do not report it back in seven days, it becomes ipso facto privileged. That is the way to get at it. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roster of committees.

Mr. CAMPBELL (when the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service was called). Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Democratic caucus having directed that these committees report nothing, why call the roll of committees?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is not in order.

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why is the roll of committees being called?

The SPEAKER. It is being called under the rule. The Chair has stated twice to the House that the Speaker of this House has nothing on the face of the earth to do with any rule, regulation, or proposition passed by a Democratic caucus, Republican caucus, Bull Moose caucus, or any other sort of caucus.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But is it not known to the Speaker, as it is to the House, that there is no business on this calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows that there is business. The gentleman is out of order, and will take his seat, and the Clerk will continue the call of committees. Before doing so the Chair will submit some requests for unanimous consent.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. RUBEN, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Eliza E. Tuttle, Sixty-second Congress, and in the case of Aaron Walker, Sixty-second Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN ARIZONA.

The Clerk resumed the call of committees.

Mr. CLAYTON (when the Committee on the Judiciary was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate bill 99, to fix the times and places of holding district courts for the district of Arizona.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Arizona shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of Arizona.

Sec. 2. That terms of the district court shall be held in Tucson on the second Tuesdays in January and June; at Tombstone on the second Tuesdays in February and September; at Phoenix on the second Tuesdays in March and October; at Prescott on the second Tuesdays in April and November; and at Globe on the second Tuesdays in May and December. Causes, civil and criminal, may be transferred by the court or judge thereof from any of the aforesaid places where court shall be held in said district to any of the places hereinabove mentioned in said district when the convenience of the parties or the ends of justice would be promoted by the transfer; and any interlocutory order may be made by the court or judge thereof in any of the hereinabove mentioned places.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, lines 5 to 11, inclusive, strike out all of section 2 down to and including the word "December," in line 11, and insert the following:

"Sec. 2. That terms of the district court shall be held in Tucson on the first Mondays in May and November; at Phoenix on the first Mondays in April and October; at Prescott on the first Mondays in March and September; and at Globe on the first Mondays in June and December."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I think it is due to the House to state that I shall not raise the question of no quorum this morning, because I am well satisfied that there is a quorum here; but I do want to inquire, for my own information, whether the gentleman who has the bill in charge [Mr. CLAYTON] is right sure that this is one of the great objects of legislation for which this extraordinary session of Congress has been called? Will the gentleman inform me as to whether it is one of the objects?

Mr. CLAYTON. I will endeavor to enlighten the gentleman. I think this is a bill of such a public nature as to present an emergency case to the House. I may say to the gentleman that it is estimated by high official authority that this bill will save, at each term of the Federal court in the State of Arizona, about $8,000 to the Government of the United States. I think any measure that will save $16,000 a year to the Public Treasury certainly ought to commend itself to the gentleman from New York, and I am sure it does. I think this constitutes an emergency measure, and I think it is one of the objects for which the extraordinary session was called, and will commend itself to the country as wise legislation.

Mr. PAYNE. I agree with the gentleman on what he says, and will go a step beyond that and say that the extraordinary session having been called, it is called for all purposes of legislation; and any purpose of legislation would be subject to the consideration of the House. Now, there is one further point on which I wish enlightenment, and that is whether the Democratic caucus has authorized this Committee on the Judiciary to report this particular bill and the other one or two bills which are on the calendar, reported by that committee? I want to be on safe ground.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I think I can enlighten the gentleman on that point. At a meeting of distinguished and influential Members of this House, recently held in this city, the state of the Union being under consideration by that band of patriots, it was suggested to them that this was a good measure, and every man there agreed to it, and every man there agreed that even our Republican brethren would assent to the proposition that such a wise bill as this, in the interest of public economy, ought to pass.

Mr. PAYNE. But that does not answer my question, Mr. Speaker. My question is whether the Democratic caucus had agreed it might be passed or reported to the House.

Mr. CLAYTON. Of course, when I described that distinguished band of patriots considering the welfare of the country, I had in mind a Democratic caucus and not a Republican caucus. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Do I understand that this band of patriots has usurped the place of the Democratic caucus?

Mr. CLAYTON. That distinguished band of patriots and statesmen have been commissioned by the American people to conduct the business of this House, and they thought they were doing it in a proper sort of way. Perhaps they have followed more or less the example heretofore set by the Republican Party when that party was composed in former days of a distinguished band of patriots.

Mr. PAYNE. Then the distinguished band of patriots representing the leaders of the Democratic Party are doing this thing?

Mr. CLAYTON. With your help. We are asking you to-day to come in and help us pass a good bill. I am glad to note that the gentleman is not going to raise the point of no quorum.

Mr. PAYNE. If I were going to have my way about it, I would let all of the committees do business. There are a lot of bills which ought to be passed which are just as meritorious as this bill. What I complain of is that you are putting a ban on some of them and letting in the favorites, however distinguished and patriotic you gentlemen who assume to be leaders on that side may be.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, may I remind the gentleman of what happened in the Fifty-fifth Congress?

Mr. PAYNE. If it will be of any consolation to the gentleman, of course.

Mr. CLAYTON. Just to refresh the gentleman on a little bit of history in which he had a part. The gentleman will remember that that was a Republican Congress, and patriotism had not entirely departed from the Republican Party in those ancient days. What was known as the Dingley tariff bill had been under consideration and had been passed here. That was in Mr. McKinley's first administration. It was reported out at an extraordinary session in the spring of 1897.

The Republican Party, being responsible, being charged with the duty of legislating, reported that bill and refused to do other business. When the bill had passed here we then met here every third day and adjourned. The gentleman from New York undoubtedly remembers that Gov. Dingley, of Maine, who was chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, had a desk over on that side of the aisle, and that when he wanted to put through any measure of minor importance, or even of great importance, upon which a Republican caucus had agreed, the governor would leave his silk hat in the cloakroom, but that whenever he was carrying out the Republican program to adjourn without doing any business, leaving the committee here doing nothing, he would walk in in the morning and place his silk hat on his desk. That was a signal to everyone that the Republican band of patriots was not going to do any business that day except to adjourn. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the exuberance of the gentleman's imagination has led him to say a great many things that are not so.

Mr. CLAYTON. Oh, it is not imagination.

Mr. PAYNE. These matters were not referred to a Republican caucus. They were not agreed upon by a Republican caucus.

Mr. CLAYTON. But the gentleman remembers the silk hat and Gov. Dingley's method?

Mr. PAYNE. They were gotten through by unanimous consent of the House, involving the consent of my distinguished friend from Alabama, because the measures put through so appealed to his good judgment. But here we have a tariff bill completed. I think it is completed, because I have been notified to attend a meeting of the committee of conference, which meets for the first time on Monday next at 10 o'clock, so I think the conference report must be ready. I conclude that from the notice that I have received and from what I have read in the newspapers.

Having done this, these able gentlemen on these other committees having these bills and nothing else to do want to report and pass them. I am spokesman for them, self-appointed it may be, but still spokesman for these gentlemen who have these bills and want to report them to the House, and the House has nothing under the sun to do except to consider them. Why, as the gentleman knows, when he either goes over to the Senate or receives definite information that he can not go over under the governor's appointment, whichever it may be, he will find out that those gentlemen will come here and say, "We wanted to pass our bills way back there in September, 1913, and now you tell us that the appropriation bills are going to take up the whole attention of the House, and we can not get these pensions for our constituents, and we can not get our public-buildings bill considered"; and all these other things that are so dear to the heart of especially the new Members of Congress—

Mr. CLAYTON. May I ask—

Mr. PAYNE. And I am appealing for them.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I ask the gentleman a question? Did not the gentleman vote just now for the resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] to adjourn, I believe, for a month and do nothing?

Mr. PAYNE. No; I did not vote for such a resolution as that. I voted against laying a certain resolution on the table, as I desired the House to consider it.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I heard the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] speak about the delay in the coming report of the conferees on the tariff bill. A Democratic Member of the House, who I now see present, told me about half an hour ago on a street car that the reason it is not now reported is that the chairman of the conferees on the part of the Senate forgot that before they could take the final vote and make a final report they had to call in the Republican conferees. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Of course that is no news to the gentleman from Alabama, but it is to me.

Mr. CLAYTON. Thus by degrees our Republican friends finally get some information for their guidance, and thus will they learn that a Democratic Senate and a Democratic House, being responsible to the country, will do the business of the country in good order and in due season.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I want to say to the gentleman I have never criticized the Democratic Party for wanting to make a tariff bill and to make it a Democratic bill. That has always been recognized as a party question; but when you extend it to a currency bill you do something that is unwarranted and which is absolutely wrong. You ought to have a bill made up by the committees in the House and not made up by a party caucus and by party action; and I am very glad to hear the note sounded, and it seems to me it is getting into a pretty loud proportion at the other end of the Capitol, that men are not to be bound by any such action on matters that are matters of business and which should not be made a matter of party politics. I am very glad to see that action, and I hope that the time will come, when you gentlemen get older and more experienced in business and learn a few things more, that even that leaven will come to the House of Representatives, and with a two-thirds majority you will not be afraid to come in here and vote on such a business measure as a matter of currency and banking, whatever you may do in reference to the tariff. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. I do.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama having certified to the patriotism of my party—

Mr. CLAYTON. In the ancient days, I said. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BURNETT. That is, when the gentleman had a party; he has not got one now.

Mr. MONDELL. My recollection is your party always canonized your party leaders a short time after they passed from power. I desire to ask the gentleman how many of the towns named in the bill—Tucson, Globe, Prescott, and Phoenix—have public buildings, Federal courthouses?

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman means Federal buildings?

Mr. MONDELL. Federal buildings.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is a Federal building at Phoenix—a courthouse.

Mr. MONDELL. And none at the other places?

Mr. HAYDEN. At Tucson a site has been purchased at a cost of $25,000; at Globe a site has been purchased and the construction of a public building to cost $100,000 authorized; at Prescott the last public-building bill authorized the purchase of a site—

Mr. MONDELL. If this bill passes, the gentleman will have to have a public building large enough to accommodate the court, of course.

Mr. HAYDEN. I expect so.

Mr. MONDELL. In that way the passage of this legislation may be somewhat helpful.

Mr. HAYDEN. If a court is established at each of these cities, I intend to see that proper accommodations are provided.

Mr. MONDELL. One more question, Mr. Speaker. The enabling act, as I understand, provided for terms of court at Phoenix only. What conditions have arisen since that necessitates the holding of court at four points?

Mr. HAYDEN. Prior to the admission of Arizona to statehood court was held at five places—at the five places mentioned in the Senate bill. In the bill admitting Arizona to statehood this matter was overlooked and provision was made for holding court at Phoenix alone. In the report on this bill a comparison is made between the expense of holding court at one place or at five places, as heretofore, and in the mileage of jurors and witnesses alone it amounted to an increase of $8,700 at one term of court.

Mr. MONDELL. This item is to return to the practice of Territorial days, except now you exclude Tombstone?

Mr. HAYDEN. Instead of five places the House amendment proposes to hold court at four places.

This change was recommended by the present judge of the district court in a letter to the Attorney General, in which he says:

Perhaps I should add that I do not think it advisable, under present conditions, to designate Tombstone as one of the places for holding the court, as the number of cases arising in Cochise County, of which Tombstone is the county seat, is at present very small, and Tombstone is not easy of access from Douglas, Bisbee, and Naco, the principal towns in that county, which can reach Tucson almost as readily, over the El Paso & Southwestern Railroad, as they can reach Tombstone.

The United States marshal is of the same opinion in a letter addressed to me, in which he says:

I can see no use in having a court in Cochise County, as we seldom have any business from there, and as you well know, that is my home county, and I would not suggest anything that I did not think just, but having to pay the mileage and expenses of these courts and knowing where the business accumulates from, this is my idea in regard to the same.

Hon. Allan B. Jaynes, late clerk of the United States District Court of Arizona, has also made the same recommendation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

BELIEF OF FEDERAL COURTS IN SECOND CIRCUIT.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 2254. This is a bill to amend chapter 1, section 18, of the Judicial Code, so as to allow the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States to go outside of the second judicial circuit designating another judge, a district judge, if you please, to hold court in the southern district of New York.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2254) to amend chapter 1, section 18, of the Judicial Code. Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 1, section 18, of the Judicial Code be amended by adding thereto the following:

"Whenever it shall be certified by the senior circuit judge of the second circuit, or, in his absence, by the circuit justice of said circuit, that on account of the accumulation or urgency of business in any district court in said circuit it is impracticable to designate and appoint a sufficient number of district judges of other districts within said circuit to relieve such accumulation or urgency of business, the Chief Justice may, if in his judgment the public interests so require, designate and appoint the judge of any district court in another circuit to hold a district court within the said second circuit, and to have and exercise within the district to which he is so assigned the same powers that are vested in the judge thereof: Provided, That such judge so designated and appointed shall have consented, in writing, to such designation and appointment: And provided further, That the senior circuit judge of the circuit within which such judge so designated and appointed resides shall certify, in writing, that the business of the district of such judge will not suffer thereby. Such appointment shall be filed in the clerk's office and entered on the minutes of the said district court, and a certified copy thereof, under the seal of the court, shall be transmitted by the clerk to the judge so designated and appointed. Each of the said district judges may, in the case of such appointment, hold separately, at the same time, a district court in such district and discharge all of the judicial duties of the district judge therein."

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. In looking over the Judicial Code, to which this bill is an amendment, I notice that the Chief Justice has the authority to designate a district judge from another circuit to act in the place of another district judge if the latter is disabled from performing his duties when the circuit judge or the circuit justice certifies that no district judge in their circuit is available. But in none of the provisions relating to this power do I find the district judge called upon to ascertain his wishes whether he is willing to serve in that capacity or not. Now, I direct the chairman's attention to the first proviso in the bill under consideration and ask why you add a new feature, as follows:

Provided, That such judge—

Referring to the district judge—

so designated and appointed shall have consented, in writing, to such designation and appointment.

In all these other and many cases where a district judge is assigned by either the circuit justice or the circuit judge to act in case of illness of a district judge, there is no provision whatever, as I find, that relates to asking the district judge as to whether he is willing to perform the service. Now, I ask the chairman of the committee why we should insert in the bill here this provision that makes it conditional upon the district judge, expressing his willingness to perform the service? Why not make it mandatory upon the certification by the circuit judge or circuit justice, as provided in the Judicial Code, and not leave it to the determination of the district judge?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I think I can give the gentleman an explanation, and I think it will be satisfactory to him. Under the law as it now stands the judge who is designated to go outside of his own district and hold court must come from the particular circuit where he is designated to hold a court.

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman seemed, in his question, to be lacking in terminal facilities. Please let me complete my answer, and then, if it is not satisfactory, the gentleman can correct me.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wanted to correct the gentleman's statement. That is all.

Mr. CLAYTON. I may be in error, but I am undertaking to tell the gentleman my opinion and give him an answer. I had not completed the statement. Although I had listened to a very long question from the gentleman, I was not permitted to complete the statement. I hope the gentleman will allow me to complete it, and then if it is not satisfactory I will try to make it so.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is in control of the time.

Mr. CLAYTON. Surely; but I do not wish to keep the gentleman from making any observation he deems proper, and I shall endeavor to make the best explanation I can.

Under the law as it stands now, Mr. Speaker, if the Chief Justice of the United States wanted to designate a district judge to go and hold a court, say, in the southern district of New York, he would be confined to the second circuit in selecting that judge for designation. This bill is simply to allow the Chief Justice to go outside of the second circuit; to go, if you please, to any circuit in the United States where he finds a district judge idle who is willing to go to New York and hold the court there, and designate such a judge. That is the object of the bill. That is what it seeks to do.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman did not answer the query I propounded to him.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then, I was unfortunate in not understanding the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was unfortunate in not making clear to the gentleman what I was trying to direct the gentleman's attention to. I made my query in all seriousness.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman always does that.

Mr. STAFFORD. And when I rose a moment ago to ask permission to interrupt the gentleman, who is chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, I did so to correct what is undoubtedly an inadvertence of his, and to call attention to section 15 of the Judicial Code, which permits the Chief Justice to assign a district judge from outside of the circuit to another circuit, when there is pressure of business, upon the initiative of the clerk of the district and the certification of the circuit judge that no district judge is available in that circuit.

I have read the bill under consideration, and I understand what its purpose is. Its purpose is to allow another district judge, living outside the circuit, to be assigned to the second circuit of New York, not, as now provided by law, upon the action of the clerk of the district, but upon the initiative of the senior circuit judge or, in his absence, of the circuit justice of this circuit. In all the provisions that are carried in the Judicial Code there is no reference whatever to the action of the Chief Justice or any of the circuit justices being conditional on the willingness of the district judge to serve. If the Chief Justice of the United States, upon the certification of any circuit judge, directs the district judge to go and serve where a district judge is disabled or there is pressure of business, he is obliged to serve.

Now, in the bill under consideration you make it conditional upon the district judge being willing to serve.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I make a statement right there?

Mr. STAFFORD. With pleasure.

Mr. CLAYTON. The object of that is this: When these district judges take office they take office, I might say, with the understanding of a sort of contractual relation with the public in the discharge of their duty, to the effect that they would perform their services in their circuits; and here we require the judges to do something not contemplated by the law when they were appointed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here, in section 15 of the Judicial Code, with which the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary is undoubtedly familiar, you provide for the sending of a district judge outside of his own circuit, upon the certification of the circuit judge of another circuit that there is need, to serve in case of a vacancy—

Mr. CLAYTON. That is in the case of a vacancy; yes—

Mr. STAFFORD. Without the consent of the district judge. Now, I ask the chairman why, in the case of need in the second circuit of New York, where business warrants the attendance of another district judge, should it be left optional with the district judge to serve when there is a certification by the circuit judge of the circuit from which the judge comes that there is no need of his services in the district to which he is assigned? Why should he not be obliged to go and serve?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I have endeavored to explain to the gentleman that it was thought proper to consult the convenience of the judge when calling upon him to do this extraordinary work not contemplated when he took office. I am not the draftsman of the bill. This measure met with the approval of Judge Lacombe, who is the circuit judge of this circuit. I have his letter here in my hand. It met with the approval of those interested in the bill at the other end of this Capitol, and it has passed the Senate. It has met with the approval of the district attorney and of the Department of Justice, and I see no harm in the provision to which the gentleman refers. If the gentleman thinks there is anything obnoxious in that provision, anything hurtful to the public, or that any harm will come from it, I should like to know what it is.

Mr. STAFFORD. The idea in my mind is that if there is urgent need for an additional district judge in the second circuit of New York, and that fact is certified by the circuit judge of that circuit, and this is supplemented by the certification of the circuit judge of the district from which the judge comes that he could be spared, that that ought to be sufficient to draft him into the service without calling upon the district judge to say whether he would go or not, because district judges are human and they might not wish to do service in New York.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then the district judge would not serve.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the idea of the bill is that if the circuit judge of the district certifies that there is no work for him to do in his local district, that that would be sufficient to warrant the drafting of the district judge to the other circuit.

Mr. CLAYTON. That situation will take care of itself. I apprehend that judges can be found who will be willing to go there and hold the court; and I call the attention of the gentleman to this fact, that this bill is proposed in order to avoid having to create another judge for New York. The public business is in such a lamentable condition of congestion that it actually needs the services of more judges.

A Member of this House from the State of New York said to me this morning that he would rather have another judge there. We are trying to avoid the creation of a new judgeship and to provide for this case in New York by the designation of judges from some other part of the country to hold these courts.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am entirely in sympathy with the purpose of the bill, and wish to carry it out, and I was only suggesting that it would be more certain of accomplishment to do it in the way suggested.

Mr. CLAYTON. Does the gentleman wish to strike out that proviso?

Mr. STAFFORD. I should think it would be more in harmony with the existing code if it were stricken out; but I do not wish to do anything against the judgment of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope the gentleman will not urge that, because if that provision were left out, the practical working of it would be that the judge would be consulted before he was designated. Having been a district attorney myself, I know that the practice is to confer with the judges before they are designated.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman never knew of a judge going to another circuit to hold court unless he was willing to go, did he?

Mr. CLAYTON. I never knew of it.

Mr. PAYNE. It practically depends upon the will of the judge who is to go there.

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly; that is practically the way in which it is done now.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will yield to me a couple of minutes further, I want to say—

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly, I will yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Before the gentleman yields time to the gentleman from New York there is a matter which I desire to suggest.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] allow me to yield first to the gentleman from Kentucky? Then I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Two matters occur to me. Here you are making a rule for a particular circuit, owing to the press of business there. I do not know that I quarrel with that, except that it occurs to me it is better to keep your law uniform, and instead of making this apply to the second circuit make it apply to all the circuits, because the condition that now exists in New York is very likely to arise—for instance, in regard to the Chicago circuit.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the force of the gentleman's suggestion, and I want to say here that he had much to do with the preparation of the Judicial Code, which will always stand as a monument to his ability and industry as a Member of this House. The law ought to be uniform, as far as possible. The bill as originally introduced in the Senate was of general application, but it was amended in the Senate. It seemed that it could not pass the Senate without this amendment making it applicable alone to the second circuit, and that is the history of it. I appeal to the gentleman as a practical statesman in this case of emergency to let this bill go through as it is. I would have preferred it in the form he suggests, but it is not possible for us to get it in that form now, and I am afraid that we will hazard and perhaps defeat the passage of this bill at this session if we amend it.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is one other inquiry that I desire to make of the gentleman. I have not looked over the Judicial Code for some time, but I am under the impression that provision exists for the payment of expenses to judges when out of their districts. Will this enlargement of the territory to which a judge can be assigned carry with it provision for the same payment of expenses when outside of his own district, or did the committee consider that?

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes; it carries the usual and ordinary expenses allowed a judge when he is out of his own jurisdiction holding court.

Mr. SHERLEY. I assumed it would, but I did not look it up, and I wanted to know whether the committee considered that proposition?

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes; it would do that.

Mr. SHERLEY. Reverting back for a moment to the previous matter, do I understand the gentleman that when introduced into the Senate the bill was general in its terms, and was there amended to apply only to the second circuit?

Mr. CLAYTON. That is my recollection of it. Yes; that is true. I have the Record before me.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think it is a very grave mistake to pass what might be called local legislation of this kind, and we ought to make the rule general. I do not want to interfere with the passage of the bill.

Mr. CLAYTON. I fully agree with the gentleman, but I was urged by Judge Lacombe and the district attorney, and I may say by at least one of the Senators from the State of New York, to pass this bill now. I am doing the best I can to meet a practical situation in a practical way. Of course, we can not always put through a bill exactly as we would prefer to have it go through.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; but I do not think we ought to absolutely lie down on the supposition that the Senate is going to insist on an unreasonable position, and their position is clearly unreasonable in my judgment.

Mr. CLAYTON. If the Senate and House had not been here in session all of the summer, and if we were in the beginning of a session, and if I were sure that this bill might pass at this session if now amended, I would adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky; but under the circumstances I think it would perhaps result in the defeat of this legislation, which is so desirable to be had at this time.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. With pleasure.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Is the chairman of the committee familiar with the fact that there is the same reason for relief in the city of Chicago that there is in this second circuit in New York?

Mr. CLAYTON. My attention had not been directed to that fact, but if the gentleman states it I assume that it is true.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. That is the fact.

Mr. CLAYTON. I have no reason to doubt the gentleman.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. I thank the gentleman. That being true, I should think the point which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] raises is a good one, and that this should be general if it is passed at all. If it is true that such an amendment might jeopardize the passage of this bill at this session, I think it important enough to go over to the next session.

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope the gentleman will not take that view, and I hope he will himself draft a bill of as broad a scope as that which he suggests and let us pass it at the next session. I have here in my hand a letter from Judge Lacombe telling about the condition of affairs there, urging this bill to pass now.

I ask that the House let it pass now. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], or more time if he so desires.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I live in the northern district of New York, and, of course, it is not of local interest to me, but I happen to know something of the conditions in the southern district, and I know that Judge Ray, who was formerly chairman of the Judiciary Committee here in the House and is now judge of the northern judicial district, spends a great deal of time in New York, and is wanted there a great deal more than the time he can give in holding court, and that the business is behind in the southern district because they can not get enough available judges from the second circuit to go there and hold court. It is a meritorious bill, which I think ought to pass. I think the restrictions in the bill are all right, and I think the courtesy extended to the judges of the other circuits when they are called on to perform the duties is no more than is allowed now in practice, although the law may seem to be peremptory in its terms. As to the other districts, Chicago or Philadelphia, I do not know, although I believe they have a bill pending for an additional judge in Philadelphia to take care of the additional business there instead of getting it done in this way, but if this will answer the purpose it will save an additional judge, and I think the bill ought to pass.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, before calling for a vote I desire to thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] for his excellent statement in reference to this matter. I now ask for a vote on the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLAYTON, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the last two bills were passed was laid on the table.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD on both of these bills by printing a letter from Judge Sawtelle, of the district of Arizona, explaining the necessity for this legislation, in regard to the courts there. Also a letter from Judge Lacombe and a letter from the district attorney in New York, explaining the necessity for the last bill, which has just been considered and passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The letters referred to are as follows:

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Complying with the request of Mr. Graham, Assistant Attorney General, that I write the Department of Justice in regard to the bill now pending before the Judiciary Committee of the House, fixing the times and places of holding district court for the district of Arizona, I beg to submit the following report:

Arizona is a very large State and is at present inadequately provided with railroad facilities for reaching Phoenix, the capital, and place designated in the enabling act for holding the United States district court. The State is traversed from east to west by two parallel lines of railroad—the Santa Fe in the north and the Southern Pacific in the south. A branch line of the Santa Fe extends southward from Ash Fork, through Prescott, the principal town in the northern part of the State, to Phoenix. A branch line of the Southern Pacific extends from Maricopa Station, on the main line, northward to Phoenix. From the eastern central portion of the State Phoenix can be reached only by railroad by taking the Arizona Eastern Railroad, which extends from Globe, in Gila County, to Bowie, on the main line of the Southern Pacific, and there taking the Southern Pacific to Maricopa, passing thus through Tucson on the way to Maricopa and at Maricopa taking the branch line of the Southern Pacific to Phoenix; or by taking the New Mexico & Arizona Railroad, which runs from Clifton and Morenci, in Greenlee County, to Lordsburg, N. Mex., on the main line of the Southern Pacific, there taking the Southern Pacific through Tucson to Maricopa, and there taking the branch line of the Southern Pacific to Phoenix. The El Paso & Southwestern Railroad, which is a branch line of the Rock Island system, extends from El Paso, Tex., through Douglas and Bisbee, in Cochise County, Ariz., to Tucson, the present terminus of the line. The Tucson & Nogales Railroad, a branch line of the Southern Pacific, extends from Tucson southward to Nogales, Santa Cruz County, Ariz., and thence into the State of Sonora, Mexico, to Guaymas, and thence southward, its ultimate destination to be the City of Mexico, the road in Mexico being known as the West Coast Line.

From this statement it appears that in order to reach Phoenix by railroad from the northern tier of counties of the State it is necessary to go by way of Prescott over the Santa Fe road. The distance from Prescott to Phoenix by railroad is 196 miles.

To reach Phoenix by rail from any of the eastern, central, or southern counties of the State it is necessary to pass through Tucson, which is 122 miles from Phoenix.

Phoenix is reached by rail from Yuma County over the Southern Pacific main and branch lines from Yuma to Maricopa and Phoenix.

As above stated, under the enabling act Phoenix is the sole place designated for holding the United States District Court for Arizona. There are two terms of the court there each year, the April and October terms, beginning on the first Mondays of April and October, respectively. At the last two terms of the court there were approximately 150 criminal cases on the calendar at each term. Of these 150 cases about one-third were cases originating at Tucson and one-third were cases originating at Globe. Fully one-third of the witnesses at these terms of court were brought from Tucson and one-third were brought from Globe, at great cost to the Government. The grand jurors and trial jurors were summoned from all parts of the State, many of them from remote places, at large cost to the United States.

If the terms of the court were held in the larger towns in the sections of the State where the business of the court originates, a large saving to the Government would result in the mileage and per diems of the jurors and witnesses and in the transportation of prisoners. Thus, in cases originating in Tucson, the trial of these cases in Tucson would result in a saving of $12.50 for each juror, witness, and defendant. In cases originating in Globe, which is 360 miles from Phoenix, and tried in Globe, there would be a saving of $36 in mileage alone for each juror, witness, and prisoner, while there would also be a saving of two per diems for each of such witnesses and jurors. In cases arising at Prescott or points north, east, and west of Prescott, which could only reach Phoenix by rail by passing through Prescott, there would be a saving of $19.60 for each juror, witness, and prisoner to be transported for mileage alone, leaving out of view any saving in per diems, which would also be considerable.

To further illustrate this idea, I will say that from data furnished me by the present United States marshal, Mr. Overlock, I find that for the October term of the court, 1912, held at Phoenix, the mileage and per diem of jurors amounted to $7,000 and the mileage and per diem of witnesses amounted to $19,500, making a total of $26,500, while for the October term, 1911, of the court sitting at Tucson, Globe, Prescott, Phoenix, and Tombstone, the jurisdiction of the United States district court then being exercised by the district courts of the five judicial districts of the Territory of Arizona, the mileage and per diem of jurors was $8,300 and the mileage and per diem of witnesses was $9,500, making a total of $17,800, thus showing a net saving of $8,700 on these two items at one term of the court, held at the same season in two successive years.

In view of these facts, to say nothing of the expense necessarily incurred by those who have cases pending in court and the expenses of the transportation of prisoners from the place of residence to the place of trial, I have come to the conclusion that terms of court should be held at the following places, to wit, Prescott, Phoenix, Tucson, and Globe. I do not think that the amount of business at present coming before the court would justify the keeping of a clerk's office at each of these places, nor do I believe that the fees now collected by the clerk of the court are sufficient to enable him to pay and keep a deputy at each of these places and have left a fair compensation for himself. I would suggest that for the present and until the business before the court becomes of sufficient volume to demand a change, that the clerk be required to keep an office and a deputy at Phoenix and an office and a deputy at Tucson; that separate records be kept in the office at Phoenix of cases arising in the counties of Maricopa, Yuma, and Pinal, and a separate record of the cases arising in the counties of Mohave, Coconino, Navajo, Apache, and Yavapai, so that when necessity requires the separate records for these latter counties may be removed to the office to be then opened at Prescott; that separate records be kept in the office at Tucson of cases arising in the counties of Pima, Santa Cruz, and Cochise, and separate records of the cases arising in the counties of Graham, Greenlee, and Gila, so that the records of the cases arising in the latter counties may be removed to the clerk's office at Globe when necessity shall require an office to be opened there.

I would further suggest that the times of holding the terms of court be fixed as follows: At Phoenix, first Monday in April and first Monday in October; at Prescott, first Monday in March and first Monday in September; at Globe, first Monday in June and first Monday in December; at Tucson, first Monday in May and first Monday in November.

I would also suggest that the State of Arizona should for the present constitute but one division, with power to the judge to transfer cases from one place of holding court to another, as the interests of justice and of the litigants may require, as is now provided by the Senate substitute bill, at present before the Judiciary Committee of the House.

Perhaps I should add that I do not think it advisable under present conditions to designate Tombstone as one of the places for holding the court, as the number of cases arising in Cochise County, of which Tombstone is the county seat, is at present very small, and Tombstone is not easy of access from Douglas, Bisbee, and Naco, the principal towns in that county, which can reach Tucson almost as readily, over the El Paso & Southwestern Railroad, as they can reach Tombstone.

I am informed that more than two-thirds of the criminal cases and more than one-half of the civil cases come from Tucson, Globe, and the southern and southeastern parts of the State, and the witnesses and prisoners in criminal cases and all litigants and jurors have to start from or pass through Tucson to reach Phoenix. By holding court at

SEPTEMBER 6, 1913.

Tucson the mileage and per diem in going to and returning from Phoenix, which would amount to a large sum of money, would be saved. Tucson, as shown by the last census, is the largest city in Arizona, and, as above stated, is on the main line of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and also the terminus of the El Paso & Southwestern Railroad, and of the Tucson & Nogales (West Coast) Railroad. The Government recently has acquired a site in Tucson for a Federal building.

Very respectfully,

W. H. SAWTELLE,
Judge of the District Court.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS,
SECOND JUDICIAL CIRCUIT, JUDGE'S CHAMBERS,
New York, June 23, 1913.

Hon. HENRY D. CLAYTON,
Chairman Judiciary Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I write you in reference to the bill which was introduced by Senator O'GORMAN in the Senate (S. 2254, Calendar No. 39). In the hope of relieving the congestion which has now become a serious problem. As to existing conditions, so far as Government causes are concerned, the district attorney will advise you. It is for me as senior circuit judge to inform you as to the extent to which the statutes as they stand to-day provide judicial officers to dispose of the business which must be disposed of without the "delay of justice," which is often correctly spoken of as a "denial of justice."

The first source of supply for the district court is the group of four southern district judges. They are all occupied practically every day, from early fall to the beginning of the summer continuously, with much work in the summer months, which they divide between them. It is physically impossible for them to dispatch more business than they do now.

The second source of supply is the group of outlying district judges—eastern, northern, and western districts of New York, and the districts of Connecticut and Vermont—six judges in all. Some years ago we could count on them—although then they were fewer—for eight weeks apiece per year, but the work in their districts has grown normally with the growth of the country, and we can not now count surely on more weeks than six from each, in view of the demands of their own districts upon their time. Occasionally one of them is able to give an additional week or two here.

The third source of supply is the group of circuit judges. Their first duty is the disposition of business in the court of appeals. From the year that court was constituted (1891) until now it has been its unbroken practice to dispose, within the court year, of all the causes which the court year brought before it. Fifteen or twenty years ago that was easily done, and there was time enough left for the individual judges to give 8 or 10 weeks each a year to first-instance work in the circuit court. That condition of affairs has long since passed away. This year we have had about 275 appeals to dispose of. We sit continuously from the first week in October, three weeks hearing argument and one week consulting and writing opinions, until all causes are disposed of. Sometimes, if we are fortunate enough to deal with a calendar of short causes, we may get through with them in May and can then give some little help with the first-instance calendars; but that rarely happens now. The circuit judges do, however, while their own work is going on, help the district court with the motion calendars, hearing four a month. In this district a motion calendar is generally a large proposition, usually four to six hours of argument and a time to be counted by days for consideration and disposition of the propositions put up. The group of circuit judges can contribute no more time.

The last source of supply, under existing statutes, is the group of Commerce Court judges, on designation by the Chief Justice of the United States. This court year from Judge Mack and Judge Hunt the district court has had many weeks of work, which has been most helpful.

But from all these sources of supply there can not be gathered enough trial judges to dispose of current business. Present conditions will certainly not improve. On the contrary, they will grow worse, because the new rules, which provide for the trial of equity causes in open court, will largely increase the number of hours during which there must be a judge sitting on the bench for the trial of causes.

The main cause for this congestion is found not in the normal growth of judicial business, but in the abnormal growth of governmental business. The causes of that growth are well known to you. The activity of administrative officers in enforcing older laws and the additional laws recently passed, which introduce new causes of action, all requiring time to try—some of them a long time to try—have distorted all the allotments of time, which worked well enough five years ago.

Until the circuit court was recently wiped out, it fell to my lot, as senior circuit judge, to allot the time of the several judges for circuit court work, and I appreciated how hard it was, with an insufficient force, to deal fairly with the proposition. The humblest suitor in a Federal court, who is there just because he can go nowhere else for relief, surely should not be crowded to the wall to wait there interminably because the General Government has enough business of its own to occupy the entire time of all the judges that could hear his cause.

This allotment of time is no longer one of my functions; it lies now with the judges of the district court, but I know how great is their need for help and sincerely trust their appeal for it will not be unheeded.

A word more as to the text of the bill, which is drawn to amend a section of the judicial code. There has been an effort to pass such an act for several sessions and some of the clauses have been inserted to meet objections made when the subject matter was before other committees.

That this will solve our problem here I have no doubt. It is a very serious problem, I can assure you—serious for the Government—possibly more serious for the humble suitor whose trial is delayed. I can remember the time, a long time, too—for at least 15 years after I went on the bench—when the civil-jury calendar was called through each year and a plaintiff whose cause of action arose before October could, if his counsel were diligent, have it tried in a Federal court, if it went there, before the ensuing June. Sometimes he could have it tried early enough to secure a decision of the court of last resort before a year had elapsed since his cause of action arose. Such a rapid dispatch of judicial business, a most wholesome condition for the community, is no longer possible. It is no longer possible, because of the claims of the General Government upon the time of its judicial officers. The restoration of prior conditions rests with the Congress of the United States; from nowhere else can there be a restoration of such conditions.

As to the practical working of an amendment such as is proposed. From time to time I have met judges from other districts in the United States who have come to this city for their own personal enjoyment of a vacation, their present work all done, no new work for them apparent for many weeks to come. Some of them have told me how pleased they would be if when the work within their own jurisdiction was temporarily disposed of they could come here for a month or six weeks and hold a term of court. Experiences like that are helpful to a judge. Before the court of appeals was created, when I had abundant time to devote to the public service outside of the southern district of New York, the sessions of court I used to hold in Connecticut and Vermont were most helpful experiences for me; they broadened my view, and I know no reason why others may not have the same experience. The private litigant will benefit by the proposed change, for he will not have to wait so long—thinking things, even if he does not say them—before his cause is tried. Surely the Government will benefit, for in this broad land, with so many able judges, lacking so often the opportunity to evidence the capacity that is in them and welcoming the opportunity when it comes, there need never be any time when the Government in this district, or in any other similarly congested, can not try its causes promptly; and promptness in the disposition, especially of criminal causes, is a most wholesome object lesson to those who violate its statutes.

If any further exposition of existing conditions is required, I will gladly attend at any session of the Judiciary Committee to answer any questions and to prepare any statistics which the committee may desire.

I have gone at some length into the circumstances in which we find ourselves in this circuit, and I think that you will fully appreciate the difficulties of the position: Your own experience as a United States attorney has probably given you a full realization of the tremendous disadvantages under which public and private litigation is conducted when there are not sufficient available judges to dispose of the accumulation of work.

I remain,

Very respectfully, yours,

E. HENRY LACOMBE,
United States Circuit Judge.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
UNITED STATES ATTORNEY'S OFFICE,
New York, June 23, 1913.

Hon. HENRY D. CLAYTON,
Chairman Judiciary Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JUDGE CLAYTON: In reference to the bill which Senator O'GORMAN introduced into the Senate (S. 2254, calendar No. 39), I write to inclose herewith a copy of the bill and also a letter which Judge Lacombe, our senior circuit judge, has written to you in regard to the bill.

Judge Lacombe puts the whole matter so concisely and clearly that I can add little to what he says, except to give you some facts and figures.

I took office as United States attorney in this district on the 7th of May. My predecessor, Mr. Henry A. Wise, had been one of the most vigorous, active, and effective district attorneys that has ever been known in this district. He had had a most excellent staff of assistants, and during his term of office had used every available minute of the time of judges that he could get to come to this district. Nevertheless, on the 1st of May last, and just at the expiration of his term, there were 484 untried indictments and 353 untried civil cases in which the Government is interested.

This condition of affairs, in my opinion, was wholly due to the fact that it was physically impossible to get enough judges to take care of the accumulated work. The limitation of the present Judicial Code, which does not allow district judges to be assigned to work outside of their circuits, left a very small number of judges on whom we could call in this circuit for work. The object of the bill which Senator O'GORMAN introduced is to break down this artificial barrier and let judges who have some spare time on their hands in any part of the country go to any part of the country where the accumulation of work is too much for the local judges in the circuit.

You will observe that the bill is so drawn that any circuit is required first to use its own district judges and not to call for judges from another circuit unless the local supply is insufficient. The bill also provides that the judge who is to go to another circuit must first give his consent in writing and thereby obtains from such judge a practical certificate that he has time enough on his hands to devote some of it to work in another circuit. The bill also requires that this question shall not be wholly left to the judge who is to be assigned to outside duty, but requires a certificate from the senior circuit judge of the circuit in which the assigned judge resides to the effect that the assignment of the judge will not cause the business in the district of the judge to suffer. Lastly, the whole arrangement is subject to the approval of the Chief Justice of the United States.

I think the bill takes every possible precaution to prevent any conceivable abuse, and I have heard no criticism of it from anyone, except a suggestion that seems to me to be unimportant, to the effect that the judges in outlying districts would seek these appointments so as to enjoy the pleasures of the cities in which the congestion of work occurs. I think it is a sufficient answer to say that if such a thing could occur a judge who is asked to come to a circuit and help in the work, who came there and left his work, would not be asked to come again. I believe, however, that the criticism is wholly unjustified, because I do not think that any judge would undertake this sort of an assignment who would not devote his time seriously and earnestly to the work which he undertook.

During the four years before I took office the United States collected, through the work of this office, something over $6,000,000. Looking at the question from this merely mercenary standpoint it seems to me remarkably shortsighted policy to strangle the work of this office for lack of judges when the work results in such substantial benefit to the Government.

For some years back each session of Congress has enacted laws which add to the amount of work to be done in the way of civil and criminal cases by the offices of the United States attorneys. I think that this fact should be carefully borne in mind in considering the necessity for providing a system that will furnish sufficient judges to dispose of the work.

Your own experience as a prosecuting officer makes a good deal of what I have said unnecessary. You know what a state of disorganization things get into when an indictment found to-day can not be tried for a year or 18 months, and when a civil suit instituted by the Government may be equally far from a trial.

This condition of affairs seems to me to be perfectly unnecessary, and curable by simply passing a law which will make our judicial system a little more yielding and allow the judges to go where the work is and return when the work is done.

Another word in regard to the detail of the bill may be necessary. It has been assumed that if this bill is passed as an addition to section 18 of the Judicial Code it will not be necessary to make any provision for the payment of any expenses of judges who may have to travel. It has been thought that section 259 of the Judicial Code will automatically take care of these expenses. I should like you to look at this and see if you agree with the proposition.

I can not too earnestly urge upon you the importance to the work of the Government in this circuit of providing relief at this session of Congress, if possible, for the existing condition of affairs. As things stand we are not going forward, but backward, and in a year or so more we will be getting more or less indefinitely behind in our work. We are confronted by a serious emergency, and I certainly trust that something can be done to relieve the situation.

I have the honor to remain,
Very respectfully,

H. SNOWDEN MARSHALL,
United States Attorney.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks of this morning in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from California if he is going to extend his remarks on the subject of this bill?

Mr. RAKER. On which bill?

Mr. BORLAND. The bill which has been under discussion.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no.

Mr. BORLAND. Then I think I will object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. I objected, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. RAKER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that I may have the privilege of addressing the House now for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not want to object and I am not going to object to the gentleman from California making an address to the House for 30 minutes or as long as he pleases, and I hope he will not misunderstand the objection I have made to the insertion of this foreign matter in the RECORD. I think that the House is the guardian of the franking privilege which the Government has committed to us, and I think there has been well-merited criticism as to the circulation under the franking privilege of statements by outsiders—lawyers or others—prepared in argument upon some subject of legislation which was not submitted here in the House, but which had all the advantages of private circulation and private printing.

I think that if we allow that sort of thing to continue, either through good nature or inadvertence or otherwise, and continue to circulate over the country statements made by outsiders, arguments prepared by them and briefs prepared by them, and so forth, under the franking privilege, we will very soon have a well-merited and well-founded criticism of the entire franking privilege, a criticism that we will be unable to meet, unable to defend on the stump before the people, and a criticism that may result in curtailing what I believe to be a very valuable and very necessary privilege of the Members of Congress. The only way we can protect the franking privilege is to protect it here on the floor of the House and build up such a sentiment here that foreign matter can not go in, and that matter criticized by the public shall not go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD was established originally to report fully and accurately the debates on the floor of the House, so that we should not be subjected to the partial or garbled reports in the public press. It was formed for no other purpose, and any other purpose is foreign to it. These arguments prepared by outsiders may have value. If they have, all private means of circulation are open to them, and there is no reason why they should be put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and circulated under the franking privilege of any Member. There has been well-merited criticism of that in the past, and the only way we can justify our conduct in the future is to have the same sort of a public sentiment, irrespective of good feeling among Members, irrespective of mere rights of courtesy, that will protect the RECORD and make it what the people expect it will be, namely, a fair and accurate report of the debates of the House.

Under those circumstances I have objected, apparently capriciously, some of the Members think, to these insertions and extensions of remarks in the RECORD. I have never objected to any gentleman making a speech or inserting the product of his own intellectual effort here, whether it was in the form of a speech or in the form of a statement that he has prepared, and I have never objected, as was done here by the gentleman from Illinois, to one Member by courtesy inserting the intellectual output of a fellow Member of the House. All of those things, I think, are perfectly proper, but when we come to insert the work of outsiders we are using the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a vehicle for matter to which it ought to be closed. [Applause.]

That is the reason I objected to the request of the Member from California [Mr. RAKER]. He is one of the most intelligent, one of the most forcible, and one of the most likeable Members of the House. There is not a man that has been so devoted, in season and out of season, to the rights of the people of his district and the people of the entire State of California as the gentleman from California. He deserves the utmost commendation for his persistent work in behalf of the people of his district and the State of California, and I say that because I do not want him to misunderstand the position I have taken.

Now, I join in asking unanimous consent that the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] may have 30 minutes in which to address the House.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that after the gentleman from California proceeds for 30 minutes I may proceed for the same length of time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma couples with the request of the gentleman from California the request that if the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] gets this 30 minutes that he, the gentleman from Oklahoma, shall have 30 minutes immediately afterwards.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to couple with this unanimous-consent agreement the request that when these two gentlemen have concluded I be allowed to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMSON] couples with that a request that he be allowed to succeed the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] for 15 minutes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he is going to speak on the resolution he introduced a few days ago?

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. On the subject of the resolution.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I understood the gentleman to tell me that he would not speak on that resolution until the committee reported on it, which will probably be next week.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. I do not understand that I told the gentleman that. I did tell the gentleman that I would like to appear before the committee if it met; that if the committee did not meet and did not act, I would introduce a further resolution, which would be privileged, as this is not, and that at the end of the week I intended to call it up. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is asking unanimous consent to speak on the subject in which he is interested, and if that is so I do not see any reason why the rest of us should not have the same privilege.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I asked the gentleman if he intended to make a speech or talk on the resolution until the committee made a report, which would be in seven days from the time that it was introduced, and he told me that he would not.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield to me? The difficulty is right here, if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Certainly; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK. After we have acted upon the conference report on the tariff bill the chances are that there will be unanimous agreement here that the House will adjourn for three days at a time, and nothing shall be taken up, with the result that the probability will be that there will be no report from the committee on the gentleman's resolution.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman that if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMSON] had said to me that he did expect to address the House on this subject, I would have been prepared and would have had no objection to the gentleman addressing the House to-day. But I understood they were not going to do it, and for that reason I do not wish that the subject should come up to-day, and therefore I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] objects.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is to put this request in three sections. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is the regular order these requests?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. MURDOCK. The regular order is equivalent to an objection, is it not?

Mr. SHERLEY. Has the business of the House been finished? Is there nothing else in order before the House?

The SPEAKER. The House has been proceeding for three years, perhaps longer, on the theory that when unanimous consent is asked and nobody demands the regular order, that question should be put first.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I have heard for years the expression from the Chair—and, I think, on the part of the present Speaker—that the demand for the regular order is equivalent to an objection. Where is the difference between that and the ruling that the Chair has just made?

The SPEAKER. This unanimous-consent business seems to be a kind of thing by itself. We all talked that out here once, and the general conclusion was that when unanimous consent was asked and the regular order demanded it meant the putting of that question.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the Chair will permit, it seems to me the distinction is this, and that was the reason for my inquiry: If there is any business in order before the House, then the demand for the regular order is equivalent to an objection to a request for unanimous consent, which otherwise would be out of order. But if the House is free of any business before it, then it is true that the putting of the request for unanimous consent would be the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the contention of the gentleman is correct. There is no business now before the House except a motion to adjourn. This request is in three sections: First, the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent for 30 minutes in which to address the House, and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] asks for 30 minutes after the gentleman from California gets through, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMSON] asks for 15 minutes after the gentleman from Oklahoma gets through. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California as amended by these two other requests?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] objects.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes, not upon the subject of vine culture, as I desired, but upon the question of extending remarks in the Record, so that I may legitimately and fairly and honestly present my views on that subject in response to the statement of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]. I feel, in justice to myself, that I ought to do it, and I hope the Members will give me five minutes to express myself on that subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] that he be permitted to address the House for five minutes?

Mr. MURDOCK. To talk about what—about this practice of extending remarks?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. And confine it to that?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is, to make a speech somewhat similar to that of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; but I think I could make it fairly good.

Mr. MURDOCK. I know that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the currency bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that the gentleman has that right anyway. The Chair does not think the five legislative days have elapsed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that the time has expired.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the currency bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is recognized.

SIXTH ANNUAL CORN EXPOSITION, DALLAS, TEX.

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman from California will permit, Mr. Speaker, before he starts, I wish to say that last Thursday there was a resolution (H. Con. Res. 17) passed in the House permitting the Agricultural Department to make an exhibit at the Dallas corn exposition, and by an oversight the title of that joint resolution was not supplied. I ask unanimous consent that the proper title be inserted by the enrolling clerk, and also that a change be made in the resolving clause of the joint resolution, which now reads "the House of Representatives and the Senate," so as to make it read "the Senate and House of Representatives."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks unanimous consent that the enrolling clerk shall be directed to insert a title, and what else?

Mr. FOSTER. Also to transpose the words as they now read, "Resolved by the House of Representatives and the Senate," so as to make the resolving clause read "the Senate and House of Representatives."

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, I want to say that I have no objection to these amendments. I will not even object to the last one; but I want to say that this is one instance in which they got the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States in the proper order. I acknowledge it is not the usual order. We have fallen into a bad habit—

Mr. FOSTER. I was following the usual order.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman is following the usual order. I acknowledge that. The words in the resolving clause are not in the usual order, but they are in the proper order, and ought to be so in every one of these joint resolutions.

Mr. FOSTER. I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. PAYNE. But there would not be any legislation, by joint resolution or anything else, if the House insisted upon its proper prerogatives and placed the House of Representatives before the Senate in these enacting clauses. For that reason I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the enrolling clerk be authorized and directed to give that resolution about the Dallas corn show a title, and also to transpose the words so as to put the resolving clause into statutory form. Is there objection?

There was no objection. (H. J. Res. 132.)

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, on the question of getting unanimous consent to extend remarks in the Record, I have attempted to avoid any padding of the Record. I appreciate the fact that the matters that go into the Record ought to relate to subjects that are being discussed in Congress, or that will be discussed during the session, and there ought to be bills pending to which such remarks would be applicable. The requests that I have made are concerning matters which directly and vitally affect legislation. Knowing the rules of the House and appreciating what they are, it is necessary sometimes to extend your remarks, or you can not give expression to your views. The Members can not read what you yourself have produced or what some one else has assisted you in producing. The Record will demonstrate that beyond question. A man gets an hour here in which to present a matter of legislation and then moves the previous question, and a vote is had. The rest of us get no opportunity, and we do not want to take the time. I have taken but little time upon the floor of the House here in presenting subjects to the Members, believing that they had discussed these matters and understood them fully and thoroughly. I believe that a Member's vote is the main thing that the American people ought to rely on, whether or not you vote right, whether you vote for proper, decent, honest legislation; second, whether you are in your seat when the roll is called for a quorum; and third, whether you are here to vote when a bill passes, and keep a quorum in the House to do business.

It has been my purpose to be here, and at no time in the Sixty-second Congress was I absent on a roll call or a call for a quorum except twice, when I was sent by the Speaker to attend the funeral of a Senator from an adjoining State. During this session of Congress I have been absent but once, day before yesterday, when I was before the Committee on the Public Lands. I went there at 9 o'clock in the morning and stayed there until 6 o'clock at night for the purpose of attending to a piece of legislation in which my State and my district were interested. With legislation coming up here in this way as a necessity you are entitled to present some matters, so that the Members may have an opportunity to read them. Otherwise we should be constantly talking from the floor of the House. Talking has been my living for 30 years, and when I have had time to study up a subject, when I have thoroughly understood it, I have been able to present the subject as it appealed to me. I have never convinced a man in my life, but I have always tried to make the man who was listening believe that the view which I represented was the right view, and that in using his best judgment he would coincide with me. I have avoided much speaking here, because I know how valuable the time of the House is. The only criticism that has ever been made against me on this matter was when I once inserted a statement of where I stood on political issues, so that the public might know it and might know, if I came back to Congress, how I would vote, not how I would talk. I believe it is a duty that a man owes to his constituents not to be talking all the time. I have tried to get information by keeping still as much as I could, inserting a little matter in the Record now and then. I like to let my constituents and the Members know that I am alive and, when the time comes, let them know how I vote on these questions. I do not want to pad the Record.

Mr. GOOD. I should like to ask the gentleman if he has ever presented this subject to the Democratic caucus of the House, in order that he might convince them and therefore get some remedy?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, we did not have to present it to the Democratic caucus or the Democratic House. It was not even necessary. It slipped in in the Senate, without a hearing, without an opportunity to be heard. That is what is the matter. The Democratic caucus is all right. Every member of it is unanimous on the proposition, and unless the gentleman has some literature which the rest of us have been unable to get, that is all there is to it. That is the situation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

MISS RHETTA WILLIAMS.

Mr. BELL of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 264.

Resolved, etc., That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Miss Rhetta Williams the sum of $125 for services rendered during the month of September, 1913, as clerk of Hon. S. A. RODDENBERRY, late a Member of the House from the second congressional district of the State of Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the usual resolution?

Mr. BELL of Georgia. It is.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE SEABORN ANDERSON RODDENBERRY.

Mr. BELL of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolutions, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 265.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. SEABORN ANDERSON RODDENBERRY, a Representative from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That a committee of 18 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed the following committee to attend the funeral of the late Representative:

Mr. BARTLETT, Mr. ADAMSON, Mr. HUGHES of Georgia, Mr. LEE of Georgia, Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. WALKER, Mr. CRISP, Mr. EDWARDS, Mr. TRIBBLE, Mr. HOWARD, Mr. BELL of Georgia, Mr. HILL, Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina, Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska, Mr. McLAUGHLIN, Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan, Mr. MOORE, and Mr. WILLIS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the other resolution. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to; and accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until Monday, September 29, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on examination of Big Black River, Miss., from its mouth to the town of West (H. Doc. No. 242); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on examination of reservoirs at headwaters of Mississippi River, with a view to the construction of locks in the dams heretofore built at Pokegama, Winnibigoshish, and Leech Lakes, in the State of Minnesota (H. Doc. No. 243); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustration.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7186) granting an increase of pension to Nazaire Beaupre; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 895) granting an increase of pension to Theodore R. Kuntz; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 8601) providing for second homestead and desert-land entries; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 8602) to levy an excise tax upon each sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell any cotton for future delivery in the future contract market at or on or in any cotton exchange, board of trade, or other similar place, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CLAYTON: A bill (H. R. 8603) providing for compensation of clerks of United States district courts, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SABATH: A bill (H. R. 8604) to authorize the United States Government to take over and secure ownership of all express, telegraph, and telephone companies; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LOGUE: A bill (H. R. 8605) to increase the pensions of those who have lost limbs or have been totally disabled in the same in the military or naval service of the United States; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REILLY of Connecticut (by request): A bill (H. R. 8606) to create a United States medical licensing board; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NORTON: A bill (H. R. 8607) to provide an enlarged homestead; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8608) to amend section 99 of the Judicial Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8609) providing for homestead and desert-land entries for such persons as shall have lost, forfeited, or abandoned their former entries; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. GUERNSEY: A bill (H. R. 8610) providing for certain regulations to the business of commission merchants engaged in interstate commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ROGERS: A bill (H. R. 8611) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a new public building at Lowell, Mass., and also for the sale of the present post-office building and its site; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BROUSSARD: Resolution (H. Res. 260) placing clerks of expenditure committees on the session roll; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey: Resolution (H. Res. 262) directing the Judiciary Committee to investigate the workings of the Beef Trust; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. ESTOPINAL: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 133) to continue in full force and effect until July 1, 1914, certain provisions of section 216 of the act approved August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LOGUE: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 134) for the appointment of a joint committee from House and Senate to attend Congress Hall celebration in Philadelphia in October, 1913; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BALTZ: A bill (H. R. 8613) granting a pension to Louisa Merkel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLARK of Florida: A bill (H. R. 8614) granting an increase of pension to William H. Hall; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DEITRICK: A bill (H. R. 8615) for the relief of Hiram D. Rogers; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ESCH: A bill (H. R. 8616) granting an increase of pension to Amos C. Carter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FESS: A bill (H. R. 8617) granting a pension to Abraham Kauffmann; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8618) granting an increase of pension to James B. Wallace; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRAY: A bill (H. R. 8619) to correct the military record of Henry K. Stephens; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAMILL: A bill (H. R. 8620) for the relief of Anton Basting; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HENSLEY: A bill (H. R. 8621) granting an increase of pension to Richard T. Turner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LINDQUIST: A bill (H. R. 8622) granting an increase of pension to Chauncey Pickell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma: A bill (H. R. 8623) granting a pension to Sarah A. Westerman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8624) granting an increase of pension to Childy Bridwell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8625) granting an increase of pension to John R. Coykendall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8626) granting an increase of pension to Daniel Bales; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PATTON of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 8627) granting a pension to Daniel Michael; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 8628) granting a pension to Fannie Montgomery; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8629) granting an increase of pension to Charles Dailey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMALL: A bill (H. R. 8630) granting a pension to John Ward; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 8631) granting a pension to Emeline Buzzard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STONE: A bill (H. R. 8632) granting a pension to Ida E. Markwood; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TEMPLE: A bill (H. R. 8633) granting a pension to William J. Brown; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8634) granting a pension to Mary Pollock; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8635) granting a pension to Katy E. Reed; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8636) granting a pension to Phila L. McIlvaine; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8637) granting a pension to William Redmond; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8638) granting a pension to Henry Meiners; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COPLEY: Resolution (H. Res. 266) providing for the payment of mileage to John Lambert, of Joliet, Ill., from Joliet, Ill., to Washington, D. C., and return, 1,700 miles, at 5 cents per mile, in answer to a subpoena issued by the committee, of which Hon. AUGUSTUS O. STANLEY was chairman, to investigate violations of the antitrust act; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. HEFLIN: Resolution (H. Res. 263) authorizing appointment of assistant foreman of folding room; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of the Columbia Woman's Literary Club, of Dundee, Ill., favoring an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting polygamy, etc.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), petition of D. T. Blodgett, of Des Moines, Iowa, relative to the impeachment of Justice Willis Van Deventer, of the Supreme Court of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Evidence to accompany the bill (H. R. 8482) for the relief of Oscar D. Welker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BELL of California: Memorial of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce asking for an investigation of the need for aids to navigation in Alaskan waters; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. BORLAND: Memorial of both houses of the Common Council of Kansas City, Mo., favoring Federal ownership of the telephone and telegraph; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. COPLEY: Petition of sundry citizens of Elgin, Ill., and of the eleventh congressional district of Illinois, praying that a convention be called for the purpose of proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States whereby polygamy shall be prohibited; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ESCH: Memorial of the La Crosse (Wis.) Board of Trade, favoring ownership by the United States of buildings for foreign representatives; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HAYES: Petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., protesting against the passage of a currency bill during this special session of Congress; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Oakland, Cal., favoring a navy for Pacific coast defense; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. KAHN: Memorials of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, of San Francisco, Cal., requesting that the final enactment of the currency bill be put over to a later session of Congress, so that it may be considered more fully; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, memorials of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, of San Francisco, and the Oakland Chamber of Commerce, of Oakland, Cal., favoring the construction of four battleships and the formation of a naval reserve; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. KONOP: Memorial of the La Crosse Board of Trade, of La Crosse, Wis., relative to American embassy buildings; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. LINDQUIST: Petition of W. S. Hipkins and others, of Mecosta, Mich., protesting against the passage of Senate bill 752, for the proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RAKER: Papers to accompany bill (H. R. 1516) for the relief of Thomas F. Howell; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, memorial of the Oleta Woman's Equal Suffrage Club, of Oleta, Cal., favoring a committee on equal suffrage of the House; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. STEPHENS of California: Petition of the board of directors of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, favoring the formation of a naval reserve and the construction of four battleships; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of the Alhambra Chamber of Commerce, of Alhambra, Cal., favoring the construction of four battleships and the formation of a naval reserve; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of the Los Angeles Wholesale Board of Trade, favoring the passage of bills for 1-cent letter postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of the board of directors of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, favoring an investigation of the wreck of the steamship State of California in Gambier Bay, southwestern Alaska; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

SENATE.

MONDAY, September 29, 1913.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.
Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.
The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

FEDERAL BUILDING AT CHARLESTON, W. VA. (S. DOC. NO. 198).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an item of appropriation in connection with the rental of temporary quarters at Charleston, W. Va., pending the completion of the extension to the post-office and courthouse building at that point, $5,500, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 8364) to authorize the President to provide a method for opening lands restored from reservation or withdrawal, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I send to the desk a telegram from James M. Thomson, publisher of the New Orleans Item, which I desire to have read for the information of the Senate.

There being no objection, the telegram was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, La., September 25, 1913.

WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I urge on you, in the interest of cotton planters and legitimate dealers in cotton, that you aid in passage of Smith-Lever amendment to the Clarke amendment on cotton. The Clarke bill would probably work great demoralization to cotton prices, depreciate the values of cotton lands, and would greatly increase the hazard of financing cotton to the banks. It would tend to transfer control of cotton market to Europe, which is a buying and not a selling market.

JAMES M. THOMSON,
Publisher New Orleans Item.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan presented a petition of the Board of Commerce of Detroit, Mich., praying for the adoption of 1-cent letter postage, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of Camp Sitka, No. 6, Arctic Brotherhood, Territory of Alaska, praying that an appropriation of $5,000 be made for the repair, restoration, and improvement of the Sitka National Monument and the relics of aboriginal life which it contains, which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a petition of the Michigan State Association of Ginseng Growers, praying that an appropriation of $5,000 be made to investigate the ginseng disease, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Mayville, Vassar, Adrian, Kalamazoo, Flint, Saginaw, Edmore, McBrides, Alma, Hemlock, Grand Rapids, St. Louis, Alden, Ithaca, Ashley, North Star, Allegan, Cass City, Leslie, Stockbridge, Shelby, Battle Creek, Pompeii, Harris, Carney, Stephenson, Urbondale, Denver Center, Robinson, Allendale, Monterey, Frankfort, Beulah, Benzonia, Sault Ste. Marie, Elwell, Riverdale, Shepherd, Grand Ledge, Mulliken, Lansing, Lake George, Clare, Cedar Lake, St. Charles, Sandusky, Carsonville, Carson City, New Haven Center, Dimondale, Eaton Rapids, St. Johns, Owosso, Elsie, Greenville, Gowen, Ann Arbor, Alpena, Spruce, Ossineke, Millington, Otter Lake, Fostoria, Otisville, Memphis, Smiths Creek, Mapleton, Stambaugh, Iron River, Holly, De Witt, Byron Center, Greenbush, Bath, and Flushing, all in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PENROSE presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation making it unlawful for individuals, corporations, or associations to employ armed men or bodies of armed men on their premises for any purpose, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation providing additional aids to navigation in Alaskan waters, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the organization of a naval reserve and for the construction of four new battleships, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. BRISTOW. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably without amendment Senate resolution 183, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, which had been submitted by Mr. BRISTOW on the 25th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That Senator JOSEPH L. BRISTOW be, and he hereby is, authorized to employ a stenographer at a salary of $1,200 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate for a period of 30 days from and including September 28, 1913.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. This resolution arises from the fact that the regular stenographer to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] was shot, and by reason of it he has been on the sick list. It is impossible for the Senator from Kansas to get along without this assistant, and therefore the committee has deemed it proper and right to extend this temporary employment for another month, at which time it is hoped that the regular stenographer will be prepared to go on with the duties of his office.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 3147) to amend an act to prevent the disclosure of national-defense secrets, approved March 3, 1911; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 3148) to provide for the safety of life on navigable waters under the jurisdiction of the United States during Coast Artillery target practice; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan:

A bill (S. 3149) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Moses Chauncey (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3150) granting an increase of pension to Charles M. Sanderson; and

A bill (S. 3151) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Forbes; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 3152) to grant an honorable discharge to William A. Shawda; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3153) to provide that commissioned chiefs of the United States Navy now on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall, as an equitable reward for said service, receive the rank and pay of lieutenant of the United States Navy, retired (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 3154) granting a pension to Anna B. McCrillis; and

A bill (S. 3155) granting an increase of pension to William Feight; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 3156) granting a pension to William M. Hiatt (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment providing for the pay of stenographers from and after December 1, 1913, at the rate of $1,200 per annum for Senators having less than three employees in connection with their official work, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SWANSON submitted an amendment providing that the post-office building heretofore authorized at Wytheville, Va., shall be so constructed as to provide quarters for all governmental purposes in that city, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for investigating and reporting to Congress a suitable design for a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from the city of Washington to a point at or near the Arlington estate in the State of Virginia, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—WILLIAM H. SOUTHWELL.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Michigan, it was Ordered, That the papers in the pension claim of William H. Southwell (S. 1998), Sixty-third Congress, first session, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—RACHEL COLE.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Michigan, it was Ordered, That the papers in the pension case of Rachel Cole (S. 7127), Sixty-second Congress, second session, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

NATIONAL BANKING LAWS (S. DOC. NO. 197).

Mr. OWEN. I ask that 1,000 copies of Senate Document No. 733, Sixtieth Congress, second session, being the national-bank act as amended and other laws relating to national banks, be printed.

There being no objection, the order was agreed to, and it was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That 1,000 copies of Senate Document No. 733, Sixtieth Congress, second session, be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

ADDRESS OF HON. SAMUEL W. M'CALL (S. DOC. NO. 199).

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document the very instructive address by Hon. Samuel W. McCall, a former Member of Congress from Massachusetts, delivered August 28, 1913, at Franklin, N. H., upon the occasion of the celebration of the birthday of Daniel Webster.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order to print will be entered.

ADJOURNMENT TO WEDNESDAY.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF AGRICULTURE AT ROME (S. DOC. NO. 196).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate and the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of Congress the report of the delegates of the United States, who were appointed under the authority of Congress to attend the general assembly of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome in May, 1913.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 29, 1913.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that the message and report be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The usual number will be printed under the rule. I also ask that 500 additional copies be ordered printed by the Senate for the use of Mr. David Lubin, the American delegate to the International Institute of Agriculture. He has requested that this number be printed in addition to the usual number.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The message and report will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and printed. The Senator from Florida asks that 500 additional copies be ordered printed for the purpose he has stated. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 18 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE RODDENBERRY, OF GEORGIA.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. SEABORN ANDERSON RODDENBERRY, late a Representative from the State of Georgia, and transmitted resolutions of the House thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
September 27, 1913.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. SEABORN ANDERSON RODDENBERRY, a Representative from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That a committee of 18 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect, this House do now adjourn.

In accordance with the foregoing resolution the Speaker appointed as the committee on the part of the House the following Members: Mr. BARTLETT, Mr. ADAMSON, Mr. HUGHES of Georgia, Mr. LEE of Georgia, Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. WALKER, Mr. CRISP, Mr. EDWARDS, Mr. TRIBBLE, Mr. HOWARD, Mr. BELL of Georgia, Mr. HILL, Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina, Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska, Mr. McLAUGHLIN, Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan, Mr. MOORE, and Mr. WILLIS.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, in the necessary absence of the Senators from Georgia, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask for their present consideration.

The resolutions (S. Res. 186) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. SEABORN ANDERSON RODDENBERRY, late a Representative from the State of Georgia, which death occurred on September 26, 1913.

Resolved, That the action of the Vice President in appointing a committee of seven Senators, to-wit, Mr. BACON, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey, Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. GRONNA, and Mr. BORAH to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to attend the funeral of the deceased, at Thomasville, Ga., be hereby approved.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Mr. KERN. I move, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to, and (at 12 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Wednesday, October 1, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate September 29, 1913.

APPOINTMENT IN THE ARMY.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

Robert Duncan Brown, of Tennessee, ensign, United States Navy, to be second lieutenant in the Coast Artillery Corps with rank from August 10, 1913.

APPOINTMENT IN THE NAVY.

Roscoe M. Waterhouse, a citizen of Massachusetts, to be an assistant surgeon in the Medical Reserve Corps of the Navy from the 24th day of September, 1913.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate September 29, 1913.

CONSUL GENERAL.

Robert E. Mansfield to be consul general at Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada.

CONSUL.

Roger Culver Tredwell to be consul at Bristol, England.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Byron R. Newton to be Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

ASSISTANT APPRAISER OF MERCHANDISE.

Bernard Herstein to be assistant appraiser of merchandise in the district of New York, N. Y.

RECEIVERS OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

D. F. Burkholder to be receiver of public moneys at Gregory, S. Dak.

Charles A. Mansfield to be receiver of public moneys at Williston, N. Dak.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT JUDGE.

Henry Wade Rogers to be United States circuit judge, second circuit.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS.

Clay Allen to be United States attorney for the western district of Washington.

Hooper Alexander to be United States attorney, northern district of Georgia.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Lieut. Commander Raymond Stone to be a commander.

Lieut. Commander Hutch I. Cone to be a commander.

Lieut. Merlyn G. Cook to be a lieutenant commander.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) George H. Bowdye to be a lieutenant.

Ensign Nelson W. Pickering to be a lieutenant (junior grade).

Midshipman Elmer L. Woodside to be an ensign.

Midshipman Leonard R. Agrell to be an ensign.

The following named assistant paymasters to be passed assistant paymasters:

George S. Wood.
Alonzo G. Hearne.
Hervey B. Ransdell.
Henry R. Snyder.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

James Y. Callahan to be register of the land office at Woodward, Okla.

POSTMASTERS.

ARIZONA.

Paul A. Smith, Tombstone.

CALIFORNIA.

C. H. Bronaugh, Ceres.

NEBRASKA.

R. E. Harmon, Auburn.

OHIO.

T. H. Finefrock, Prospect.

O. D. Kemper, Jefferson.

John Palsgrove, Canal Winchester.

WASHINGTON.

C. M. Durland, Colville.

Joseph O'Neill, Castlerock.

Edwin Schauble, Kalama.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, September 29, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty Father, let Thy spirit come into our hearts and make us tractable to its holy influence, that our thoughts may be in consonance with Thy thoughts and our ways with Thy ways inasmuch as we are able to apprehend Thy thoughts and understand Thy plans and purposes, that we may fulfill our appointed destiny as individuals and leave behind us a record which those who shall come after us may follow with impunity, and to Thee we will ascribe all praise in the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, September 27, 1913, was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. HOXWORTH was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness in family.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I expect to call up the conference report on the tariff bill to-morrow to be acted upon, and in order that we may not have any later session than necessary I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if he expects to take a vote on the conference report to-morrow?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. MURDOCK. The idea of meeting earlier is to give more time for discussion?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, there will be two propositions up, and we will arrange time for discussion to-morrow morning, and I apprehend under the best circumstances the House may have a late session, and in order not to keep Members here later than necessary I ask that we meet at 11 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if he has in mind the time for debate on the conference report which he proposes to allow, subject, of course, to the previous question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will be glad to take that up to-morrow with the gentleman. I think we can reach an agreement about it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri reserves the right to object.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the vote should be taken upon the conference report to-morrow, as the gentleman now says, will it be necessary to hold a quorum here for a time after action upon the bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think Members of the House should leave until after the Senate has acted upon the bill. We can not tell what conditions may be in the Senate.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I want to state to the gentleman from Alabama that I am keenly interested in the cotton-tax amendment on the tariff bill, and I want to make a few remarks on the bill along that line either to-day or to-morrow—I do not care particularly which—and I wondered whether the gentleman—

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope there will not be any extended debate to-morrow, but if the gentleman would like to speak to-day—

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield until I ask unanimous consent for that purpose?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, let me get in the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the House meeting at 11 o'clock to-morrow? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the conferees on the part of the House on H. R. 3321, the tariff bill, I desire to make a report of the majority of the conferees on all items in the bill except Senate amendment 609, which is known as the Clarke amendment, relating to the tax on cotton futures. There is a complete agreement on all the other items in the bill except Senate amendment 609. I desire to present for printing the conference report and the statement on the part of the managers of the House, and to say that after the conference report has been acted upon I expect to take up for action the amendment of the Senate relating to cotton futures.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama presents a conference report and statement on the tariff bill to be printed under the rule.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will it be possible to have the conference report printed as a document? It will be somewhat easier to handle in that form.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The tariff bill has been printed with the amendments, showing the action of the conferees, and there are 500 copies of that in the hands of the Doorkeeper of the House, and therefore he has one copy for each Member who applies for it.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is the explanation I wanted to get.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And the conference report will be printed separately.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Conference report on the bill H. R. 3321, an act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] desire to address the House this morning before we adjourn. And as I understand there is no more business, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER] may address the House for 25 minutes and Mr. FERRIS, for how long?

Mr. FERRIS. You might put it at 25 minutes, but I do not think I will use it all.

The SPEAKER. What is the request?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER] address the House for 25 minutes and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] may address the House for 25 minutes, and that at the end of that time the House will stand adjourned.

Mr. MURDOCK. I was going to suggest to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], following the custom that is followed here, that the gentlemen indicate what they are to speak upon.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think one gentleman wants to speak on cotton futures and the other on the tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER] shall have leave to address the House for 25 minutes, to be followed by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] for 25 minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On September 16, 1913:

H. J. Res. 130. Joint resolution to provide for the relief and transportation of destitute American citizens in Mexico; and

H. R. 3406. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Sabine River at Orange, Tex.

On September 18, 1913:

H. R. 4937. An act extending to the port of Dallas, Tex., the privileges of section 7 of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement; and

H. R. 7595. An act providing for the free importation of articles intended for foreign buildings and exhibits at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, and for the protection of foreign exhibitors.

REPORT OF DELEGATES TO INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF AGRICULTURE (S. DOC. NO. 196).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of Congress the report of the delegates of the United States who were appointed under the authority of Congress to attend the general assembly of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome in May, 1913.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 29, 1913.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, for information, how many copies of that report will be printed?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not answer that question, but would ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing [Mr. BARNHART]. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] wants to know how many copies of the document accompanying the President's message will be printed under the rules.

Mr. BARNHART. That would depend on what it would cost. The House can not print a document at a cost of more than $500 without passing a concurrent resolution.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Has the committee any authority without a concurrent resolution to order a certain number of them printed?

Mr. BARNHART. The joint committee can without a concurrent resolution order $500 worth printed if there has already been a print of the document.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Can the gentleman state if it is the intention of the committee to order $500 worth of this report of the commission printed?

Mr. BARNHART. It has not had any request yet. It would not do it unless it had a request.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then it would require a concurrent resolution?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. BATHRICK. The chairman of the Committee on Printing states that no copies of this report will be printed, as I understand it, unless there is a request to have them printed. Is that the statement?

Mr. BARNHART. I do not understand. Has there already been a print of the document?

The SPEAKER. It was just sent in this minute.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It just came in accompanying a message of the President.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I could not answer that any more definitely without ascertaining what the cost of the printing would be.

Mr. BATHRICK. I wish to ascertain whether it is necessary to have a motion put to the House in order to have a certain number printed?

Mr. BARNHART. I think it would be better.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move that 1,000 copies of the report of the agricultural commission be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK] asks unanimous consent that 1,000 copies of this report be printed. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Reserving the right to object, it is not customary to make such orders, and until the Committee on Printing has had an opportunity to examine the report I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] objects.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER] may have 25 minutes in which to address the House, that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] may have 25 minutes in which to address the House, and that at the conclusion of that time the House shall stand adjourned.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER] shall have leave to address the House for 25 minutes, and, following that, that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] shall have leave to address the House for 25 minutes, and that at the end of that time the House shall stand adjourned. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask what is the subject?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. One gentleman wants to speak on cotton futures, and the other gentleman wants to make a speech in reference to tariff matters.

Mr. PAYNE. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] objects.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, pursuant to the order previously made, until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow, Tuesday, September 30, 1913.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the president of the United States Civil Service Commission, transmitting schedules of useless papers in the files of the district secretaries of the commission which are not needed in the transaction of public business and are of no permanent value or historical interest (H. Doc. No. 245), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FERRIS: A bill (H. R. 8612) authorizing the commissioners of Caddo County, Okla., to purchase an 80-acre tract of unused remnant ceded lands for fairground and park purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8639) to provide for a permanent, lasting, and uniform system of improvement of public highways and post roads, and providing how the State and Nation may act in conjunction and by mutual contribution bring about the desired end, and distribute the surplus in the Treasury pro rata each year among the States for that purpose; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8640) to establish an agricultural experiment station in the sixth congressional district of Oklahoma; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8641) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Oklahoma; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8642) to prevent gambling in cotton and grain futures, and providing penalties for the violation thereof; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8643) to repeal the duty on lumber; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CARY: A bill (H. R. 8644) to transfer the Northwestern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to the War Department; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DEITRICK: A bill (H. R. 8645) to provide for a survey of the Mystic River, Mass.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. ANDERSON: Resolution (H. Res. 267) to amend paragraph 9 of Rule XVI of the rules of the Sixty-third Congress; to the Committee on Rules.

Also, resolution (H. Res. 268) to amend Rule XIII of the rules of the Sixty-third Congress; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDERSON: A bill (H. R. 8646) granting an increase of pension to Ole Knudson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ANTHONY: A bill (H. R. 8647) granting an increase of pension to Philemel B. McFadden; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COX: A bill (H. R. 8648) to correct the military record of John F. Havens; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DICKINSON: A bill (H. R. 8649) granting a pension to James Y. Whitsett; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DRISCOLL: A bill (H. R. 8650) granting an increase of pension to Charles Muller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ESCH: A bill (H. R. 8651) granting an increase of pension to Henry E. Pettit; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 8652) restoring the name of Willis D. Miller to the pension roll; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland: A bill (H. R. 8653) granting a pension to Marian Eva Keyes; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TAGGART: A bill (H. R. 8654) granting an increase of pension to Agnes White; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THACHER: A bill (H. R. 8655) to place the name of ex-First Lieut. Thomas H. Nolan upon the unlimited retired list of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8656) to place the name of ex-Mate Ansel A. Delano, United States Navy, upon the unlimited retired list of the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDERSON: Papers to accompany a bill granting an increase of pension to Ole Knudson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARY: Petition of La Crosse Board of Trade, La Crosse, Wis., favoring the passage of legislation for the improvement of the foreign embassy and consular service; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of the Oshkosh Clearing House Association and other banks of the Fox River Valley, Wis., suggesting certain changes relative to the banking and currency bill; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. COOPER: Petition of the Milwaukee Local No. 1053, of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, Milwaukee, Wis., favoring the passage of legislation granting the right of suffrage to the residents of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. ESCH: Papers to accompany a bill granting an increase of pension to Henry E. Pettit; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FARR: Petition of Albert Watson and others, of Scranton, Pa., protesting against the abolishment of civil service in the income-tax provision; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petitions of sundry citizens of Scranton and Philadelphia, Pa., protesting against placing steel-engraved forms, etc., on the free list; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND: Petition of the Chamber of Commerce, Oakland, Cal., favoring the passage of legislation for the construction of four new battleships and the formation of a naval reserve; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. RAKER: Petition of the San Francisco (Cal.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring the passage of S. 596, relative to the reexportation of goods in bond; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SCULLY: Petitions of J. L. Monsky, of Red Bank, and Zucker, Steiner & Co., of Newark, N. J., and W. A. French Co., protesting against 25 cents charge for rectifiers and wholesale liquor dealers' stamps; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, September 30, 1913.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, profoundly conscious of the duality of our nature, that down deep in the heart is the conflict 'twixt evil and good, the false and the true, the animal and the spiritual, each seeking supremacy, deliver us we beseech Thee from the one and help us to make dominant the other, putting under our feet the evil, emphasizing the good, crushing the false, exalting the true, holding back the malevolent, putting forward the benevolent; eliminating selfish ambitions and ignoble desires; rising ever to the spirit of altruism, that we may grow in favor with Thee and with our fellow men, and satisfy the demands of our conscience for "the spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together." Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. BOOHER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska, for two weeks, on account of death in his family.

To Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, for eight days, on account of death in his family.

To Mr. KENT, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. SCOTT, for 30 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas, indefinitely, on account of serious illness in his family.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. TAYLOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the currency.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TAYLOR] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK. Upon what subject?

Mr. TAYLOR of New York. The currency.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—JOHN E. TEVENDALE.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted Mr. BREMNER to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of John E. Tevendale (H. R. 15994, 62d Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. SEABORN ANDERSON RODDENBERRY, late a Representative from the State of Georgia, which death occurred on September 26, 1913.

Resolved, That the action of the Vice President in appointing a committee of seven Senators, to wit, Mr. BACON, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey, Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. GRONNA, and Mr. BORAH, to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased at Thomasville, Ga., be hereby approved.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on H. R. 3321, the tariff bill.

Before entering into the discussion of the subject I would like to see if we can reach an agreement with the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] in reference to the time for debate on the report and on the amendment that is in disagreement.

Mr. PAYNE. What does the gentleman propose?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would propose a very short time, but I would like to know what the gentleman desires.

Mr. PAYNE. Has the gentleman any objection to my stating what he has proposed in private conversation?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly not.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman in private conversation has proposed four hours' time, reminding me of a precedent set four years ago in that respect, which he seems anxious to follow. If I have done anything bad, the gentleman always goes in that direction, but he sometimes fails to follow the good that we have done. [Laughter.] The circumstances now are a little different. Here is a third party demanding a part of my time. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] seems to think that the bill will not be properly passed unless he has half an hour.

Mr. MURDOCK. I think the debate will be more illuminating than it was four years ago, when we had six hours' time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Four hours.

Mr. PAYNE. We had four hours.

Mr. MURDOCK. My recollection is that the House met at 10 o'clock in the morning and that the special rule provided that we should vote on the bill at 8 o'clock.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We had four hours' debate. I do not know how much time we took on other things.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that he make it five hours, and give me two hours and a half, so that I can accommodate the gentleman from Kansas with half an hour and still have two hours.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that four years ago the House was very much more evenly divided than it is now, when one-third of the House is on that side and two-thirds on this side. If it is agreeable to both gentlemen, I am willing to make the time four hours and a half.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is, with the understanding that I shall have 30 minutes of that time?

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose the gentleman from Kansas will be willing to be curtailed a little and take 25 minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK. No; I think not.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman will not hold me up on that.

Mr. MURDOCK. I will not hold the gentleman up. If the gentleman will listen to me, I have a mathematical basis for my claim. That is 135 minutes, and one-fifth of that is, I think, 27 minutes, so the gentleman's gratuity to me is only 3 minutes. I think he has that much kindness in his heart.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman seems to be incorrigible, and this seems to be the best I can get. So far as I am concerned I am willing, if the gentleman from Alabama will make the request for unanimous consent, that the time be fixed now at four hours and a half.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understand that arrangement is agreeable to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. That is, two hours and a half on either side and 30 minutes to the Republican side to grant to me?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; four hours and a half of debate on the conference report, one-half of the time to go to that side of the House; the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to grant the gentleman from Kansas 30 minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of us who are interested in the so-called cotton-future amendment, and I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if it is his expectation to have any additional time for the discussion of that proposition, aside from these four hours and a half?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I was about to ask, and I will ask it now, for two hours' time on the cotton-future amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. In addition to the four hours and a half on the conference report?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. To be divided in what way?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I to have control of one half of the time and whoever is in opposition to the amendment to control the other half. I do not know whether the gentleman from New York is opposed to it or not.

Mr. SIMS. Some one who is opposed to it will have control of the opposition?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. I think I shall be opposed to it, from the general tenor of what I hear it is. I have not yet seen a copy of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is printed and may be obtained from the document room.

Mr. MURDOCK. There will be opposition, surely.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the conference report on the tariff bill is reported there be four hours and a half of debate on the conference report, one-half of the time to be controlled by myself, one-half of the time by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], with the understanding that he yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], at the end of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered; and in connection with that I also ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the vote on the conference report it shall be in order to offer a substitute to the Senate amendment numbered 609, known as the Clarke amendment, and that there shall be two hours' debate on the Clarke amendment substitute, at the end of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. May I suggest to the gentleman that instead of a substitute the motion will be to concur in the amendment with an amendment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I mean to concur with an amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest to the gentleman that he does not have to have unanimous consent for that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know; but I am asking unanimous consent to close debate upon it at the end of that time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to know definitely what the last request of the gentleman from Alabama is.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The last request is that after the conference report is voted on, there shall be two hours of debate on the Clarke amendment and a motion to concur with an amendment, at the end of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered on all pending motions on the amendment 609.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if the adoption of his unanimous-consent agreement would not limit the amendment to the one proposed by the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I take it that whether this agreement is entered into or not, there will be a limitation upon it. As I understand the parliamentary situation, I will have a right to move to concur with an amendment, and then the only votes that could be had would be, first, on the proposition to concur with an amendment and, next, if that be defeated, on the proposition to concur, and then if that be defeated, there would be nothing for the House to do but to disagree.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. I have not had the understanding of the situation that the gentleman from Alabama has. I want to ask the Chair if this unanimous consent is agreed to, when the gentleman from Alabama moves to recede and concur with an amendment, would it not then be in order to move to recede and concur, and would not that latter motion be a preferential motion?

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that if the request of the gentleman from Alabama is agreed to, it would cut out all the other motions.

Mr. WINGO. That is my object in asking.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to cut out the gentleman's rights at all.

Mr. WINGO. Let me suggest this to the gentleman: Suppose you reach an agreement upon the time—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state this, as his reply to the gentleman may not have been sufficient, when they reach that stage a motion to recede and concur takes precedence of a motion to recede and concur with an amendment. Now, what the Chair wants to know is—

Mr. GARNER. Is not the Chair reversing the universal rule?

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair has stated it exactly as it is. What the Chair wanted to know, so that the House would know what it was doing, is whether this request of the gentleman from Alabama cuts out the ordinary motion?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to ask the Chair to rule on that at this time. I merely ask that debate on the Clarke amendment and motions in relation thereto shall be limited to two hours, to be divided between the gentlemen who are in favor and opposed to the proposition, and at the end of the two hours that the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for two things—first, that after the conference report is read debate shall begin and run for four and a half hours, half the time to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], with the subunderstanding that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] shall have 30 minutes to dispose of as he pleases. In addition to that the gentleman from Alabama asks after the vote is had on the conference report that then there shall be two hours' debate on the cotton amendment. Is that the request of the gentleman?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is the request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And the previous question shall be ordered at the end of the debate.

The SPEAKER. And the previous question shall be considered as ordered at the end of the four and a half hours.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—

The SPEAKER. And also at the end of the two hours?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. That the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, does not that cut out the offering of amendments—I mean in regard to the Clarke amendment? Have not we the right to perfect the Clarke amendment by offering a substitute thereto?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state if the previous question is ordered at the end of the two hours that is the end of it. Now, does the gentleman from Alabama desire—

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, with the motion pending to concur in the Clarke amendment with an amendment, we may have two hours' debate, and at the end of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request, and I ask that the other request be put.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that after the conference report is read there shall be four and a half hours of debate on the conference report, one half to be controlled by himself, the other half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], with the understanding that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] shall control 30 minutes of the time of the gentleman from New York, and that at the end of the four and a half hours the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEFLIN. If unanimous consent is given now for only four and a half hours' debate on the conference report, does that include the Clarke amendment and all?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman has withdrawn his request for two hours' debate on that, and now at the end of four hours and a half the vote is to be had. There will be no time for discussion.

The SPEAKER. The vote is to be had on the conference report. This request of the gentleman from Alabama has nothing on earth to do with the Clarke amendment, or any other.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then there will be time enough to discuss that?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is what I want to know.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the statement in lieu of the report. It is more expressive.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 86).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 8, 25, 31, 34, 42, 44, 45, 46, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 68, 80, 81, 82, 83, 86, 99, 100, 101, 102, 115, 116, 117, 129, 133, 137, 138, 143, 147, 152, 158, 172, 176, 177, 183, 188, 189, 190, 192, 200, 203, 206, 208, 209, 219, 220, 227, 231, 235, 246, 248, 249, 250, 251, 253, 257, 259, 262, 263, 267, 272, 273, 274, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 289, 290, 291, 305, 306, 307, 308, 313, 329, 332, 333, 336, 340, 348, 359, 360, 362, 366, 372, 388, 396, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 408, 409, 413, 414, 418, 419, 426, 433, 437, 444, 445, 448, 452, 463, 474, 475, 487, 488, 493, 496, 501, 508, 524, 540, 565, 573, 574, 593, 594, 595, 596, 606, 612, 613, 614, 615, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 633, 640, 645, 647, 650, 652, 662, 663, and 666.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 29, 30, 32, 33, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 47, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 65, 67, 69, 70, 71, 72, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 84, 85, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 98, 104, 105, 106, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 127, 128, 130, 131, 132, 134, 135, 136, 139, 140, 141, 144, 145, 146, 148, 149, 150, 151, 153, 155, 156, 157, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 173, 174, 178, 179, 181, 182, 184, 185, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 201, 202, 204, 205, 207, 210, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 228, 229, 230, 232, 233, 234, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 242, 243, 244, 245, 247, 252, 260, 261, 264, 265, 266, 271, 275, 276, 279, 286, 287, 288, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 299, 300, 302, 303, 304, 309, 311, 312, 314, 315, 316, 317, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 330, 331, 334, 335, 337, 338, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 364, 365, 368, 370, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 380, 381, 383, 384, 387, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 398, 406, 407, 410, 411, 412, 415, 416, 417, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 434, 435, 436, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 446, 447, 449, 450, 451, 453, 454, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 473, 476, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 489, 490, 492, 494, 495, 497, 498, 499, 500, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 510, 511, 512, 513, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 521, 522, 523, 525, 526, 527, 528, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 541, 543, 544, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 572, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 587, 589, 590, 591, 592, 600, 601, 602, 604, 605, 607, 610, 611, 617, 625, 626, 627, 631, 632, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 643, 644, 646, 651, 653, 654, 658, 660, 661, 664, 665, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, and 676; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "7" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "6"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "15" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "12"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "5" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "10"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert on page 16 of the bill, line 5, after the word "refined," the following: "and chlorate of"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "pound" where it first occurs, strike out the comma and the words "and not above 75 cents per pound"; in lines 4 and 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "valorem," strike out the semicolon and the following: "valued above 75 cents per pound, 20 per cent ad valorem"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "not specially provided for in this section,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert, on page 21 of the bill, line 14, after the word "valorem," the following: "manufactures of carbon not specially provided for in this section, 20 per cent ad valorem"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "for" of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "in this section"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 64: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 26 of the bill, line 9, after the word "enamel" and the comma, insert the following: "not specially provided for in this section,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "otherwise" in the matter inserted by said amendment and insert after the word "for" the following: "in this section"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the last word of the matter inserted by said amendment and the comma insert the following: "wholly or partly manufactured,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and in line 14 of the restored matter strike out the numeral "20" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "15"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 88: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 88, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"121. Automobiles, valued at $2,000 or more, and automobile bodies, 45 per cent ad valorem; automobiles valued at less than $2,000, 30 per cent ad valorem; automobile chassis, and finished parts of automobiles, not including tires, 30 per cent ad valorem."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 95: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "25" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "30"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 96: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 96, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "30" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "35"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 97: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 97, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "Cast-iron pipe of every description" and a comma. In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "cast-iron"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 3 and 4 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: "but not ornamented or decorated with lithographic or other printing"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 107: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 107, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "15" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "20"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 114: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 41 of the bill, line 4, after the word "oxide," insert a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 126: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 44 of the bill, line 25, after the word "valorem" and the semicolon insert the following: "time detectors, 15 per cent ad valorem" and a semicolon; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 142: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 142, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "without the payment of duty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 154: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 154, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "; oatmeal and rolled oats, 30 cents per 100 pounds; oat hulls, 8 cents per 100 pounds."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 175: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 175, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "1 cent" and insert in lieu thereof "1½ cents"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 180: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 180, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert on page 58 of the bill, line 19, after the word "dead," the following: ", or prepared in any manner, including the weight of the immediate coverings or containers"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 186: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 186, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ", except that when it shall appear to the collector of customs from the ganger's return, verified by an affidavit by the importer to be filed within five days after the delivery of the merchandise, that a cask or package has been broken or otherwise injured in transit from a foreign port and as a result thereof a part of its contents amounting to 10 per cent or more of the total value of the contents of the said cask or package in its condition as exported, has been lost, allowance therefor may be made in the liquidation of the duties."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 187: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 187, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 64 of the bill, line 11, after the word "each," insert the following: "more than one-half pint and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 191: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 191, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 18 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "nine," strike out the words "and not exceeding No. 199"; in lines 19 and 20 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "valorem," strike out the following: "; exceeding No. 199, 20 per cent ad valorem"; in line 20 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the word "If" and insert in lieu thereof the word "When"; in lines 33 and 34 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "nine," strike out the words "and not exceeding No. 199"; in lines 34, 35, and 36 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "valorem," strike out the following: "; exceeding No. 199, 20 per cent ad valorem"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 193: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 193, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "painted," insert the word "printed" and a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 194: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 194, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the comma after the word "cotton"; in line 12 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "imported," insert the following: ", except that all clipped threads shall be measured as if continuous"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 211: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 211, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 69 of the bill, line 12, after the word "than," insert the following: "70 cents, and not more than $1.20 per dozen pairs, 40 per cent ad valorem; if valued at more than"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 221: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 221, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, striking out, in line 5 of the matter restored, the following: "whether in the piece or otherwise" and the comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 241: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 241, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 74 of the bill, line 12, strike out the numeral "20" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "10"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 254: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 254, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "5" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "8"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 255: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 255, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "15" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "18"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 256: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 256, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "valorem" and the semicolon, insert the following: "plushes, velvets, and all other pile fabrics, cut or uncut, woven or knit, whether or not the pile covers the entire surface, made wholly or in chief value of wool, and articles made wholly or in chief value of such plushes, velvets, or pile fabrics, 40 per cent ad valorem"; in line 16 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "hair," insert the following: ", not specially provided for in this section"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 258: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 258, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, striking out the numeral "35" and inserting in lieu thereof the numeral "30"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 268: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 268, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, striking out the numeral "20" and inserting in lieu thereof the numeral "15"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 269: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 269, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "5" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "20"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 270: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 270, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "15" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "25"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 277: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 277, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "other" and insert in lieu thereof the word "pile"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 278: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 278, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "40" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "45"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 280: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 280, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "30," inserted by said amendment, and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "20"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 297: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 297, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, striking out in lines 4, 5, and 6 of the matter restored the words: "weighing not more than 10 pounds per ream of 480-sheets"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 298: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 298, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 7 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the numeral "50" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "40"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 301: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 301, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 24 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the numeral "6" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "5"; in line 27 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the numeral "8" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "7"; in line 29 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the numeral "6" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "5"; in line 43 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the numeral "12" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "10"; in lines 46, 47, and 48 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the following: "weighing over 100 pounds per thousand sheets on a basis of 20 by 30 inches in dimensions, 15 cents per pound," and the semicolon; in line 49 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the numeral "20" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "15"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 310: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 310, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "25" in said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "20"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 318: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 318, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the numeral "50" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "45"; in line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the numeral "50" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "45"; in line 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the comma after the word "buttons" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and"; in line 8 of the matter inserted by said

amendment strike out the comma after the word "studs"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 339: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 339, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "45" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "50"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 349: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 349, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 11 of the matter inserted by said amendment, before the word "nets," insert the following: "edgings, insertings, galloons,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 350: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 350, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and insert, after word "action" and the comma in line 2 of the restored matter, the following: "enameled upholstery leather,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 361: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 361, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "40" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "35"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 363: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 363, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of said amendment insert on page 96 of the bill, line 1, after the words "cents," the word "additional"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 367: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 367, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "additional" in the matter inserted by said amendment and insert in lieu thereof, on page 96 of the bill, line 5, after the word "cents," the word "additional"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 369: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 369, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the numeral "3" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "2.50"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 371: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 371, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "amber" and the comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 379: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 379, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "386. Works of art, including paintings in oil or water-colors, pastels, pen and ink drawings, or copies, replicas, or reproductions of any of the same, statuary, sculptures, or copies, replicas, or reproductions thereof, and etchings and engravings, not specially provided for in this section, 15 per cent ad valorem."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 382: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 382, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 1 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "cameras," insert the following: "and parts thereof, not specially provided for in this section" and a comma; in line 6 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the numeral "4" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "2"; in line 7 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the numeral "5" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "3"; in line 13 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out "1½ cents" and insert in lieu thereof "1 cent"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 385: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 385, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "machinery for use in the manufacture of sugar"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 386: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 386, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of said amendment and in the same line after the word "Albumen," where it occurs the first time, strike out the comma and the following: "blood, and albumen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 397: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 397, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 4 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "process," insert a semicolon; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 420: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 420, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "diamonds," strike out the comma and the following: "and diamond dust"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 438: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 438, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, however, That none of the foregoing meats shall be admitted into the United States unless the same is healthful, wholesome and fit for human food and contains no dye, chemical, preservative, or ingredient which renders the same unhealthful, unwholesome or unfit for human food, and unless the same also complies with the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of Agriculture, and that, after entry into the United States in compliance with said rules and regulations, said imported meats shall be deemed and treated as domestic meats within the meaning of and shall be subject to the provisions of the act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 674), commonly called the meat-inspection amendment, and the act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 768), commonly called the food and drugs act, and that the Secretary of Agriculture be and hereby is authorized to make rules and regulations to carry out the purposes of this paragraph, and that in such rules and regulations the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe the terms and conditions for the destruction for food purposes of all such meats offered for entry and refused admission into the United States unless the same be exported by the consignee within the time fixed therefor in such rules and regulations"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 455: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 455, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the words "chlorate of" and the semicolon; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 472: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 472, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the comma inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 477: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 477, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "products," insert the following: "not specially provided for in this section"; in line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "wheat," insert the following: "not specially provided for in this section"; in line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "valorem," insert a comma. In line 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "semolina," strike out the words "or any other product of wheat"; in line 9 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "States," strike out the colon and the following words: "Provided further, That the importation of weed seeds, whether or not mixed with bran or wheat screenings, is prohibited unless the same shall have been ground or otherwise treated so that the seeds will not germinate"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 491: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 491, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"654. Original paintings in oil, mineral, water, or other colors, pastels, original drawings and sketches in pen and ink or pencil and water colors, artists' proof etchings unbound, and engravings and woodcuts unbound, original sculptures or statuary, including not more than two replicas or reproductions of the same; but the terms 'sculpture' and 'statuary' as used in this paragraph shall be understood to include professional productions of sculptors only, whether in round or in relief, in bronze, marble, stone, terra cotta, ivory, wood, or metal, or whether cut, carved, or otherwise wrought by hand from the solid block or mass of marble, stone, or alabaster, or from metal, or cast in bronze or other metal or substance, or from wax or plaster, made as the professional productions of sculptors only; and the words 'painting' and 'sculpture' and 'statuary' as used in this paragraph shall not be understood to include any articles of utility, nor such as are made wholly or in part by stenciling or any other mechanical process; and the words 'etchings,' 'engravings,' and 'woodcuts' as used in this paragraph shall be understood to include only such as are printed by hand from plates or blocks etched or engraved with hand tools and not such as are printed from plates or blocks etched or engraved by photochemical or other mechanical processes." And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 509: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 509, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lines 7 and 8 of the matter inserted in said amendment strike out the words "companies, whether incorporated or partnership," and insert in lieu thereof the words "corporations, joint-stock companies, or associations however created or organized"; in line 12 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the words "company or partnership" and insert in lieu thereof the words "corporation, joint-stock company, or association, is a mere holding company"; in line 22 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "company" and insert in lieu thereof the words "corporation, joint-stock company, or association"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 514: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 514, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 17 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "made," insert the following: "but no deduction shall be made for any amount of expense of restoring property or making good the exhaustion thereof for which an allowance is or has been made"; in line 25 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "from" and insert in lieu thereof the word "for," and in the same line, after the word "source," insert the words "of the income"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 520: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 520, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted in said amendment insert the following:

"C. That there shall be deducted from the amount of the net income of each of said persons, ascertained as provided herein, the sum of $3,000, plus $1,000 additional if the person making the return be a married man with a wife living with him, or plus the sum of $1,000 additional if the person making the return be a married woman with a husband living with her; but in no event shall this additional exemption of $1,000 be deducted by both a husband and a wife: Provided, That only one deduction of $4,000 shall be made from the aggregate income of both husband and wife when living together."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 529: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 529, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the words "date of the passage of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "1st day of November, 1913"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 542: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 542, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment restore the matter stricken out by said amendment; in line 3 of the restored matter, after the word "the," where it occurs the second time, insert the words "deduction and"; in line 4 of the restored matter strike out the following: "of $4,000"; and in the same line strike out the word "herein" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in paragraph C of this section"; in line 8 of the restored matter strike out the words "an affidavit" and insert in lieu thereof the words "a signed notice in writing"; in line 9 of the restored matter insert after the word "exemption" the words "and thereupon no tax shall be withheld upon the amount of such exemption: Provided, That if any person for the purpose of obtaining any allowance or reduction by virtue of a claim for such exemption, either for himself or for any other person, knowingly makes any false statement or false or fraudulent representation, he shall be liable to a penalty of $300"; in line 13 of the restored matter strike out the words "file either" and insert in lieu thereof the words "either file"; in line 20 of the restored matter strike out the words "such person may"; in line 22 of the restored matter, after the word "him," insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That if such person is a minor or an insane person, or is absent from the United States, or is unable owing to serious illness to make the return and application above provided for, the return and application may be made for him or her by the person required to withhold and pay the tax, he making oath under the penalties of this act that he has sufficient knowledge of the affairs and property of his beneficiary to enable him to make a full and complete return for him or her, and that the return and application made by him are full and complete"; on page 147 of the bill, line 1, after the word "Provided," insert the word "further"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 545: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 545, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 147 of the bill, line 5, after the word "other," insert the word "similar"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 551: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 551, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment, before the word "by," insert the words "of such interest or dividends"; in line 10 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "shall," insert the word "knowingly"; on page 148 of the bill, line 15, after the word "tax," insert a comma and the words "nor shall any contract entered into after this act takes effect be valid in regard to any Federal income tax imposed upon a person liable to such payment"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 564: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 564, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 7 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "welfare," insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That there shall not be taxed under this section any income derived from any public utility or from the exercise of any essential governmental function accruing to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of a State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, nor any income accruing to the government of the Philippine Islands or Porto Rico, or of any political subdivision of the Philippine Islands or Porto Rico: Provided, That whenever any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of the State or Territory, has, prior to the passage of this act, entered in good faith into a contract with any person or corporation, the object and purpose of which is to acquire, construct, operate, or maintain a public utility, no tax shall be levied under the provisions of this act upon the income derived from the operation of such public utility, so far as the payment thereof will impose a loss or burden upon such State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or a political subdivision of a State or Territory; but this provision is not intended to confer upon such person or corporation any financial gain or exemption or to relieve such person or corporation from the payment of a tax as provided for in this section upon the part or portion of the said income to which such person or corporation shall be entitled under such contract"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 571: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 571, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "thereof," where it occurs the second time, insert the following: "and life insurance companies shall not include as income in any year such portion of any actual premium received from any individual policyholder as shall have been paid back or credited to such individual policyholder, or treated as an abatement of premium of such individual policyholder, within such year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 575: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 575, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "bonded" and insert in lieu thereof the words "interest bearing"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 586: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 586, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "thereof," where it occurs the second time, insert the following: "and life insurance companies shall not include as income in any year such portion of any actual premium received from any individual policyholder as shall have been paid back or credited to such individual policyholder, or treated as an abatement of premium of such individual policyholder, within such year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 588: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 588, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "bonded" and insert in lieu thereof the words "interest bearing"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 597: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 597, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "thereof" where it occurs the second time, insert the following: "and life insurance companies shall not include as income in any year such portion of any actual premium received from any individual policyholder as shall have been paid back or credited to such individual policyholder, or treated as an abatement of premium of such individual policyholder, within such year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 598: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 598, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "thereof" where it occurs the second time, insert the following: "and life insurance companies shall not include as income in any year such portion of any actual premium received from any individual policyholder as shall have been paid back or credited to such individual policyholder, or treated as an abatement of premium of such individual policyholder, within such year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 599: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 599, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "bonded" and insert in lieu thereof the words "interest bearing"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 603: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 603, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 160 of the bill, line 3, strike out the word "after"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 608: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 608, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 13 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: "$1,200,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$800,000"; in lines 30, 31, and 32 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the words "For the administration, in the Internal-Revenue Bureau at Washington, D. C., of this act in the collection of the tax aforesaid," and insert in lieu thereof the words "In the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington, D. C."; in line 32 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "appointed," insert the words "by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury"; in line 40 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "employees," insert the words "not including the clerical force below the grade of chief of division employed in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the city of Washington, D. C."; in lines 48, 49, 50, and 51 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following proviso: "Provided further, That no person now in the classified service who shall be appointed an agent, deputy collector, or inspector, shall lose his civil-service status because of such appointment," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided further, That the force authorized to carry out the provisions of Section II of this act, when not employed as herein provided, shall be employed on general internal-revenue work"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 616: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 616, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 11 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "article," insert a comma and the words "and it shall be the duty of the consular officer, to whom the invoice shall be produced, to require such information to be given"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 624: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 624, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "unless by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury in cases in which the importer certifies at the time of entry that the entered value is higher than the foreign market value and that the goods are so entered in order to meet advances by the appraiser in similar cases then pending on appeal for reappraisal, and the importer's contention shall subsequently be sustained by a final decision on reappraisal, and it shall appear that the action of the importer on entry was taken in good faith, after due diligence and inquiry on his part, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall accompany his directions with a statement of his conclusions and his reasons therefor"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 628: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 628, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "for each entry"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 629: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 629, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "and in so doing may exercise both judicial and inquisitorial functions"; in lines 9 and 10 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: "Hearsay evidence and unsworn statements shall not be admitted, but" and capitalize the word "Affidavits"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 630: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 630, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "samples," insert a comma and the following: "and where the merchandise or samples were reasonably accessible for inspection"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 634: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 634, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and insert, after the word "imported," the words "within one year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 641: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 641, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment down to and including the word "continues," page 192 of the bill, line 4, and in lieu of the remaining matter insert the following: "to levy an additional duty of 15 per cent ad valorem on all such merchandise when imported into the United States: "Provided, however, That such additional duties shall not be imposed in case the laws of the country of exportation provide for the administration, by its duly authorized officers, of oaths to invoices, or statements of cost, before certification by consuls, and for punishment for false swearing under said oaths, whenever consuls are directed by the Secretary of State, under section 2862 of the Revised Statutes, to require such oaths before certification of the invoices."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 642: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 642, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment down to and including the word "continues" and the comma, on page 192 of the bill, line 18, and insert in lieu of the remaining matter the following: "to assess additional duty of 15 per cent on all merchandise consigned to or imported by, or shipped, or intended for delivery, to such person, persons, corporations, or other bodies so failing or refusing."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 648: That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment numbered 648, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "except as to the proviso of article 8 of said treaty, which proviso is hereby abrogated and repealed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 649: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 649, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, striking out in line 2 of the matter restored the numeral "50" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "20"; in lines 3 and 4 of the matter restored strike out the following: "or 20 per cent in case of manufactures of tobacco" and the comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 655: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 655, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "vessels," inserted by said amendment, insert the words "or other vessels"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 656: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 656, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the words "admitted to registration" and insert in lieu thereof the words "now or hereafter registered"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 657: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 657, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and insert in line 4 of the restored matter, after the word "States," a colon and the following: "Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall be so construed as to abrogate or in any manner impair or affect the provisions of any treaty concluded between the United States and any foreign nation"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 659: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 659, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment insert after the word "duties" the words "on such tobacco in its condition as imported"; in line 7 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "thereon" and insert in lieu thereof the words "on such cigars."; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference has been unable to agree on the amendment of the Senate numbered 609.

That in the enrollment of the bill the sections and paragraphs thereof be numbered in consecutive order.

O. W. UNDERWOOD,
CLAUDE KITCHIN,
HENRY T. RAINEY,
LINCOLN DIXON,
Managers on the part of the House.
F. M. SIMMONS,
JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
BENJ. F. SHIVELY,
CHARLES F. JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

SECTION I.

SCHEDULE A.—CHEMICALS, OILS, AND PAINTS.

Alizarin, dead or creosote oil, anthracine and anthracene oil have been restored to the free list, where they have been for many years. Cyanide of sodium and potassium have been transferred to the free list.

The House rates have been reduced on oxalic acid, crude chicla, linseed oil, chlorate of potash, and perfumed and medicinal soaps.

The rates have been increased over those provided by the House on gallic acid, pyrogallie acid, tannic acid, celluloid, alizarin assistants, lithopone, and white sulphide of zinc.

Extracts and decoctions of nutgalls, Persian berries, and sumac, placed on the free list by the House, have been restored to the dutiable list at a rate of three-eighths of 1 cent per pound.

The Senate receded from its amendments increasing the rates on calomel and ultramarine blue and wash blue.

SCHEDULE B.—EARTHS, EARTHENWARE, AND GLASSWARE.

Roman, Portland, and other hydraulic cements, limestone, rock asphalt, asphaltum, and bitumen have been transferred to the free list.

The House rates have been reduced on lenses, surveying instruments, telescopes, microscopes, photographic and projection lenses, and increased on strips of glass for lenses and gauges, opera and field glasses.

A new classification has been made for unmanufactured mica, and a rate of 4 cents per pound placed on all valued at not more than 15 cents per pound, and 25 per cent on that valued at more than 15 cents. This results in an increase over the House rate of 30 per cent on the cheap class of mica, costing less than 14 cents, and a reduction on all that valued at over 15 cents per pound.

The Senate receded from its amendments increasing the rates on stone and earthenware crucibles and on plate glass more than three-eighths inch thick. The House classification for pottery, earthenware, and chinaware is retained.

SCHEDULE C.—METALS AND MANUFACTURES OF.

Iron in pigs, iron kentledge, speigleisen, ferromanganese, scrap iron and steel, iron in slabs, blooms, loops, or other forms less finished than iron in bars and more advanced than pig iron except castings, steel ingots, blooms, and slabs, die blocks or blanks, and billets, made by the Bessemer or similar processes, and not containing alloys; engraved steel plates for printing bonds and other securities, ingots for railway wheels, and antimony ore have been placed upon the free list.

The rates on other forms of iron and steel have been reduced to compensate for the reduction on the crude forms transferred to the free list.

Increases have been made over the House rates on lead-bearing ores, and zinc in blocks, pigs, or other forms.

The Senate receded from its amendment decreasing the House rate on wire rope and increasing the rate on woven wire cloth.

The House rate on steel ingots, billets, and bars and other forms of steel made by the crucible, electric, or cementation process, or containing alloys, has been retained; also on steel wool, grit, shot, and sand made from iron or steel.

A new classification has been made for automobiles valued at $2,000 or less, and a rate of 30 per cent fixed in lieu of the House rate of 45 per cent.

SCHEDULE D.—WOODS AND MANUFACTURES OF.

No material changes have been made in this schedule. The thin wood comprising the tops and bottoms and sides of fruit boxes, exported as shooks and returned filled with fruit, are transferred to the free list, in lieu of the House rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

SCHEDULE E.—SUGAR, MOLASSES, AND MANUFACTURES OF.

The only change of importance in Schedule E is that postponing the time of taking effect of the rates provided by the House on sugar and molasses, and the abolishment of the Dutch standard immediately. This will result in a reduction of the rates on sugar above 16 Dutch standard, which now has a differential of $14\frac{1}{2}$ cents per 100 pounds on sugar testing 98°, and an addition of $3\frac{1}{2}$ cents per 100 pounds for each degree less than 98°.

SCHEDULE F.—TOBACCO AND MANUFACTURES OF.

No changes were made in this schedule.

SCHEDULE G.—AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS AND PROVISIONS.

Cattle, sheep, and other domestic animals suitable for use as food, wheat and wheat products, and eggs have been transferred to the free list.

Reductions have been made on oats, butter, beets, frozen eggs, peas, greenhouse stock, Zante currants, chocolate and cocoa sweetened, and extracts of meat from the rates provided by the House.

The rates have been increased over those provided by the House on broken rice, fish packed in oil, and ground spices. A rate of 20 per cent ad valorem is placed on ground spices in addition to the specific rate provided by the House on spices ground or unground.

The Senate receded from the reduced rate placed on flaxseed and its amendment placing a duty on bananas.

The House classification on lemons and other citrous fruits is accepted.

SCHEDULE H.—SPIRITS, WINES, AND OTHER BEVERAGES.

No changes of importance are made in this schedule. The rates on ginger ale and similar beverages are slightly decreased on bottles containing not more than one-half pint each.

The Senate recedes from its amendment placing an internal-revenue tax on grape brandy used in fortifying sweet wines.

SCHEDULE I.—COTTON MANUFACTURES.

The Senate classification of cotton cloth according to the average number of the yarns contained therein has been accepted instead of the House provision for the highest number. This will probably slightly decrease the rate on some fancy weaves and novelty cloth, but on the greater bulk of cotton cloth the rate will not be affected.

The rates on bleached, dyed, and colored yarns are increased, and on cotton yarns and cloth made of yarns from Nos. 79 to 99.

The rates on handkerchiefs or mufflers not hemmed has been reduced from 30 per cent, as provided by the House, to 25 per cent.

A new classification has been provided on stockings and half hose. The rate on those valued at not more than 70 cents per dozen is reduced to 30 per cent, and on those valued at between 70 cents and $1.20 per dozen the rate is reduced to 40 per cent instead of 50 per cent, as provided for by the House.

Nets and nettings made on the Nottingham lace curtain machine have been increased from the House rate of 45 per cent to 60 per cent.

The Senate receded from its amendment increasing the rate on bandings, beltings, bindings, etc.

SCHEDULE J.—FLAX, HEMP, AND JUTE, AND MANUFACTURES OF.

Flax not hackled or dressed, flax hackled, known as "dressed line," tow of flax, hemp, and tow of hemp and hackled hemp have been transferred to the free list.

The House rates on jute yarns, flax yarns, and flax twine and thread have been reduced to correspond with the reduction of duty on the raw material. Other manufactures of flax have been correspondingly reduced.

Jute burlaps have been placed on the free list and the rate on burlap bags reduced to 10 per cent.

The Senate receded from its amendment decreasing the duty on straw matting, and accepted the House classification for woven fabrics and articles made of flax, hemp, or ramie, with a slight reduction in the rates of duty.

SCHEDULE K.—WOOL AND MANUFACTURES THEREOF.

Reductions have been made from the House rates on tops and yarns made of wool or hair of Angora goats and like animals; on flannels valued at above 50 cents per pound, and on plush, velvets, and other pile fabrics.

The Senate receded from its amendment placing cotton and wool blankets on the free list and reducing the rates on oriental and similar rugs.

A new classification has been made for woolen stockings, hose and half hose, and gloves and mittens, and a rate of 30 per cent placed on those valued at less than $1.20 per dozen, a reduction from the House rate. A rate of 40 per cent is provided on all stockings and half hose of wool valued at more than $1.20 per dozen, an increase over the House rate of 35 per cent.

Camel's-hair press cloth is specifically provided for at 10 per cent ad valorem, a reduction from the House rate on such as was not imported for oil milling purposes.

Schedule K does not become effective until January 1, 1914. Wool becomes free on December 1, 1913.

SCHEDULE L.—SILK AND SILK GOODS.

The House rate on ribbons, bandings, and all narrow fabrics has been increased from 40 to 45 per cent, and the House rate on artificial silk yarns is retained.

The Senate recedes from all of its amendments changing the ad valorem to specific rates on silk yarns, velvets, and fabrics. A specific rate of 20 cents a pound is placed on carded and combed silk.

SCHEDULE M.—PAPERS AND BOOKS.

The House rates have been reduced on common paper-box boards, papers partly covered with metal leaf or gelatin, and plain basic papers for albuminizing for photographic printing.

The rate provided by the House for surface-coated papers suitable for covering boxes has been increased from 35 to 40 per cent.

The Senate amendment placing specific rates graduated according to thickness and size has been agreed to, with several reductions in the rates provided. The rates agreed to are approximately equivalent to the ad valorem rates provided in the House bill.

A specific rate has been placed upon lithographic views of scenes and buildings located in the United States, instead of the ad valorem rate provided by the House. This amendment results in an increase in the rate of duty.

SCHEDULE N.—SUNDRIES.

Crude artificial abrasives, fulminates, undressed fur skins, gunpowder, glaziers', engravers', and miners' diamonds, unset, and harness not specially provided for have been transferred to the free list.

The House rates have been increased on matches imported otherwise than in boxes containing not more than 100 matches each, and decreased on plates and mats of dog and goat skins, wearing apparel made of cattle or goat skins, musical-instrument strings made of catgut, and fur hats.

The rates provided by the House have been increased on braid, ramie braid, certain sizes of buttons, leather bags with traveling sets, men's leather gloves, manufactures of catgut, manufactures of ivory, and masks.

Enameled upholstery leather and unmanufactured meerschau have been transferred from the free list of the House bill and made dutiable.

In lieu of the House ad valorem rates on moving-picture films specific rates are provided.

The Senate receded from its amendment reducing the rate of duty on manufactures of fur and fur wearing apparel and increasing the rates on men's, women's, and children's gloves, paintings, and statuary.

FREE LIST.

In addition to the articles enumerated in the separate schedules the following have been transferred to the free list: Machinery for use in the manufacture of sugar, textbooks for use in schools and other educational institutions and special apparatus serving to teach the blind, sand-blast and sludge machines, amber in chips valued at not over 50 cents per pound, dyes derived from indigo and alizarin, anthracene and carbazol, horseshoe nail rods, needles for shoe machines, palm nuts and palm-nut kernels, photographic moving-picture films sensitized but not exposed or developed, and steel engraved forms for bonds and other securities.

Countervailing duties have been placed on potatoes, wheat, and wheat products imported from any country that imposes a duty on these articles imported from the United States.

The Senate receded from its amendment placing a duty on unmanufactured catgut, uncut and unmanufactured coral, glass enamel for watch and clock dials, various forms of leather, terra alba, and works of art less than 50 years old. The Senate also recedes from its amendment placing denatured ethyl alcohol on the free list.

An appendix in tabular form shows all the rates the subject of consideration by the conferees, with the rates in the bill as it passed the House, the Senate amendments, and the rates agreed upon at the conference.

SECTION II.

No material change is made in the fundamental features of the House provision. The numerous amendments agreed to and those agreed to with amendments relate in the main to minor administrative phases; others are designed to clarify and make more adjustable to complex business conditions certain provisions in the section while certain others are material and important.

The House additional or supertax rates are increased as to incomes of $75,000 and upward until the maximum total tax rate reaches 7 per cent.

The conference adopted the Senate amendment limiting the amount to be deducted for exhaustion in the case of mines to 5 per cent of the gross value of the output at the mine for the year in which the computation is made.

The House provision relating to the statutory exemption of $4,000 is modified to the extent that each taxable individual shall be allowed only $3,000 exemption, with the qualification that a man and wife living together shall have an additional exemption of $1,000, but their aggregate exemption not to exceed $4,000.

The House provision requiring return of income for entire year of 1913 is modified so as to embrace only such income as accrued from March 1, 1913, which avoids any question as to validity of tax on income accruing prior to March 1, 1913.

The House provision prescribing collection at the source as to individuals is modified to the extent that this method of collection shall not become operative until November 1, 1913.

The House provision requiring an individual taxpayer to make affidavit in support of claim for exemption where his tax is withheld at the source of income is modified so as to permit such claim to be made by signed written notice, with a penalty of $300 for any false representation made in connection with such claim for exemption.

The House provision which only exempted profits accruing to States and their political subdivisions from the operation of their essential governmental agencies is modified to the extent that all such profits accruing from public utilities shall also be exempt.

The House provision exempting from tax labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations, mutual savings banks, and fraternal beneficiary societies is extended to business leagues, chambers of commerce, or boards of trade not organized for profit and to civic organizations operated exclusively for the promotion of social welfare.

Life insurance companies and mutual marine insurance companies are allowed exemptions to the extent of the actual premium overcharge returned or credited to policyholders.

The House provision limiting deductions by corporations of interest paid on indebtedness to an amount not exceeding their paid-up capital stock is extended so as to permit such deduction to the amount of such interest paid not exceeding one-half of the sum of the interest-bearing indebtedness of the corporation and its paid-up capital stock.

The House provision imposing the income tax on corporations for the year 1913 is modified in that the existing excise law is continued in lieu thereof until March 1, 1913.

The conference adopted the Senate amendment providing that no contract entered into after the act takes effect shall be valid in regard to any Federal income tax imposed on a person liable to such tax.

ADMINISTRATIVE FEATURES.

The Senate receded from the more important of its amendments to the administrative features of the bill contained in Sections IV and V.

SECTION IV.

The amendment to paragraph D of Section IV was stricken out and a substitute inserted at the end of paragraph H which will secure the object sought to be obtained in the House provision.

The Senate receded from its amendments to paragraph D requiring statements of cost on merchandise contracted for as well as on that actually purchased.

The conference agreed to the Senate amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce to require importers to furnish more detailed information for statistical purposes.

The Senate receded from its amendments to paragraph I allowing a margin of 5 per cent undervaluation without penalty and limiting forfeiture to the particular article undervalued.

The conference adopted the Senate amendment 624 so amended as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to direct the assessment of duty on less than the entered value when satisfied that the importer has in good faith at the time of entry certified that the entered value is higher than the market value.

In paragraph M the conference restored the provision stricken out by amendment 629 authorizing the Board of General Appraisers to exercise both judicial and inquisitorial functions, and struck out of the Senate amendment the provision excluding hearsay evidence. The conference adopted the Senate amendment 631, striking out the provision limiting protests to a single article and issue, and also agreed to the Senate amendment 632 prohibiting contingent fees in customs cases.

In paragraph O the conference agreed to an amendment limiting inquiry as to importations previously made to one year.

In paragraph P the conference agreed to the Senate amendment 638, striking out the House provision to allow collectors of customs to summarily impose a fine for failure of importers to produce books and papers.

Paragraph T: The Senate receded from its amendment 640 and the conference restored the House provision placing the burden of proof upon the defendant in suits for the recovery of the value of merchandise fraudulently imported.

Paragraphs U and V: The conference adopted the House provisions requiring shippers and importers to produce their books to authorized agents of the Government, but adopted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to impose additional duties in case of refusal, instead of the House provision authorizing him to exclude the merchandise from entry.

Paragraph W: Amendment 643 was agreed to by the conference.

SECTION V.

Paragraph A: The Senate receded from its amendment 647, authorizing the President to impose countervailing duties.

Paragraph B: The conference agreed to an amendment to the paragraph abrogating and repealing article 8 of the treaty with Cuba.

Paragraph C: The conference adopted an amendment limiting the free importation of articles from the Philippines to such as contain not more than 20 per cent of foreign material, and rejected the Senate amendment limiting free entry to such Philippine goods as are shipped under a through bill of lading.

Paragraph I: The Senate receded from its amendment prohibiting the importation of goods manufactured principally by children under 14 years of age.

Paragraph J—

Subsection 4: The conference adopted the Senate amendment permitting the importation of models of women's wearing apparel in bond for use of manufacturers in their own establishments.

The conference adopted amendments to subsections 5 and 6 extending the privilege of importing material for construction or repairs to naval or other vessels of the United States.

Subsection 7 was amended by the conference to provide that nothing in this section should be so construed as to abrogate or affect the provisions of any treaty with any foreign country.

Paragraph M: The conference adopted the Senate amendment 659 permitting the manufacture of cigars in a bonded warehouse and the withdrawal therefrom for consumption in the United States, upon the payment of the duty on the tobacco used in its imported condition and the internal-revenue tax on the cigars.

Paragraph N—

Subsection 1: This section was redrafted in order to clear up some ambiguities. The section as it passed the House was the same as the present law and has been a source of more or less difficulty in the administration thereof.

Subsection 2: The conference also adopted the Senate amendment 661 permitting the manufacture of alcohol by any farmer or association of farmers or fruit growers free of tax for denaturizing.

Paragraph R: The conference agreed to the Senate amendment 664 striking out this paragraph, which provided for a special or dumping duty.

Paragraph S: The conference rejected the Senate amendment 666 providing for a joint committee of the Senate and House to revise and codify the customs laws.

Paragraph T: The conference adopted the Senate amendment 667 relative to fees and oaths.

O. W. UNDERWOOD,
CLAUDE KITCHIN,
HENRY T. RAINEY,
LINCOLN DIXON,

Managers on the part of the House.

APPENDIX.

Detail statement showing the action taken by the conference on the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 3321, affecting rates.

Amendment No.	Article.	Rate of duty.
		House bill.	Senate amendment.	Conference report.
	SCHEDULE A.—Chemicals, oils, and paints.
1	Gallie acid.....	4c. lb.	7c. b.	6c. lb.
2	Oxalic acid.....	2c. lb.	14c. lb.	14c. lb.
3	Pyrogallie acid.....	10c. lb.	15c. lb.	12c. lb.
4	Tannic acid and tannin.....	4c. lb.	5c. lb.	5c. lb.
6, 389	Alizarin, natural or synthetic, etc.	10 p. ct.	Free.	Free.
7	Compounds of caffeine.....	15 p. ct.	25 p. ct.	25 p. ct.
8	Calomel, corrosive sublimate, etc.	20 p. ct.	20 p. ct.	15 p. ct.
11, 416	Dead and creosote oil.....	5 p. ct.	Free.	Free.
12, 417	Anthracene and anthracene oil.....	do.	do.	Do.
14, 15	Compounds of pyroxylin: Not polished or manufactured..... Polished or manufactured.....	15 p. ct. 35 p. ct.	25 p. ct. 40 p. ct.	25 p. ct. 40 p. ct.
17, 470	Extracts and decoctions of— Nutgalls and Persian berries.....	Free.	3c. lb.	3c. lb.
17, 471	Sumac.....	do.	do.	Do.
19	Crude chicla.....	20c. lb.	15c. lb.	15c. lb.
19	Dextrine made from potato starch.....	3c. lb.	14c. lb.	14c. lb.
20	Licorice root, ground.....	10 p. ct.	4c. lb.	4c. lb.
21	Alizarin assistants, etc.....	15 p. ct.	25 p. ct.	25 p. ct.
22	Flaxseed or linseed oil.....	12c. gal.	10c. gal.	10c. gal.
23	Olive oil.....	20 p. ct.	20c. gal.	20c. gal.
25	Ultramarine blue, valued at 7c. lb. or less.....	15 p. ct.	1c. lb.	15 p. ct.
26	Lithopone and white sulphide of zinc.....	10 p. ct.	15 p. ct.	Do.
28, 455	Chlorate of potash.....	1c. lb.	Free.	1c. lb.
29, 455	Cyanide of potash.....	14c. lb.	do.	Free.
31	Perfumed toilet soaps.....	40 p. ct.	30 p. ct.	30 p. ct.
33	Medicinal soaps.....	30 p. ct.	20 p. ct.	20 p. ct.
36, 465	Cyanide of soda.....	14c. lb.	Free.	Free.
	SCHEDULE B.—Earths, earthenware, and glassware.
37, 415	Cement, Roman, Portland, and other.....	5 p. ct.	Free.	Free.
38	White nonstaining Portland cement.....	do.	10 p. ct.	10 p. ct.
40, 436	Limestone rock asphalt.....	25c. ton.	do.	Do.
	Asphaltum and bitumen.....	50c. ton.	do.	Do.
41	Mica, unmanufactured: Valued not above 15c. lb..... Valued above 15c. and not above 75c..... Valued above 75c. lb.....	30 p. ct. do. do.	4c. lb. 25 p. ct. 20 p. ct.	4c. lb. 25 p. ct. Do.
42, 44	Stoneware and earthenware crucibles.....	15 p. ct.	do.	15 p. ct.
45	Manufactures of carbon, n. s. p. f.....	do.	25 p. ct.	20 p. ct.
49	Carbons for flaming arc lamps.....	40c. 100 ft.	30 p. ct.	30 p. ct.
51, 52	Goblets or other glassware, cast or pressed.....	30 p. ct.	45 p. ct.	Do.
55	Cast polished plate glass over 3/8 inch thick..... Do..... Do.....	6c. ft. 8c. ft. 12c. ft.	30 p. ct. do. do.	6c. ft. 8c. ft. 12c. ft.
56	Lenses of glass or pebble.....	30 p. ct.	25 p. ct.	25 p. ct.
57	Strips of glass, etc.....	20 p. ct.	do.	Do.
58-62	Opera and field glasses, etc.....	30 p. ct.	35 p. ct.	35 p. ct.
63	Surveying instruments, etc.....	do.	25 p. ct.	25 p. ct.
64, 426	Glass enamel, white, for watch and clock dials.....	Free.	20 p. ct.	Free.
	SCHEDULE C.—Metals and manufactures of.
65, 431	Iron in pigs, iron kentledge, spiegel-isen, wrought and cast scrap iron and scrap steel..... Ferromanganese.....	8 p. ct. 15 p. ct.	Free. do.	Free. Do.
67, 431	Iron in slabs, blooms, etc.....	8 p. ct.	do.	Do.
67	Muck bars, bar iron, etc.....	do.	5 p. ct.	5 p. ct.
70	Structural shapes of iron or steel.....	12 p. ct.	10 p. ct.	10 p. ct.
71	Boiler or other plate iron or steel, sheets of iron or steel, common or black, crucible plate steel and saw plates and skelp iron or steel.....	15 p. ct.	12 p. ct.	12 p. ct.

Detail statement showing the action taken by the conference on the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 3321, affecting rates—Continued.

Amendment No.	Article.	Rate of duty.
		House bill.	Senate amendment.	Conference report.
	SCHEDULE C.—Metals and manufactures of—Continued.
72	Anchors and forgings.....	15 p. ct.	12 p. ct.	12 p. ct.
74	Hoop, band, or scroll iron or steel.....	12 p. ct.	10 p. ct.	10 p. ct.
75	Iron or steel plates, strips, etc., galvanized, etc.	20 p. ct.	15 p. ct.	15 p. ct.
75, 76	Tin plates, coated, etc.....	do.	do.	Do.
77, 467	Steel ingots, cogged ingots, etc., made by the Bessemer or similar process.....	10 p. ct.	Free.	Free.
78	Steel bars and shapes, made by the Bessemer or similar process.....	do.	8 p. ct.	8 p. ct.
80	Steel ingots, etc., made by the crucible, electric, or cementation process.....	15 p. ct.	12 p. ct.	15 p. ct.
81	Steel wool or steel shavings.....	20 p. ct.	15 p. ct.	20 p. ct.
83	Grit, shot, and sand.....	30 p. ct.	25 p. ct.	30 p. ct.
87	Round iron or steel wire.....	20 p. ct.	15 p. ct.	15 p. ct.
	Wire rope.....	30 p. ct.	25 p. ct.	30 p. ct.
	Woven-wire cloth, etc.....	20 p. ct.	30 p. ct.	15 p. ct.
	Manufactures of wire.....	15 p. ct.	25 p. ct.	Do.
88	Automobiles, valued at— Less than $2,000 and more than $1,000.....	45 p. ct.	30 p. ct.	30 p. ct.
	$1,000 or less.....	do.	15 p. ct.	Do.
90	Motor cycles.....	40 p. ct.	25 p. ct.	25 p. ct.
91, 94	Nuts, or nut blanks, and washers.....	15 p. ct.	5 p. ct.	5 p. ct.
93	Bolts of iron or steel.....	do.	10 p. ct.	10 p. ct.
95	Spiral nut locks and washers.....	35 p. ct.	25 p. ct.	30 p. ct.
96	Card clothing, when manufactured— With round iron or untempered round steel wire.....	40 p. ct.	10 p. ct.	10 p. ct.
	With tempered round steel wire, or plated wire, etc.....	do.	30 p. ct.	35 p. ct.
97, 413	Cast-iron pipe, etc.....	12 p. ct.	Free.	10 p. ct.
98	Sprocket and machine chains.....	20 p. ct.	25 p. ct.	25 p. ct.
101	Files, file blanks, rasps, and floats of all cuts and kinds.....	25 p. ct.	20 p. ct.	Do.
102	Hand-cut files and files of precision.....	do.	35 p. ct.	Do.
104	Needles, etc.....	do.	20 p. ct.	20 p. ct.
107	Wheels for railway purposes.....	do.	15 p. ct.	Do.
108, 467	Ingots, cogged ingots, etc.....	10 p. ct.	Free.	Free.
109	Aluminum, aluminum scrap, etc.....	25 p. ct.	2c. lb.	2c. lb.
110	Aluminum in plates, etc.....	do.	34c. lb.	34c. lb.
112, 391	Antimony ore and stibnite, etc.....	10 p. ct.	Free.	Free.
115	Bronze powder, etc.....	25 p. ct.	8c. lb.	25 p. ct.
116	Bronze or Dutch metal or aluminum, in leaf.....	do.	4 c. 100 leaves.	25 p. ct.
119	Tinsel wire, lame or lahn.....	10 p. ct.	6 p. ct.	6 p. ct.
120	Bullion and metal threads.....	30 p. ct.	25 p. ct.	25 p. ct.
122	Lead-bearing ores.....	4c. lb.	3c. lb.	3c. lb.
126	Time detectors.....	30 p. ct.	15 p. ct.	15 p. ct.
129	Zinc-bearing ores.....	10 p. ct.	12 1/2 p. ct.	10 p. ct.
131	Zinc in blocks, etc.....	do.	15 p. ct.	15 p. ct.
135	Articles in chief value of iron, steel, lead, etc.....	25 p. ct.	20 p. ct.	20 p. ct.
411	Cream separators valued over $75.....	Free.	do.	Do.
	SCHEDULE D.—Wood and manufactures of.
136	Wood, unmanufactured, not specially provided for.....	15 p. ct.	Free.	Free.
142	Wood comprising the sides, tops, and bottoms of fruit boxes exported as fruit-box shooks, and re-imported filled with fruit.....	7 1/2 p. ct.	do.	Do.
143	Toothpicks of animal substance.....	20 p. ct.	25 p. ct.	20 p. ct.
	SCHEDULE E.—Sugar, molasses, and manufactures of.
145	Sugar above 16 Dutch standard.....	1.0c. lb.	(1)	(1)
146	Sugar, refined and colored, etc.....	2c. lb.	(1)	(1)
147	Chewing gum.....	15 p. ct.	25 p. ct.	15 p. ct.
	SCHEDULE F.—Tobacco and manufactures of.
	No changes.
	SCHEDULE G.—Agricultural products and provisions.
148, 469	Cattle.....	10 p. ct.	Free.	Free.
149	Horses and mules, valued $200 or less per head.....	$15 head.	10 p. ct.	10 p. ct.
150, 469	Sheep.....	10 p. ct.	Free.	Free.
153	Oats.....	10c. bu.	6c. bu.	6c. bu.
154, 447	Oatmeal and rolled oats.....	Free.	33c. cwt.	30c. 100 lbs.
	Oat hulls.....	do.	9c. cwt.	8c. 100 lbs.
155	Rice flour and rice meal, etc.....	4c. lb.	4c. lb.	4c. lb.
156, 446	Wheat.....	10c. bu.	Free.	Free.
157	Butter.....	3c. lb.	24c. lb.	24c. lb.
158	Cheese.....	20 p. ct.	do.	20 p. ct.
159	Beets.....	10 p. ct.	5 p. ct.	5 p. ct.
161, 421	Eggs.....	2c. doz.	Free.	Free.
162	Frozen eggs.....	24c. lb.	2c. lb.	2c. lb.
163	Egg albumen, frozen or liquid.....	8c. lb.	1c. lb.	1c. lb.
164	Dried blood when soluble.....	14c. lb.	Free.	Free.
166	Peas, green or dried, in bulk.....	15c. bu.	10c. bu.	10c. bu.

¹ Various rates according to polariscopic test.

Detail statement showing the action taken by the conference on the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 3321, affecting rates—Continued.

Amendment No.	Article.	Rate of duty.
		House bill.	Senate amendment.	Conference report.
	SCHEDULE G.—Agricultural products and provisions—Continued.
167	Split peas.....	25c. bu....	20c. bu....	20c. bu....
168	Peas in cartons, etc.....	4c. lb....	4c. lb....	4c. lb....
169, 171	Decorative greenhouse plants, etc.....	25 p. ct....	15 p. ct....	15 p. ct....
172	Flaxseed or linseed, etc.....	20c. bu....	15c. bu....	20c. bu....
173	Seeds, n. s. p. f.....	10 p. ct....	5c. lb....	5c. lb....
174	Fish, in oil, except shellfish.....	20 p. ct....	25 p. ct....	25 p. ct....
175	Zante currants.....	2c. lb....	1c. lb....	14c. lb....
176	Lemons, limes, oranges, grapefruit, etc., in packages of a capacity— Of 1½ cu. ft. or less..... Exceeding 1½ and not exceeding 2½ cu. ft..... Exceeding 2½ cu. ft. and not exceeding 5 cu. ft.....	18c. pck.... 35c. pck.... 70c. pck....	4c. lb.... do..... do.....	18c. pck.... 35c. pck.... 70c. pck....
177	Bananas.....	Free.....	4c. lb....	Free.....
178	Extract of meat, n. s. p. f.....	15c. lb....	10c. lb....	10c. lb....
179	Extract of meat, fluid.....	7c. lb....	5c. lb....	5c. lb....
181, 182	Chocolate and cocoa, sweetened, valued over 15c. lb., not over 20c. lb.	25 p. ct....	2c. lb....	2c. lb....
184	Spices, cassia, cinnamon, etc., ground.	1c. lb....	1c. lb. and 20 p. ct.	1c. lb. and 20 p. ct.
185	Bombay or wild mace.....	8c. lb....	18c. lb....	18c. lb....
	SCHEDULE H.—Spirits, wines, and other beverages.
187	Ginger ale, ginger beer, etc., in bottles containing less than ½ pint.	18c. doz....	12c. doz....	12c. doz....
188	Bottles over 1 quart filled with mineral waters and imitations thereof.	10 p. ct....	30 p. ct....	10 p. ct....
	Bottles not over 1 quart.	do.....	Free.....	Do.....
	Casks, barrels, and hogsheds containing mineral waters, etc.	5 p. ct....	15 p. ct....	5 p. ct....
	SCHEDULE I.—Cotton manufactures.
191	Cotton thread or yarn: Not bleached, dyed, etc.— Exceeding 79 and not 99..... Bleached, dyed, etc.— Not exceeding 79..... Exceeding 79 and not 99..... Exceeding 99.....	20 p. ct.... do..... 20 p. ct.... 25 p. ct.... 25 p. ct....	22½ p. ct.... do..... 7½–22½ p. ct.... 25 p. ct.... 27½ p. ct....	22½ p. ct.... do..... 7½–22½ p. ct.... 25 p. ct.... 27½ p. ct....
192	Cotton cloth— Not bleached, dyed, etc., Nos. 79 to 99..... Bleached, dyed, etc., Nos. 79 to 99.....	22½ p. ct.... 25 p. ct....	25 p. ct.... 27½ p. ct....	25 p. ct.... 27½ p. ct....
198	Handkerchiefs or mufflers, made of cotton, not hemmed.	30 p. ct....	25 p. ct....	25 p. ct....
200	Clothing, etc., when composed of cotton in combination with flax, etc.	do.....	35 p. ct....	30 p. ct....
201	Shirt collars and cuffs of cotton.....	25 p. ct....	30 p. ct....	Do.....
210	Stockings, hose, and half hose: Valued not more than 70c. doz..... Valued more than 70c. and not more than $1.20.....	40 p. ct.... 50 p. ct....	do..... do.....	Do..... 40 p. ct....
221	Bandings, belts, bindings, etc.....	25 p. ct....	do.....	25 p. ct....
222	Nets and nettings made on the Nottingham lace machine.	45 p. ct....	60 p. ct....	60 p. ct....
	SCHEDULE J.—Flax, hemp, and jute, manufactures of.
223, 423	Flax, not hackled or dressed.....	4c. lb....	Free.....	Free.....
224, 423	Flax, hackled, known as dressed.....	14c. lb....	do.....	Do.....
225, 423	Tow of flax.....	$10 ton....	do.....	Do.....
226, 423	Hemp, and tow of hemp.....	4c. lb....	do.....	Do.....
	Hemp, hackled, known as line of hemp.....	1c. lb....	do.....	Do.....
227	Single yarns of jute, not finer than 5 lea or number.	15 p. ct....	20 p. ct....	15 p. ct....
228	Same, finer than 5 lea.....	25 p. ct....	do.....	20 p. ct....
229	Threads, twines, or cords made from flax yarn not finer than 5 lea.	do.....	do.....	Do.....
230	Same, made from yarn finer than 5 lea.	30 p. ct....	25 p. ct....	25 p. ct....
232	Single yarns, made of flax, etc., not finer than 8 lea.	15 p. ct....	12 p. ct....	12 p. ct....
233	Same, finer than 8 and not finer than 80.	25 p. ct....	20 p. ct....	20 p. ct....
234	Gill nettings, etc.....	30 p. ct....	25 p. ct....	25 p. ct....
235	Floor matting (square yard).....	24c.....	2c.....	24c.....
236	Carpets, made of flax, etc.....	35 p. ct....	30 p. ct....	30 p. ct....
237	Tapes, composed wholly or in part of flax, etc.	25 p. ct....	20 p. ct....	20 p. ct....
240	Wearing apparel, flax, etc.....	50 p. ct....	40 p. ct....	40 p. ct....
241	Plain woven fabrics, bleached, dyed, colored, etc.	20 p. ct....	20 p. ct....	20 p. ct....
244	Pile fabrics, etc.....	45 p. ct....	40 p. ct....	40 p. ct....
245	Bags or sacks, made from plain woven fabrics, etc.	25 p. ct....	10 p. ct....	10 p. ct....
247	Plain woven fabrics, of flax, hemp, or ramie, etc.	35 p. ct....	30 p. ct....	30 p. ct....
252	All woven articles, etc., of flax, hemp, or ramie.	40 p. ct....	35 p. ct....	35 p. ct....
253	Woven figured upholstery goods, etc.	do.....	do.....	Do.....

Detail statement showing the action taken by the conference on the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 3321, affecting rates—Continued.

Amendment No.	Article.	Rate of duty.
		House bill.	Senate amendment.	Conference report.
	SCHEDULE K.—Wool and manufactures of.
254	Combed wool or tops.....	15 p. ct....	5 p. ct....	8 p. ct....
255	Yarns made wholly or in chief value of wool.....	20 p. ct....	15 p. ct....	18 p. ct....
256, 274	Cloths in chief value of the hair of the horse or cattle n. s. p. f.....	15 p. ct....	25 p. ct....	25 p. ct....
	Pile fabrics of wool.....	35 p. ct....	40 p. ct....	40 p. ct....
	Stockings, in chief value of wool n. s. p. f.....	do.....	20 p. ct....	20 p. ct....
	Stockings, etc., selvaged, etc., composed wholly or in chief value of wool, valued at—
	Not more than $1.20 per dozen.....	do.....	30 p. ct....	30 p. ct....
	More than $1.20 per dozen.....	do.....	40 p. ct....	40 p. ct....
	Press cloth composed of camel's hair n. s. p. f.....	do.....	10 p. ct....	10 p. ct....
258	Flannels composed wholly or in chief value of wool, valued above 50 cents per pound.....	55 p. ct....	25 p. ct....	30 p. ct....
263	Oriental and similar rugs, and carpets of every description, etc., the value of which does not exceed 30 cents per square foot.....	50 p. ct....	(1)	50 p. ct....
268	Hair of the Angora goat, etc.....	20 p. ct....	Free.....	15 p. ct....
269	Tops, made of the hair of the Angora goat, etc.....	25 p. ct....	5 p. ct....	20 p. ct....
270	Yarns made of the hair of the Angora goat, etc.....	30 p. ct....	15 p. ct....	25 p. ct....
272	Cloth and manufactures of every description wholly or in chief value of the hair of the Angora goat, etc.....	40 p. ct....	35 p. ct....	40 p. ct....
278	Plushes, velvets, etc., of the hair of the Angora goat, etc.....	50 p. ct....	40 p. ct....	45 p. ct....
	SCHEDULE L.—Silks and silk goods.
280	Silk partially manufactured, etc.....	15 p. ct....	30c. lb.....	20c. lb....
281	Spun silk or schappe silk yarn.....	35 p. ct....	37 p. ct. ²	35 p. ct....
282	Thrown silk, etc.....	15 p. ct....	22 p. ct. ²	15 p. ct....
	Sewing silk, etc.....	do.....	25 p. ct. ²	Do.....
283	Velvets, etc., of silk.....	50 p. ct....	53 p. ct. ²	50 p. ct....
285	Handkerchiefs and mufflers of silk.....	40 p. ct....	45 p. ct....	40 p. ct....
288	Ribbons, bandings, etc., of silk.....	do.....	do.....	45 p. ct....
289	Woven fabrics in the piece of silk.....	45 p. ct....	55 p. ct. ²	Do.....
290	Yarns, etc., of imitation or artificial silk.....	35 p. ct....	25 p. ct....	35 p. ct....
	SCHEDULE M.—Papers and books.
294	Common paper—box board.....	25 p. ct....	5 p. ct....	5 p. ct....
298	Papers with surface coated, etc.....	35 p. ct....	25 p. ct....	25 p. ct....
	Surface-coated papers, n. s. p. f.....	do.....	50 p. ct....	40 p. ct....
	Plain base papers, etc.....	25 p. ct....	15 p. ct....	15 p. ct....
	Lithographs printed from stone, etc.: Cigar labels, flaps, and bands printed entirely in bronze— Labels and flaps..... Bands..... Printed in less than 8 colors, not entirely bronze— Labels and flaps..... Bands..... Printed in more than 8 colors— Labels and flaps..... Bands..... Printed in whole or in part in metal leaf— Labels and flaps..... Bands..... Booklets..... Books for children's use..... Fashion magazines..... Booklets decorated by hand, etc.....	15 p. ct.... do..... do..... 25 p. ct.... do..... do..... do..... do..... 30 p. ct.... do..... 12 p. ct.... do..... do..... do..... do.....	15c. lb..... 20c. lb..... 20c. lb..... 15c. lb..... 20c. lb..... do..... 25c. lb..... 35c. lb..... 40c. lb..... 7c. lb..... 4c. lb..... 6c. lb..... 12c. lb.....	15c. lb..... 20c. lb..... 20c. lb..... 15c. lb..... 20c. lb..... Do..... 25c. lb..... 35c. lb..... 40c. lb..... 7c. lb..... 4c. lb..... 6c. lb..... 10c. lb.....
	All other lithographs: Not over 3/16 of an inch thick..... Over 8/1000, not over 20/1000— Less than 35 sq. in..... Over 35 sq. in..... Over 20/1000 inch thick..... Decalcomanias other than toy— In ceramic colors— Not over 100 lbs. per M sheets..... All other.....	20 p. ct.... do..... do..... do..... do..... do..... do..... do..... do.....	15c. lb..... 6c. lb..... 8c. lb..... 6c. lb..... do..... 60c. lb..... 20c. lb.....	15c. lb..... 5c. lb..... 7c. lb..... 5c. lb..... do..... 60c. lb..... 15c. lb.....
310	Views of any landscape in the United States, etc.....	45 p. ct....	25c. lb.....	20c. lb.....
	SCHEDULE N.—Sundries.
315-16	Ramie hat braids: Not bleached or dyed..... Bleached or dyed.....	15 p. ct.... 20 p. ct....	40 p. ct.... do.....	40 p. ct.... Do.....
315-317	Hats of ramie: Untrimmed..... Trimmed.....	25 p. ct.... 40 p. ct....	50 p. ct.... do.....	50 p. ct.... Do.....

¹ The same duty shall be assessed as that which applies to the same or similar grades of carpets, plus 5 per cent ad valorem.

² Specific rates are provided for this article varying according to condition from 30c. to $3 per lb., which are approximately the equivalent of the ad valorem rate here shown.

Detail statement showing the action taken by the conference on the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 3321, affecting rates—Continued.

Amendment No.	Article.	Rate of duty.
		House bill.	Senate amendment.	Conference report.
SCHEDULE N.—Sundries—Contd.
318	Buttons:
	Vegetable ivory—
	36 lines and over.....	40 p. ct.	35 p. ct.	35 p. ct.
	Smaller than 36 lines.....	do.	50 p. ct.	45 p. ct.
	Shell and pearl—
	36 lines and over.....	do.	25 p. ct.	25 p. ct.
	Smaller than 36 lines.....	do.	50 p. ct.	45 p. ct.
	Agate and shoe.....	do.	15 p. ct.	15 p. ct.
319, 422	Crude artificial abrasives.....	10 p. ct.	Free.	Free.
320, 424	Fulminates, etc.....	5 p. ct.	do.	Do.
321, 429	Gunpowder, etc.....	4 and 1c. lb.	do.	Do.
322	Matches, imported other than in boxes containing not over 100.	4c. M.	4c. M.	4c. M.
325	Blasting caps.....	75c. M.	$1 M.	$1 M.
331, 425	Furs and fur skins, undressed.....	10 p. ct.	Free.	Free.
333	Furs dressed on the skin.....	30 p. ct.	20 p. ct.	30 p. ct.
334	Plates and mats of dog and goat skins.....	40 p. ct.	10 p. ct.	10 p. ct.
336	Manufactures of fur.....	do.	35 p. ct.	40 p. ct.
338	Wearing apparel made of the skins of cattle of the bovine species, dog, or goat.....	50 p. ct.	15 p. ct.	15 p. ct.
339	Articles of wearing apparel, n. s. p. f.....	do.	45 p. ct.	50 p. ct.
340	Furs not on the skin, etc.....	15 p. ct.	20 p. ct.	15 p. ct.
345	Hats, etc., of fur, etc.....	40 p. ct.	45 p. ct.	45 p. ct.
347, 420	Glaziers' and engravers' diamonds, not set.....	10 p. ct.	Free.	Free.
348, 420	Diamond dust.....	do.	do.	10 p. ct.
348, 418	Marine coral, uncut and unmanufactured.....	Free.	10 p. ct.	Free.
350	Seal, sheep, lamb, kid, calf skins, patent japanned and enameled leather.....	do.	do.	Do.
350	Leather cut into forms for articles.....	do.	15 p. ct.	Do.
361	Bags, etc., of leather fitted with sets.....	30 p. ct.	40 p. ct.	35 p. ct.
362	Men's Schmasschen gloves (per doz.).....	$1.	$3.	$1.
365	Women's and children's leather gloves (per doz.).....	$2.	$2.50.	$2.
369	Men's leather gloves (per doz. prs.).....	$2.	$3.	$2.50.
371, 435	Harness, saddlery, etc., n. s. p. f.....	20 p. ct.	Free.	Free.
371	Manufactures of amber, catgut, and whip gut or worm gut, n. s. p. f.....	10 p. ct.	20 p. ct.	20 p. ct.
374	Manufactures of india rubber or gutta-percha known as druggists' sundries.....	do.	15 p. ct.	15 p. ct.
375	Manufactures of ivory, etc.....	30 p. ct.	35 p. ct.	35 p. ct.
377	Masks.....	20 p. ct.	25 p. ct.	25 p. ct.
378	Strings for musical instruments.....	35 p. ct.	20 p. ct.	20 p. ct.
379	Paintings in oil or water colors.....	15 p. ct.	25 p. ct.	15 p. ct.
380	Pencils.....	25 p. ct.	36c. gross ¹	35c. gross ¹
382	Cameras.....	30 p. ct.	15 p. ct.	15 p. ct.
382	Photographic film negatives:
	Exposed but not developed.....	20 p. ct.	4c. lin. ft.	2c. lin. ft.
	Exposed and developed.....	do.	5c. lin. ft.	3c. lin. ft.
	Photographic film positive.....	do.	14c. lin. ft.	1c. lin. ft.
383, 440	Meerschmum, crude or unmanufactured.....	Free.	20 p. ct.	20 p. ct.
FREE LIST.
385	Machinery used in the manufacture of sugar.....	25 p. ct.	Free.	Free.
388	Alcohol, ethyl, denatured.....	$2.60 gal.	do.	$2.60 gal.
6, 389	Alizarin, natural or synthetic, etc.....	10 p. ct.	do.	Free.
390	Perchlorate of ammonia.....	15 p. ct.	do.	Do.
112, 391	Antimony ore and stibnite, etc.....	10 p. ct.	do.	Do.
397, 241	Plain woven fabrics, single jute yarns, not bleached, dyed, etc.....	20 p. ct.	do.	Do.
399	Blankets, of wool or cotton, valued at less than 40c. lb.....	25 p. ct.	do.	25 p. ct.
400	Press cloths for oil milling purposes, composed of camel's hair.....	Free.	10 p. ct.	Free.
407	Textbooks used in school.....	15 p. ct.	Free.	Do.
407	Apparatus used in teaching the blind.....	(²)	do.	Do.
412	Sand-blast machines and sludge machines.....	25 p. ct.	do.	Do.
97, 413	Cast-iron pipe, etc.....	12 p. ct.	do.	10 p. ct.
414	Catgut for other than surgical use, unmanufactured.....	Free.	10 p. ct.	Free.
37, 415	Cement, Roman, Portland, and other.....	5 p. ct.	Free.	Do.
11, 416	Dead or creosote oil.....	do.	do.	Do.
12, 417	Anthracene and anthracene oil.....	do.	do.	Do.
348, 418	Marine coral, uncut and unmanufactured.....	Free.	10 p. ct.	Do.
347, 420	Glaziers' and engravers' diamonds, unset.....	10 p. ct.	Free.	Do.
348, 420	Diamond dust.....	do.	do.	10 p. ct.
161, 421	Eggs.....	2c. doz.	do.	Free.
319, 422	Crude artificial abrasives.....	10 p. ct.	do.	Do.
223, 423	Flax, not hackled or dressed.....	4c. lb.	do.	Do.
224, 423	Flax, hackled, known as "dressed line".....	14c. lb.	do.	Do.
225, 423	Tow of flax.....	$10 ton.	do.	Do.
226, 423	Hemp, and tow of hemp.....	4c. lb.	do.	Do.
226, 423	Hemp, hackled, known as "line of hemp".....	1c. lb.	do.	Do.
370, 424	Fulminates, etc.....	5 p. ct.	do.	Do.
331, 425	Furs and fur skins undressed.....	10 p. ct.	do.	Do.

¹ But not less than 25 per cent ad valorem.

² According to material of which made.

Detail statement showing the action taken by the conference on the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 3321, affecting rates—Continued.

Amendment No.	Article.	Rate of duty.
		House bill.	Senate amendment.	Conference report.
FREE LIST—Continued.
426	Glass enamel, white, for watch dials.....	Free.....	20 p. ct....	Free.
428	Amber in chips, valued less than 50c. lb.....	$1 lb.....	Free.....	Do.
321, 429	Gunpowder, etc.....	$\frac{1}{2}$ and 1c. lb.....	do.....	Do.
65, 431	Iron in pigs, iron kentledge, spiegel-eisen, wrought and cast scrap iron and scrap steel.....	8 p. ct.....	do.....	Do.
67, 431	Ferromanganese.....	15 p. ct.....	do.....	Do.
432	Iron in slabs, blooms, etc.....	8 p. ct.....	do.....	Do.
371, 435	Lard compounds and substitutes.....	15 p. ct.....	do.....	Do.
40, 436	Harness, saddlery, etc., n. s. p. f.....	20 p. ct.....	do.....	Do.
383, 440	Limestone rock asphalt.....	25c. ton.....	do.....	Do.
	Asphaltum and bitumen.....	50c. ton.....	do.....	Do.
	Meerschmum, crude or unmanufactured.....	Free.....	20 p. ct.....	20 p. ct.
442	Horseshoe nail rods.....	10 p. ct.....	Free.....	Free.
443	Needles for shoe machines.....	25 p. ct.....	do.....	Do.
446	Palm nuts and palm-nut kernels.....	1c. lb.....	do.....	Do.
154, 447	Oatmeal and rolled oats.....	Free.....	33c. cwt.....	30c. 100lbs.
	Oat hulls.....	do.....	9c. cwt.....	8c. 100 lbs.
449	Perilla oil.....	15 p. ct.....	Free.....	Free.
450	Lubricating oils, n. s. p. f.....	Free.....	15 p. ct.....	15 p. ct.
454	Photographic and moving-picture films.....	20 p. ct.....	Free.....	Free.
28, 455	Chlorate of potash.....	1c. lb.....	do.....	1c. lb.
29, 455	Cyanide of potash.....	14c. lb.....	do.....	Free.
36, 465	Cyanide of soda.....	do.....	do.....	Do.
466	Steel engraved forms for bonds, etc.....	15 p. ct.....	do.....	Do.
77, 467	Steel ingots, cogged ingots, etc., made by the Bessemer or similar process.....	10 p. ct.....	do.....	Do.
108, 467	Ingots, cogged ingots, etc.....	do.....	do.....	Do.
48, 469	Cattle.....	do.....	do.....	Do.
150, 469	Sheep.....	do.....	do.....	Do.
	Extracts and decoctions of—
	Nutgalls and Persian berries.....	Free.....	$\frac{1}{2}$ c. lb.....	$\frac{1}{2}$ c. lb.
17, 470	Sumac.....	do.....	do.....	Do.
17, 471	Terra alba, not made from gypsum or plaster rock.....	do.....	50c. ton.....	Free.
475	Rag pulp.....	25 p. ct.....	Free.....	Do.
485	Hair of the Angora goat, alpaca, and like animals.....	20 p. ct.....	do.....	15 p. ct.
487	Paper twine for binding wool.....	25 p. ct.....	do.....	Do.
489	Paintings and statuary less than 50 years old.....	Free.....	25 p. ct.....	Do.
491	Works of art over 100 years old.....	do.....	(¹).....	Do.
156, 477	Wheat.....	10c. bu.....	Free.....	Do.

¹ According to material of which made.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 2 hours and 15 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I first desire to ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen may have five days after to-day in which to either extend their remarks or print in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who speak on this conference report shall have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PAYNE. I understood him to say all gentlemen. The Speaker limited it to all who spoke.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. All gentlemen.

The SPEAKER. All the Members of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the conferees in returning this bill to the House have agreed on all the disputed items between the two Houses except Senate amendment No. 609, which is known as the Clarke amendment, and relates to taxing future sales of cotton on cotton exchanges. I wish to say that the bill as it now comes before the House for action is a lower bill in its taxing features than either the bill that passed the House or the bill that passed the Senate. The Senate reduced a number of the items in the House bill and at the same time increased some of the items in the House bill. With few exceptions the House agreed to the Senate reductions. The Senate receded on about one-half of the raises that it made in the bill, with the result that the bill as it is now presented to the House, as ascertained by the calculations made by the experts, will reach an average of about 26 per cent—almost as low as the famous Walker bill, which carried a low tax on liquor and tobacco—and the tax on liquor and tobacco raises the average of this bill very much.

To all intents and purposes, the bill that is now presented to the House for its consideration provides an average of lower taxation than any bill that has been presented in three-quarters of a century. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Wilson bill carried an average rate of duty of 39.95 per cent. The Payne bill carries an average rate of duty of 40.12 per cent, as compared with about 26 per cent that this bill will carry. Many of the taxes in this bill are on luxuries, and they are as high as the rates of duty in the existing law. The bill does not only relieve the people of the United States in the general reduction of the tariff, but this bill, as it comes before the House for action, places many of the necessities of life on the free list [applause on the Democratic side] or establishes very low rates of duty on the other articles enumerated in the bill which are necessities of life.

I will not take up the time of the House to read in detail the estimate of revenue, but, by leave of the House, I will ask the reporters to publish the statement in the Record at this stage of my speech.

The following is the estimate referred to:

Estimated incomes and revenue therefrom for the first year under H. R. 3321.

Incomes (amount).	Number of incomes.	Tax rate.	Revenue.
$3,000 to $4,000.....	75,000	1 per cent.....	$375,000
$4,000 to $5,000.....	126,000	do.....	630,000
$5,000 to $10,000.....	178,000	do.....	5,340,000
$10,000 to $15,000.....	53,000	do.....	4,240,000
$15,000 to $20,000.....	24,500	do.....	3,185,000
$20,000 to $25,000.....	10,500	1 and 2 per cent.....	2,100,000
$25,000 to $50,000.....	21,000	do.....	9,660,000
$50,000 to $75,000.....	6,100	1, 2, and 3 per cent.....	6,832,000
$75,000 to $100,000.....	2,400	1, 2, 3, and 4 per cent.....	4,776,000
$100,000 to $250,000.....	2,500	1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 per cent.....	13,775,000
$250,000 to $500,000.....	550	1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 per cent.....	8,805,500
$500,000 to $1,000,000.....	350	1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 per cent.....	13,653,500
$1,000,000 and over.....	100	do.....	9,301,000
Total.....	500,000		$2,673,000

Receipts and disbursements of the Government, including those of the Post Office Department, but excluding those for the Panama Canal, the sinking fund, and the national bank-note redemption fund, which take care of themselves.

Item.	1912	Estimate under H. R. 3321.
		1914	1915
RECEIPTS.
Customs.....	$311,321,672	$270,000,000	$249,000,000
Internal revenue (ordinary).....	321,612,199	305,000,000	305,000,000
Internal revenue (excise tax).....		38,000,000	39,000,000
Internal revenue (income tax).....		66,000,000	83,000,000
Sale of public lands.....	5,392,797	5,000,000	5,000,000
Miscellaneous.....	53,451,797	55,000,000	55,000,000
Postal revenue.....	246,744,016	290,000,000	290,000,000
Total.....	938,522,481	1,029,000,000	1,026,000,000
EXPENDITURES.
Civil and miscellaneous.....	172,256,794	175,000,000	175,000,000
War Department.....	148,795,422	178,000,000	175,000,000
Navy Department.....	135,591,956	147,000,000	145,000,000
Indian Service.....	20,134,840	20,000,000	20,000,000
Pensions.....	153,590,456	180,000,000	180,000,000
Interest on public debt.....	22,616,300	23,000,000	23,000,000
Postal Service.....	248,312,211	290,000,000	290,000,000
Total.....	901,297,979	1,013,000,000	1,008,000,000
Surplus.....	37,224,502	16,000,000	18,000,000

¹ Includes $28,583,304 corporation tax.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The income tax, leaving out those features of it that relate to the tax on corporations, will produce above $83,000,000. The corporation part of the income tax included in the bill, it is estimated, will produce $39,000,000. The custom taxes for the fiscal year 1915 are estimated to produce $249,000,000.

Taking the other sources of revenue that the Government now has and adding to them the income tax and the customs laws that are affected by this bill, it will produce for the fiscal year 1915, according to our estimates, $1,026,000,000, and if the expenditures of the Government do not exceed $1,008,000,000, which is the estimate that will cover the expenditures of the Government for that year, the bill will produce a surplus revenue of $18,000,000, which the committee considers as a safe balance on the right side of the ledger.

Now, as to the matters that came before the conference committee, there were but few changes made in the chemical schedule, which I shall not detain the House to enumerate at this time.

The important changes made in Schedule B, relating to earth and earthenware, were that the House taxed Roman, Portland, and other cements at 5 per cent, the Senate placed these cements on the free list, and the House agreed to the Senate amendments. There is a new classification placed in the bill with reference to mica, and the House classification for china and porcelain wares was agreed to by the Senate and the House rate maintained.

In reference to the metal schedule, the Senate placed on the free list pig iron, ferromanganese, scrap iron, slabs, blooms, and billets, and a large number of the heavy articles of manufacture in the iron and steel business. The House placed a low rate of duty on these articles; the Senate transferred them to the free list, and the House agreed to the Senate amendments. With the exception of cast-iron pipe, practically all the Senate reductions in the rates of this schedule were agreed to by the House conferees. Cast-iron pipe was placed on the free list, but the conferees made this article dutiable at 10 per cent instead of 12 per cent, as provided for in the House bill.

The other important change in the bill in this schedule is that a new classification is adopted in reference to automobiles. Automobiles valued at $2,000 or more will be taxed 45 per cent, and automobiles valued at less than $2,000 and the chassis and the parts thereof will be taxed 30 per cent.

There are practically no changes made in Schedule D relating to woods and manufactures thereof. A small change is made in Schedule E, the sugar schedule, wiping out the Dutch standard during the time the present law remains in force.

There was no change made in Schedule F, relating to tobacco and manufactures thereof.

In Schedule G, relating to agricultural products—cattle, sheep, and other domestic animals suitable for use as food, wheat and wheat products, and eggs were placed on the free list by Senate amendments, and the House agreed to these amendments. There was a slight change made in the rate on Zante currants and in reference to fish packed in oil. The Senate had placed a provision in the bill taxing bananas, and it receded from that amendment. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There are practically no changes made in Schedule H, relating to spirits, wines, and other beverages. The Senate receded from its amendment proposing a tax on the brandies used in making wines.

In the cotton schedule, Schedule I, the Senate adopted a different classification from the House relating to cotton cloth. They adopted as the basis the average number of the yarn in the cloth instead of using as the basis the highest number of yarns in the cloth as fixed in the House bill. After considering the classification carefully the House conferees came to the conclusion that to adopt the average number of yarns as the basis for the classification of the cotton schedule was simpler and formed a classification more easily administered than that proposed by the House, and therefore the House conferees accepted the Senate classification. The Senate had an amendment in reference to yarns and in reference to cloth raising the House rates on numbers from 79 to 99, 2½ per cent, and also raising the rate on cotton yarn dyed, colored, or stained 2½ per cent. The House agreed to these Senate amendments. These are probably the principal increases made in this bill. There were some changes in classifications in reference to stockings.

In Schedule J, relating to flax, hemp, and jute, practically all of the raw material in the schedule was placed on the free list by the Senate and the House concurred in the Senate amendments. The Senate reduced the rate on linen and manufactures of linen goods about 5 per cent under the rate of the House bill and the House conferees agreed to the reduction. The Senate struck out the tax on the wool or hair of Angora goats. The conferees restored the provision of the House schedule and placed the rate at 15 per cent. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There was a new classification placed in the bill in reference to woolen stockings, and the Senate agreed to the House provisions placing camel's-hair press cloth used for milling purposes on the free list.

In reference to the silk schedule, the Senate bill had considerably raised the rates over the House bill and placed practically all of the articles enumerated in the schedule at specific rates instead of ad valorem rates, as provided in the House bill. The Senate receded on its amendment and restored all of the House rates except the first paragraph, which relates to partially manufactured silk. On this paragraph the House agreed to a specific duty of 20 cents per pound instead of the Senate rate of 30 cents per pound.

Few changes were made in Schedule M, relating to books and papers.

In Schedule N, relating to sundries, the House agreed to raise the rate on matches in bulk as fixed by the Senate amendment.

The Senate receded on its rate of $2.50 per dozen pairs on women's gloves, restoring the House rate of $2; and on men's gloves the House rate of $2, which the Senate had increased to $3, was compromised by the conferees and placed at $2.50.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN]?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman spoke of the duty on gloves being $2 and $2.50. What does that mean? Does it mean per dozen?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. A dozen pair.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Two dollars a dozen pair?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Two dollars and a half a dozen pair.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Two dollars and a half a dozen pair. The Senate struck out the provision in the House bill relating to the countervailing duty of 5 per cent on goods imported in American ships. The Senate receded with an amendment restoring the House language and providing that nothing in the provision shall be construed to conflict with existing treaties.

The provision in the House bill requiring a foreign exporter to allow an inspection of his books by the Government in order to prevent undervaluation by importers was agreed to with an amendment. The House provided that where foreign exporters refused to allow their books to be inspected, the Government might entirely prohibit the importation of their goods. The Senate struck out that provision, and, as reported back to the House, it provides a penalty in the form of an additional duty of 15 per cent where they refuse to allow inspection of their books, which, in my judgment, will be as effective as the penalty fixed by the House.

The principal item in the administrative features of the bill contained in the House provision, but struck out by the Senate, was the dumping clause, to which rejection the House conferees have agreed. I myself regret that the Senate was unwilling to agree to this provision. I recognize the fact that a dumping clause in a protective tariff bill might have given additional protection, but a dumping clause in a revenue bill, where normal rates on the normal sale of goods abroad were competitive, would not have prevented competition, and in my opinion would have been a useful and valuable provision. But the Senate was fixed in its determination that it would not accept that provision of the bill, and as this provision was new legislation and had not been in a bill brought before the House in the preceding Congress, the House yielded.

There are a number of changes made in the income-tax features of the bill, but the main provisions that have been agreed to are as follows: The House has agreed to the increases of the taxes on incomes as provided in the Senate amendment [applause on the Democratic side], and the exemption clause has been so changed that an unmarried man has $3,000 exempt, and a married man living with his wife, or a married woman living with her husband, will have a total exemption of $4,000, but in no event will the exemptions of the husband and wife together exceed $4,000. This is really a reduction of the exemption below what it was in the House bill, and will increase the revenue several millions of dollars on that account.

I think that covers the items that are in dispute between the two Houses. There are many minor amendments that I have not detained the House to explain, but they are completely and fully set out in the report and statement of the conferees, which I will ask to have printed in the RECORD.

In conclusion I wish to say that after nearly three years of battle—because the battle started two years before a Republican President left the White House—the Democratic Party to-day is prepared to keep its pledge to the American people [applause on the Democratic side]; and no matter what criticism our adversaries may make of this bill, no matter whether they believe it is wise or workable, there is no man who can stand on the floor of this House or elsewhere and deny the fact that in the passage of this bill the representatives of the American people, constituting the Democratic Party in the two branches of Congress of the United States, have kept their pledge in reference to a reduction of taxation which they made to the American people four years and two years ago. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I do not believe there is any danger of this bill working any injury to the great producing interests of the United States. I believe that in the past they have built their business on a scaffold. They were surrounded by artificial conditions. This bill will force them to modify and change those artificial conditions, to bring their business down to a sound and safe level. I believe that the country has not waited for the passage of this bill to accomplish that result. Seeing that the inevitable was coming, I believe the great business interests of the country have already prepared themselves to meet the new conditions that will be presented to them under this bill, and that immediately after its passage industrial and financial conditions in the United States will move onward, and that an era of prosperity and progress is ahead of us. If it does come, and my expectations in respect to the passage of this bill are met, then it is my belief that the enactment of this law will mark the end of the principle of a protective tariff for personal greed in this country. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the present revenue law will have been upon the statute books for precisely 50 months with the close of this present week, and it is my purpose to refer briefly to the general conditions of the country under this law, to the amount of revenue which it has produced, to the magnificent growth in exports, particularly of manufactured goods, and to the general prosperity which has never been greater in any country than it has been during the period of the life of this law. [Applause on the Republican side.]

First, as to its being a revenue producer, I publish herewith in my remarks the particulars for each year, with the general observation that during the life of the present law the surplus of revenue over normal expenditures of the Government has been over $140,000,000, or over $35,000,000 a year, enough money to pay every dollar that has been paid out by the Government of the United States in completing the new wonder in engineering in the world, the Panama Canal. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The following is the surplus, by years, under the present law:

1910	$15,806,324
1911	47,234,377
1912	37,224,502
1913	40,083,220
Total	140,348,422

Mr. Speaker, we might have taken off every dollar of the corporation tax and still the revenues of the Government under this law would be adequate to pay all of the normal expenses of the Government during that time. Some suggestion has been made in some report somewhere about this proposed law, that it is flexible, and that the tax on incomes may be reduced from year to year without disturbing any business and conform more nearly to meeting the expenses of the Government. We can do it on our $30,000,000 of revenue which we have collected from the corporations of the country during the existence of the present law.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is proposed to substitute a new law, and the first question is, Will it produce the revenue? On that question we have had all sorts of guesses, both in the House and in the Senate of the United States. They have figured as to whether the law would meet the requirements of the revenue. First, we had the curious figures from the Ways and Means Committee of the House when they reported the bill, in which they marshaled what they said were the probable collections of customs, and these were estimated or guessed at from the probable large increase of importations under the customs duties under which they were levied. Then they added up all sources of revenue and added what they said were the probable expenditures of the Government, and found that there was a deficit of some $58,000,000 to be made up by the tax on incomes. Then, curiously enough, they estimated that the tax on incomes would produce $58,000,000. A little further they estimated that there would be so many incomes to pay a tax on $4,000 up to $5,000, on $5,000 up to $10,000, on $10,000 up to $20,000, and so on; but the whole thing was a pure guess, and the guess came out just so as to even up what they needed from an income tax to prevent a deficit.

Now, in the sense of intellectual honesty, that was not an honest report. I am not accusing anybody of trying to deceive the people. Why, they were simply trying to deceive themselves; but there was no warrant that the bill as reported to the House would produce the requisite amount of revenue. In that estimate they estimated $30,000,000 a year to be collected from the corporation tax. By and by the bill was reported by the Senate Finance Committee, and this $30,000,000 was increased to $37,000,000. The exigencies of the case demanded it. They had been taking off some revenue and they had been putting more expenditures on, so the totals differed and they had to reach a balance of a surplus. And then their fancy led them to a higher result from the income tax. They increased the amount my friends of the Ways and Means Committee had stretched their consciences to find would be the returns from the income tax, and they had added the whole thing up and they had a $2,000,000 surplus for the first year under this bill.

Guesswork once more, because they had not gotten very far, at least they have gotten now to a point where they have lopped off $2,000,000, an absurd duty on bananas, and $8,000,000 on spirits used to fortify wines at $1.10 a gallon, and $5,000,000 to be derived from the cotton tax—in all, $15,000,000—so that their figures of a surplus of $2,000,000 have all gone glimmering into a $13,000,000 deficit, confessing at the outset a deficit that will come from this bill unless the people who consume still struggle along to get money enough to buy things to consume that are imported on your reduced rates of duty so as to fill up the gap. You do not dare confess that there is your hope, but they figure it out, and then on the 29th day of September the chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate presented an estimate which seems to have been adopted by my friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] this morning; and in that the excise tax—that is, the corporation tax, is increased to $38,000,000; the income tax is increased to $66,000,000, for five-sixths of the time estimated on—that is, five-sixths of next year—and to $83,000,000 for the year 1915. Now, is there a man on that side of the House who puts any confidence in these repeated lame attempts to figure out a surplus from this bill unless you go further and confess that your hope is that the foreigner can come into this market and crowd out our people and produce a greater revenue from the customhouse?

Why, they figure a surplus of $15,000,000; but if they make the proper reductions they will have a deficit of some twenty-odd million dollars the first year under the operations of this bill, and for the next year of $30,000,000 from their plan of making figures. But, of course, that is all in the future; it is all prophecy—no; it is not; it is guess, pure and simple, and what the future will be no man knows in regard to the income under this bill. Figuring on an income tax you figure on continuing the high rate of prosperity in this country; and you—every one of you—are trembling for fear it will depart during the next year under the operations of this bill. Well, go on and figure, gentlemen, and sit down and watch as time goes on and see whether your figures come out or not and if you do not get down to a deficit instead of hanging on to a surplus under the operations of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard a good many years about getting into the foreign markets. You gentlemen have pleaded to get into power in order that you might get into the foreign markets of the world. We passed a tariff bill four years ago, and you abused it from every stump in the United States. That did not amount to much. You had the newspapers who wanted free pulp and paper chiming in the chorus of abuse, and that amounted to more. And then there were the yellow magazines, the muckrakers, and you harnessed them in, and the result was that nobody in the United States knew exactly what the bill was, but everybody in the United States knew that he could get employment. [Applause on the Republican side.] He knew that he could get good wages. Every intelligent man in the United States knew that, measured by the currency of the workman, the hours of his labor, he was living at a lower rate and at a lower cost than any citizen in the world elsewhere. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I can prove that by your patron saint, Mr. Gompers, whom you put on the back so much in trying to get the labor vote.

But we were not then supplying foreign markets. You wanted to give up a big portion of this American market, a market equal to all the other markets in the world, in order to get at the foreign trade. We told you when we built up our shops here and trained our mechanics and put in our American-invented machinery we would get into the markets of the world. What was the result? We had been exporting largely of farm products. We have not exported so much in the last four years of farm products, but we have exported more of manufactured products—products of the factory taking the place of the products of the farm. In the first year under this law, 1910, our exportations were $1,700,000,000; in 1911, $2,013,000,000 [applause on the Republican side]; in 1912, $2,170,000,000 [applause on the Republican side]; 1913, $2,465,000,000. [Applause on the Republican side.]

A member of the President's Cabinet was quoted as saying that this was the greatest fact he knew, that in the year 1913 we exported $2,500,000,000 worth of goods to foreign countries. He might have added that that wonderful achievement was under the present tariff law. [Applause on the Republican side.]

We provided in that law for the maximum and minimum rate of duty. Every country in the world had it except the United Kingdom. We needed it in our business. We enacted it into that law.

Our friends say that nothing has been accomplished. But we have gone into every market of the world under it; we have gotten into them on terms where we could enter them, with a certain portion of our manufactured goods, and we have increased our exports in this fabulous manner under the operations of this law.

You send a bill over to the Senate without anything in it to take the place of the maximum and minimum clause except a miserable subterfuge of negotiations to be made by the Executive and approved by Congress which could have been done just as well without your putting it in your bill.

You have the idea that business is the trading of benevolences. It is a matter of selfishness. People sell where they can get the most; they buy where they can get the lowest prices. We are not going to send a missionary after trade. How long would it take him to get a dollar's worth of trade with any foreigner? He can not do it. So you put in that subterfuge. The Senate had a glimmer of sense on the subject. They said that you must have a maximum and minimum provision in the bill, and they proceeded to make one. I will concede that in the making of it and the arrangement of it they did not exhibit the highest wisdom. They put a duty on those things that you have been proclaiming against. You have asked for a free breakfast table, and free clothes, and free things that the people consume personally. They went to work and put their maximum duty on those things, whether they were on the free list or not.

Of course, that sickened my friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. He was more opposed then to the maximum and minimum tariff than he ever thought he was opposed to it before in his life. Well, you fought over that in conference. Finally the Senate receded and you struck out that provision in your bill. And then the Executive, according to the newspaper reports—I do not get anything from the other side except from the newspapers on this subject—according to the newspaper reports, asked that a special joint resolution be passed continuing these present trade agreements for four months, until they could work out the spirit of trading benevolences so abundantly provided for—a gleam of sense from the State Department on this subject, but the whole wisdom of it is carefully eliminated in this bill that you propose to make a law just as quick as you can get it through the Senate and signed at the White House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we can not brush aside proofs of our trade in the last four years and its immense growth abroad. The Senate sees it, the Executive sees it and sees the benefit from it. Why, every man in the United States except the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee seems to appreciate it, and, of course, he has his way about all these matters. I admire his success in that sort of business. It makes a difference whether a man has the appointing of committees or not when he is trying to get a tariff bill through the House that just suits himself. If he did not have this appointing of committees, he might run up against things; but if he does have it, the Lord have mercy on the fellow that has the courage to oppose him—and I must say, complimentary to the other side, that there is not a man among them who seems to have the courage of his convictions on these subjects. Of course, committee appointments do not have anything to do with it at all.

Well, you say that we were pledged to revise the tariff downward four years ago. Well, we did it.

Never was such a downward revision, involving so much of a cut in duties as the present law, upon which we are living and under which we are living. Why, I saw a day or two ago an official report, a statement of the imports of the United States and the duties collected on the imports, and the average ad valorem duty was 17.22 per cent. [Applause on the Republican side.]

If you gentlemen will turn to page 480 of your Tariff Handbook you will find that for the year preceding the average ad valorem duty was a little over 18 per cent. Of course this is on all the imports; otherwise we get no credit for the vast amount of imports that come in on our free list. Last year over 53 per cent of our imports came in free of duty absolutely. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You can compare duties on the dutiable articles; you can make up your estimate of what will be imported, and you can draw almost any sort of an old figure in the world; but when you come to take the actual facts, the total imports and the total duties, it is shown that under the present law there is a lower average ad valorem on all these imports than under any law in the history of the tariff except during the years from 1858 to 1861 [applause on the Republican side], when it was a trifle lower in each of those years, and when our old friend, President Buchanan, was decrying the degeneracy of the times because the Government had not any revenue and could not borrow money even at 12 per cent interest.

That is the history, gentlemen. Oh, look it up! You never looked into that handbook. When you go home, prayerfully consider page 480. Then, if you have any conscience left, do not go out and prevaricate about revision upward as the characteristic of the present tariff under which we are now living. "Thou shalt not bear false witness." I commend that injunction of scripture to you, gentlemen, when you are talking in the future with reference to the tariff.

What is your excuse for this revision? You say you have been commissioned by the American people to revise the tariff downward. You have been commissioned by a minority of them. The majority was against you. The President recognized it, but most of you have forgotten it. You have been commissioned, it is true, to carry out your own sweet will. The people did not even expect you to carry out your own platform. If they did, they have been woefully disappointed.

You were going to destroy the trusts by putting trust-manufactured articles on the free list. Have you found out about that, or have you run up against another proposition, that you might destroy the trusts, but you would also destroy the little fellows who were struggling along to compete with the trusts? Have you put those articles on the free list? Gentlemen get wise even on their platform—even Democratic gentlemen do occasionally—so that lately we have not heard so much about destroying the trusts by reason of putting articles made by the trusts on the free list. No; we hear it talked about now in the way of prosecutions from the Attorney General's office. The scene is transferred. They are going to do business the other way. They are going to take advantage of the law that we, the Republicans, put upon the statute books in order to destroy the trusts; and this item in the Democratic platform, according to this bill, has got to be a dead letter in Democratic law. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I realize, of course, that the Democratic caucus and the House of Representatives can repeal the Democratic platform, and I think they have a right to do it, too. That is one thing I approve of with respect to a Democratic caucus, and whenever I can find a thing that I approve of I always want to notify them of it. I think this is the first thing I have found that I want to notify them about. Of course, you gentlemen consider things here in a secret caucus, or in an open caucus, or in any old kind of a caucus, and your expression there is better as to what are Democratic principles than all the tariff planks of a platform made by a single man from Nebraska, however wise he may be in the secret conclaves of a Baltimore convention. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Now, since this estimate was made they have been pulling down the revenue they were to receive. Oh, they have added $3,000,000 on customs, $21,000,000 on internal revenue, and $3,000,000 on miscellaneous. To meet the increased expenses they have got a discovery on that since they put out this first estimate, and they now make a $16,000,000 surplus; and then they take off $5,000,000 on cotton futures, and $8,000,000 on spirits, and $2,000,000 on bananas, and a million here and a million there, to the end of the chapter.

And if you take what appears to have been cut off, openly and aboveboard in this bill, there will be, according to their own figures, a deficit of anywhere from $12,000,000 to $20,000,000.

But you were going to reduce the high cost of living. That is what you said last fall on the platform, and out of decency you ought to keep it up now; but I do not hear any amount of shouting about it on that side now. You are a little quiet. You are wondering what the effect is going to be. Every one of you, except my genial friend from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD], is wondering what it is going to do to beef to take off a cent and a half a pound tariff. He figures that it is going to reduce the price of beef 10 or 15 cents a pound if you take off a cent and a half a pound of duty. But you visser people are a little quiet on that subject. You see we have got to import beef to have enough to supply our demand. Even if the calf bill should become a law, and you could not kill any calves, it would take a good while to make enough beef in this country to supply the people who need beef, unless you strike a blow at the consumer in this country. You gentlemen talk about sympathy for the consumer. Who is the consumer? There is no consumer class. Every man, woman, and child in the United States is a consumer, according to their ability to purchase. If a man gets steady employment he is a large consumer. If he does not get the income he has to economize. Now, let me tell you something. I am not a prophet or the son of a prophet, but does it not look reasonable that all these little reductions you make in the tariff will be absorbed at the wharves in New York by the importers and sellers on the other side before the goods even get to the wholesalers, and if there is a smithereen left the wholesaler will gobble it up? If not, the retailer stands ready to take his share, and is looking for it, and when the article gets to the ultimate consumer he will pay the same old price unless you can destroy trade conditions in this country by your bill, so as to make a general feeling of distrust and stop the mills or work them on infrequent days, keeping them idle half the time, thereby reducing the yearly wage by one-half and reducing the consuming ability of the great consuming class in this country who work by their muscle, and in order to keep that muscle in condition to work consume more than you people who sit around in your offices and work your brains, or think you are working them, during the daytime. [Laughter.]

If you can bring about that general condition you will have things cheaper in this country. You have had them cheaper before. Are we going to have any stoppage of the mills? What does it all mean? Why do those 1,200 German salesmen in this country go about with cheerful countenances at the prospect of increasing their trade? One of them said the other day that heretofore he had been selling 25 per cent of foreign dress goods and 75 per cent of domestic, but that his orders for next year are 75 per cent foreign and 25 per cent domestic. What is that going to do? Is that going to start up our looms? Is that going to make them work overtime? Or will it stop them day by day, and will there be shutdowns and no wages at intervals? Will there come a condition of things so that half the time our workmen are idle? I have seen that condition. My friend from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] has seen it in his State. We from the North who rub up against these mills have all seen it. If we are old enough to be Members of Congress in the United States we have all seen that sort of thing in this country. It is a deplorable thing. It makes the cost of living cheaper if a man has the money with which to buy; but if you reduce the cost of living 20 per cent or 10 per cent in money price, and reduce a man's purchasing ability 50 per cent, what does it profit that man? He will figure that thing out by himself by his fire-side. Sophistry may do in times when things are prosperous. You may cheat the very elect then; but when a man is looking with apprehension for the next meal for his family, and wearing the old clothes, and getting half the income from his only capital—his labor—it strikes him differently. He does not need any prophet to tell him what is the matter. He is right up against the facts in the case.

You have taken off the duty on wheat and flour and meats, and pretty much everything that our northern farmer produces. What compensation have you offered? You tell him that he is going to get farm machinery free, and that it will go for a song whenever he wants it. Do any of you know that for the last 50 months we have been able to import farm machinery free from the United Kingdom, and that Great Britain is, next to the United States, the great exportation country for farm machinery?

Every farmer knows that, but if he does not he will know it before you get your tariff bill well under way. You can not fool the farmer in that way. He has the long winter evenings to think this thing over. He knows of the great accumulation of stuff that he produces, coming from Canada into the city of Minneapolis. The Canadians are figuring that they are going to save $1,000 in duty on the carload once this bill is signed, when they take the stuff out of bond. The farmer up there knows all about that. You may reduce the price of meat that the farmer has to sell. You may hurt him, but you can not help the man that buys the meat by taking off the duty of 1½ cents a pound. That will not do it. All you can do by this bill is to create an industrial depression, and then you will get cheaper things with no money to buy them. Oh, it is a beautiful thing to work out. Our country needs something of this kind every few years, and it is about time for this thing to come. But, Mr. Speaker, there is a little light breaking in the East. The other day there was sworn in here as a Member of the House a man from Maine who did not believe in this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.] And you are worrying about West Virginia, and Massachusetts, and New York, and even New Jersey, the home of the President. The people are getting uneasy about your bill and about the Democratic Party. They thought you would not do it. They heard your leaders proclaim that you would not injure any business, and they took some stock in it. They got a little mad at us about the reciprocity agreement with Canada, and they took more stock in that than they did in what your leaders said, but you lulled them to sleep, and then there came along the party dissatisfied with everybody in the world except himself. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Oh, he is satisfied with himself, the party is; but he is not satisfied with anybody else, and he, like the Adullamites, proclaimed the theory that everything was going to destruction unless he saved them. He caught some people who were getting a little mad at Mr. Taft and induced them in an unwary moment to vote for him, and thereby give a few a chance to come in as a minority party. Why, they tried that up in my district. I went around to the people there and told them just what the tariff law was. I read to them from the public documents, so that they could understand it. Oh, I see the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] laughs, but I only want to say to him that I do not mean by public documents the muckraking magazines, which are his idea of a document.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, the gentleman may answer me in his own time. That is his idea of a document. I read to them just what the law was doing, and they had sense enough to appreciate it, and the Bull Moose bluff did not work up there, and that is the reason I am here.

Mr. Speaker, there is lots of applause for your bill, but it comes, most of it, from the other side of the water. The newspapers over there are in favor of it. They even go so far as to wonder at your folly, and wonder if it can be possible that anybody in the United States would establish such an open free gateway through which to import their goods into this country and thus get into the best market in the world. [Applause on the Republican side.] The foreign manufacturers know about it and they applaud it. They are for you. If you could get them over here you could carry the election overwhelmingly the next time, for every one from the other side of the water would favor the bill. The opposition to the bill comes from here, and here is where the trouble is. Why, you are not carrying all of your own party for your bill. Oh, you drag them in against their better judgment and their protests, and their swearing in the cloakrooms and in secret. You get them in, and they are compelled to vote for the bill, but they do not believe in it. They take your promises at a discount. How could it be otherwise, when you are all in doubt about the success of this bill in the country at large?

Mr. Schwab says—and all gentlemen who have been on the Ways and Means Committee will agree with me that Charles M. Schwab is the best posted man in the steel business and the most candid witness in the United States that appeared before that committee—Mr. Schwab is quoted as saying that the Steel Trust may be satisfied with the bill, but he fears the working of it on the steel business. They are feeling a little bit of depression just now. The Steel Trust may get through with it. How about the little fellow with the little shop? One man in the cutlery business, employing 400 hands, in an Eastern State, has made his arrangements to build a shop in Great Britain and transfer his machinery there. And why? Because he can make his knives there and pay the duty under your bill and get them into our market more cheaply than he can make them in Massachusetts.

Take your great Gov. Foss, who was a Democrat and is not a Democrat, and who was very much in favor of a reduction of the tariff when he was here in the House. He thought that you would have more judgment about it; and he says he is going to transfer his machinery to Canada and is compelled to under the provisions of this bill.

He makes blowers; he manufactures them. [Laughter.] Oh, do not laugh at it; some of you gentlemen do not need a factory to make blowers; you have one right here in the House that makes blowers. He makes the same class of goods that Mr. Redfield said he could sell all over the world; which he could while his patent lasted, but he is having hard sledding over there now. He is going to transfer his factory over to Canada. He is not the only one. Why, you put shoes on the free list. Well, shoes at 15 per cent pay 22½ cents per pair on the average on the importation, and the duties you have left on the materials from which they are made amount to very nearly 22 cents a pair. You handicap by taxing material. I remember one day we had the question up in the committee on a hearing about this bill. It was announced by one of the members of the committee that it was a part of Democratic doctrine to tax the manufactured material as a tax on the manufacturer.

I thought he was mistaken about it, but the more I study this bill the more I find he stated the fact about it. And in the chemical schedule all the way through you will find that thing exists. Why, he was so enthusiastic about it he put a rate of duty of a cent a pound on potato starch and three-fourths of a cent a pound on dextrine made from potato starch. We had it up here in the House, and I informed him that it took a pound and a quarter of starch to make a pound of dextrine, and he said that was about the right proportion—you remember that, I would not allude to it if it had not occurred here in the House. He said that was about the right proportion, and I told him the proportion was right, but he had the cart ahead of the horse—that he ought to have had three-fourths of a cent on the starch and 1 cent on the dextrine. That went over into the Senate and they undertook to fix it over there, and what do you think they did? Well, they put three-fourths of a cent a pound on potato starch and 1½ cents on dextrine made from potato starch, and all other dextrines three-fourths of a cent a pound. Well, they make dextrine from tapioca and there is a very sharp competition with dextrine made from potato starch. Why, you took advantage of our suggestions to you, but you did not stop to study and follow along enough to carry them out. There are other things we suggested here which were adopted over in the Senate. The gentleman from Illinois suggested one day that you could not levy an income tax on incomes that accrued before the constitutional amendment was passed. My genial friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] smiled, shook his head, and you all shook your heads, and you did not adopt his amendment. I suppose you have not thought of it since, but in the Senate they read it, and they saw the illogical position in which the House was trying to put them, and they amended it so that all incomes date from the 1st of March to pay the income tax, although the five-sixths of the year they compute will be greater from that income tax than Mr. UNDERWOOD's computation for the whole year when he reported. There are other things I might mention, but why, why take the time when the time I have allotted myself is very nearly gone, and I have not said one-tenth of the things I wanted to say, either. Now, the House had a provision in the bill in regard to a dumping clause. It was a protective provision. It put an additional duty on where they dump their goods in here at less than the market value. It did not originate with them. It came from the Canadian law, word for word.

They kept it in here in the House, but it went over to the Senate, and they were more fierce in the Senate about striking out every protective feature in the bill than even the Ways and Means Committee were in the House, and they struck it out. The conferees have agreed to it, and the dumping clause has gone glimmering. They had a provision in the bill of a discount of 5 per cent duty on goods brought in in American ships. Well, I told the House I thought that might be a good provision, but that would not work, because it abrogated all the treaties. That went in, it went over to the Senate, and they considered it, and then struck it out. The conferees have agreed to it with a proviso that absolutely destroys the force of it.

They provided that it shall not abrogate or impair any treaty. Now you see it and now you do not see it. This was a triumph for the House, but a greater triumph for the Senate on this bill. The good things that you had there the Senate took out. I sometimes think it would have been better if they had done as they did two years ago, when they wanted to have one Republican in the conference and invited us all there. We could have made some suggestions and touched upon some things by way of remembrance that would have kept the Senate in better trim to help the House to have its own way, if it wanted it, on these subjects.

And, then, there is the civil-service joker. A lot of you people have been talking about the civil service, pretending how anxious you were to preserve it, until you got into power, and then how universally you were looking after pie and stepping up to the counter and being told that "that position is under civil service, and we can not turn that man out without charges against him, and he is a good man for the place. We would like to accommodate you, but we can not do it." Well, you have got to appoint some people to look after this income tax. The Senate put in a provision of $1,200,000 appropriation, and no examination required, but simply appointed by the commissioner, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. You will answer that the clerks called in under the Sherwood-McCumber bill to consider the pensions of the old soldiers were called in without a civil-service examination. They were. There was $300,000 of an appropriation. They were limited and were in office a year, and none of them were covered into the civil service. This, I believe, was a House provision, and the Senate amended it.

How did the conference fix it up? Why, that these men called in in this way could be set at work to do anything under the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. They enter into duty under his office. Oh, how many men who have been there for years, competent to do their duty, and go up regularly and vote the Republican ticket find that their services are not needed for these other duties, and their places are taken by these men who are appointed under this provision of the law. The conference has limited the appropriation now to $800,000. Yes; but the mischievous is done. It provides that all of this force in the future shall be appointed without any examination, but any future Congress can increase the appropriation beyond the $800,000 or $1,200,000, or whatever their sweet wills desire in the way of patronage.

This is your opposition just now to the civil-service laws of the United States. But, gentlemen, civil-service people are looking after you and watching you. Do not imagine you are doing this under cover. Do not imagine you are doing it without assuming any responsibility. You agreed to the whole business in caucus, and you allowed the whole thing in the House. They will hold you responsible for it. You will get a few offices in your district. You will get one or two lukewarm friends, but the Lord knows how many energetic enemies because of it. The patriot looking for the success of the Republican Party ought not to oppose it, but as a patriot looking for the good of the country, and even looking after the good of the individual Members who have not had experience enough to know what is best for them in regard to patronage, I offer these remarks to try to help them out. That is all.

Gentlemen, this bill will soon be beyond the stage of prophecy. The people of the United States will have it for weal or for woe. You may succeed in making them believe it is a good thing, you may succeed in bulldozing the manufacturer to continue to pay his big wage in order to meet the competition across the water that you have so freely invited, under the compulsion or persecution of a great department of the Government, but you can not make him run when he does not get orders that will pay him for the cost of the goods.

You will see what is already going on. I heard from a Member of this House of a shoe shop the other day where they had laid off 500 men because they had not the orders. They told them that they would put them on again when they got orders. Wages have been reduced by this compulsory stoppage of the work in the shop, and people who labored in the shop were out of work. I am willing to trust to the future, gentlemen. I trust to the signs of the times. Our people are not going to work to give away their happiness, their homes, the comforts, even the necessities, of life because of the benevolent disposition to build up the prosperity and the happiness of people beyond the waters at their own cost and expense. Go on! Execute the present tariff law on its fiftieth monthly birthday, if you will. It has lived long enough to work out its place in history. It has lived long enough to refute the slanders which have been hurled against it. It has lived long enough to get the stamp of the future honest historian as the best revenue measure ever enacted up to this present day. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, judging from the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], I fear that he is against this bill. [Laughter.]

One of the tragedies connected with retirement from this body must be the reflection that, once away from here, one would not have the opportunity to hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] ejaculate eruptively, spontaneously, irrelevantly, grandiloquently, "$2,500,000,000," followed by applause on the Republican side. [Laughter.]

He says that he successfully explained to the people of his district that the Payne-Aldrich bill was a revision downward; but he never explained it successfully to the House of Representatives at the time of its passage, for the special rules and closures of various kinds would not let him.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on September 11 you appointed me a conferee on the tariff bill, and I am now prepared to make my report. [Laughter.] To be chosen as a conferee on a tariff bill is an imposing honor; it is, indeed, a rare distinction.

Few men reach this high estate. Out of 10,000 Congressmen who since the beginning of this Government have descended here, burned their brilliant hour, and departed, hardly 100 have ever been conferees on a tariff bill. I am moved momentarily by the almost tragic reflection that out of the two hundred and odd Congressmen whom I now address, scarce a score by any manner of accident can ever be conferees upon a tariff bill. And yet, Mr. Speaker, I have to report to you that things are not what they seem. [Laughter.]

I have heard all my life of the helplessness of a bound boy at a husking bee. Now, I was born and reared in an agricultural country, but I never saw a bound boy at a husking bee, though I can imagine, Mr. Speaker, that a bound boy at a husking bee is a perfect cyclone of activity compared with a minority conferee on a tariff bill. [Laughter.]

The majority members—the Democratic members—of the conference met inside the room of the Committee on Finance of the Senate. That room may not be entirely familiar to this membership. It is in the north wing of the Capitol, on the first floor, Senate end. Outside of that Finance Committee room there is a riot of mural ornamentation. However chastely white the corridors of the Capitol may be elsewhere, here there is elaborate decoration and vivid frescoes, with peaceful farm scenes between, and figures of rakes and boes and walking plows and other tokens of our primitive and pastoral beginnings.

The function of the Finance Committee in the Senate is taxation, and over one arch in the corridor is the legend, "Esto perpetuo." I asked the janitor what it was, and he said it meant, "Let it be perpetual." [Laughter.] Over the portal of the Finance Committee room itself is a neglected portrait of Benjamin Franklin with one eye gone, the other glassy with time, arrayed in a pair of yellow plush breeches in a state of spotty and scaly decline. [Laughter.]

In those surroundings I watched from day to day the proceedings as nearly as I might. I was not offended, Mr. Speaker, at my exclusion, but I was outraged, in a sense, at the hurt it meant to that new-found champion of the open caucus, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. [Applause and laughter.] Outside the committee room in these brilliant corridors there gathered through those long laborious days little groups of men huddled together and constantly whispering—whispering of burlaps and bagging and bran and barley and lemons and limestone and what-not specific and what-you-may-call-it ad valorem.

For the most part, as I observed, they were sullen men and morose, disconsolate, and empty of hope. That was the lobby; whether "insidious" or not, I am unable to say; but it remained there the livelong day, week in and week out. And never ceased to whisper but once, and that was when the portentous procession of tariff tinkers passed in and out. [Laughter.]

The suave Alabamian [Mr. UNDERWOOD], placid ever, urbane even in attack, tender even in his tyrannies; the smiling North Carolinian [Mr. KITCHIN], of infinite jest, a statesman yet unwrecked by his humor, and a partisan to the last ripple of his taunting laughter; the rotund RAINES, Roman in face and in figure, braced mentally against all the shifting partisan winds of his native Illinois; and the studious, silent gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DIXON], hungry for contest, these four and four United States Senators who, under the rules, are all inviolate and immune to my description, these, each of them a Democrat and partisans all.

These eight men made this tariff. The 676 controverted items in this tariff are in fact the tariff, and those men drafted them ultimately.

It is true that at the conclusion of their weeks of labor they invited in the minority conferees. This was on September 29. I went along meekly with my friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], but the proceedings in that one conference, that "full and free conference," when all the conferees were present, were pathetically perfunctory. I took out my watch and kept time on the adoption of the conference report, and by the watch it took just seven minutes to dispose of it. [Laughter.] That is, this great bill, which began in secret, ended in secret, and there was not one moment in its long career when any jot or tittle of it was changed in the open.

In the conference 676 items in controversy were adjusted by the eight Democratic statesmen. The Senate had its way on 427 amendments, the House had its way on 151, and the rest of the items were compromised. In some respects the Senate improved the bill, and in many respects it did not. One notable improvement by the Senate was in the income tax, which I favor. The Senate increased the rate on incomes above $100,000. I offered an amendment to do this in the House, but inasmuch as everything not indorsed by the Democratic caucus was at that time being chloroformed, I was promptly voted down. I am glad, however, that the amendment is at last in the bill. It betters the measure.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MURDOCK. No; I will not yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I have a limited amount of time, and the gentleman can answer in his own time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, however, that in that proceeding the Democrats in Congress followed the illustrious example of the Republicans here. [Laughter.] I am against this method of tariff legislation. I am against it now, and I have been against it ever since I came to Congress, and I am going to show you why before I get through.

This bill, with its 400 pages, is a closed book to the American people. It is a closed book to a great majority of the Members here and in the Senate, and it will be a closed book until the American people open it in course of practical business activities. It was a mistake originally for the Democratic leaders to adopt the method they did in making this tariff by essaying an omnibus tariff bill. No man can know an omnibus bill in its entirety. No man can know its effect. Such a measure must be largely random guesswork, slapdash, broadside. A tariff ought not to be revised in that way.

Now, back of the bill is a distinct political promise, the promise that it will reduce the cost of living without prostrating business. Part and parcel with this design is the ruthless manner in which the products of the farmer have been dealt with, for the farmer has not been spared. Now, who really thinks this bill will reduce the cost of living? Ah, the Democratic doctors of economy know that it will not do that thing. Why? Because all of us know in our less partisan moments at least that the cost of living is affected by major factors other than the tariff, many of them now greater economic factors than the tariff. The control of credit by a few men in this country—the Money Trust—has more to do with the high cost of living than the tariff has. Exorbitant transportation charges based on false capitalization have more to do with the high cost of living than the tariff has. And there are many other elements which have to do with the high cost of living—unregulated monopoly, gambling in food products, gambling in agricultural products of all kinds among them. There is still another thing that has to do with the high cost of living that all statesmen seem equally helpless about, and that is national extravagance in public expenditure. And yet another factor that has to do with the high cost of living is universally high local taxation, and with it high local rents. And yet another factor in the high cost of living is cold-storage manipulation of prices. Besides there are our antiquated patent laws and our social waste.

These are just as major factors in this proposition as the tariff. And over it all and through it all is the favor that special privilege enjoys in this country, not so much in the making of the law as in the adjudication and interpretation of the law. You will not reach the high cost of living by attacking the farmer's profits. You will not reach the high cost of living by treating symptoms only. You must reach the disease. And you will be judged finally not by your promises but by results.

Your tariff bill will soon become a law. The country will soon try it out. Whatever its results may be, I regret sincerely that the Democratic Party leaders did not follow the program of two years ago and begin this revision in the only way in which a revision should be undertaken with fairness to all concerned—one schedule at a time. Open up this tariff schedule by schedule, and as each schedule passes this House and the Senate the membership will have part in its preparation, and more than that, will have understanding of its provisions.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I taken?

The SPEAKER. Fourteen minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK. As I sat here to-day and listened to this closing and rather perfunctory debate I was reminded of the scene here four years ago. Then the Republican side had all the easy attitude and ready vim and vigor of an arrogant majority, and this group then in opposition over here on the Democratic side had all the helplessness and hopelessness of a small but fighting minority. The Republican leadership, learning no lesson, unmindful of the people, regardless of what it had pledged in the national platform, put the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill through Congress. Everywhere cloture was applied. Everywhere the individual Member, unless he happened to be a leader, was shut out of effectual contact with the measure.

The measure was put through the House of Representatives originally with the leadership in the Republican Party permitting but five amendments, really four, for the fifth was a fixed amendment on petroleum and its products, which was broken, as I remember, through an appeal from the decision of the Chair. The bill went to the Senate, was changed, as this bill was changed, materially, and in a majority of the more important items, and went into close conference. The exclusion that I met the other day in my humble capacity as a minority member of the conference was the same exclusion which the gentleman from Missouri, the present Speaker, met four years ago. It was not right to exclude him four years ago, and it was not right to exclude me now; but it was the way of the two old political organizations then, and it is their way now. It shuts out the people of my district and the people of every other man's district unless that man happens to be a leader of the dominant party. The bill finally came back to the House. A motion was made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to recommit the bill, a motion against which he himself voted.

There were a few of the Republicans on this side then who meant what they said however, Republicans who were fighting to keep their party's pledges, and they fought to send the bill back to conference. And we came within five votes of doing it! I say to you Republicans that had we sent that bill back to conference that day the Republican Party might have been saved, if it had been possible to save it, which I doubt [laughter], but more than that, more than the saving of the Republican Party, had we sent that bill back to conference that day then we would have broken up in this country once and for all the custom of proposing omnibus tariff bills. I remember well the scene then. To-day as I looked upon the proceedings here the memory of it all came trooping back.

An understudy of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] at that time was Mr. Nicholas Longworth, Congressman from Ohio. In the speeches that day Mr. Longworth followed the gentleman from New York. He turned to the insurgent Republicans and begged them to support the bill. I interrupted his appeal and said to him:

The gentleman asks us to follow the leaders of the Republican Party. I suppose he takes into consideration, when he makes that request, that the ordinary Member of this House has had precious little to do with this bill, and that any compromise now arrived at is a compromise between the leaders of this body and the Senate, and not between the Members of this body and the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, the RECORD shows on that day, after I had so spoken, that there was applause on the Democratic side. Oh, I see the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] faintly applauds at this time, but I will point out to the gentleman from Indiana that at this time there comes no applause from the Democratic side, for the shoe seems to be on the other foot.

Mr. Longworth said in reply to that:

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Payne bill gave, as much as any tariff bill could, a chance to every Member of this House to indicate his views and to have them adopted in the tariff bill. I say this bill is a personal victory for the leader of the Republican Party on this floor. [Applause on the Republican side.] I say that it is a personal victory for the leader of our party in this Nation—the President of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.] And as such it should be supported by every Republican in this House.

The victory seems to have been lost somewhere in the shuffle—not in the case of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. He explained his bill to his constituency, but a President of the United States is among the missing, along with everything else, except Vermont and Utah. [Applause and laughter.]

Each old political party has had its chance for a national revision; each has had its opportunity on the tariff. The Republicans rejected the plan to give us a revision of the tariff so that Congressmen and Senators might understand its provisions—a revision one schedule at a time. The Democrats adopted the rejected plan of the Republicans, held to it for one year, and then rejected it themselves and went back to the old omnibus system. That is, on the one occasion the tariff was revised by its friends, and the people, the first party in interest, and their Representatives were excluded. Now the tariff has been revised by its enemies, and the people, still the first party in interest, are again excluded with their Representatives.

I say to you as I stand here that I have a firm conviction that the people of this country, after their experience with your last production, will stand for this sort of tariff procedure no longer; that this is the last slapdash, guesswork, random tariff bill that will ever go through Congress. And I believe with all my heart and soul that it is impossible for the people of this country to look for substantial reform along this line either to you Democrats or to you Republicans. I believe they will take a new instrument, a party with full faith in the people in its heart, a party responsive to the prevalent sense of justice and believing in the right of the people to know what transpires in this House, demanding that the representatives of the people shall come here as independent individuals, and not as the slavish followers of leaders. For I believe the time is coming when the people of this country will cease to travel from the Democratic frying pan into the Republican fire and back again, when they will put the Progressive Party in power and frame a tariff in the only just way a tariff can be framed—one schedule at a time, on facts adduced by a scientific tariff commission. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas has used 21 minutes and reserves 9 minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt to minimize the efficient and satisfactory services of the Ways and Means Committee on the tariff question, because I agree with their bill and approve of it from beginning to end, and think it is the greatest piece of legislation ever placed upon the statute books. I do, however, desire in the time allotted to me to ask this House to realize that there are two very important amendments pending before them dealing with gambling in American farm products. I desire at the same time to call the attention of the Democrats of the House to the fact that the Democratic platform in Baltimore, in terms as solemn as could be written, pledged themselves to free the American farmer from this tyranny of gambling in farm products and to insure to him an honest market in which to sell the products of the farm.

The provision is short. I print it in full; it is as follows:

We believe in encouraging the development of a modern system of agriculture and a systematic effort to improve the conditions of trade in farm products so as to benefit both the consumers and producers. And as an efficient means to this end we favor the enactment by Congress of legislation that will suppress the pernicious practice of gambling in agricultural products by organized exchanges or others.

On this platform the American people elected a Democratic House, a Democratic Senate, and a Democratic President. I am one of those old-fashioned Democrats who believes platform-pledges should be kept to the letter. I believe when any party holds out solemn pledges in a platform to the people that the people have a right to rely on their fulfillment and that the Congress which fails to perform them falls far short of its duty.

Again, I want to call attention to the fact that this Democratic House is well committed to the proposition of stamping out gambling in farm products. In the Sixty-first Congress we passed what was then known as the Scott bill by an overwhelming majority, seeking to stamp out gambling in futures. Again, in the last Congress we passed the Burleson or Beall bill seeking to stamp out gambling in farm products. Many Members of the House on both sides of the Chamber have had bills pending for 6, 10, and some as far back as 20 years, seeking exactly this end. The Hatch bill, which passed both Houses and was ditched in conference, was along the same line. The Senate in this instance has placed an amendment on the bill which, in my judgment, goes a good long way in the right direction. If I had my own personal preference I would make it more severe than this Senate amendment for I would like to do away with gambling altogether. If I could instead of placing the rate at one-tenth of 1 per cent, which means a species of taxation and a semirecognition of the justice of the scheme, I would place it at 10 per cent and stamp the evil out of this country altogether. [Applause.] The substitute offered by the gentleman from Alabama, and which I assume may be adopted, is perhaps a short step in the right direction, but I believe it has less teeth in it than the Senate amendment, so personally I very much prefer the Senate amendment even to the Underwood amendment. [Applause.] I wish the parliamentary situation was such that we could amend the Senate amendment and raise the rate. Then there could be no doubt of complete eradication. I have no sympathy with the proposition that we can regulate crime by any sort of taxation, by any sort of tribute levied upon it, but I believe that the American farmer desires its complete eradication.

I want to call attention to a resolution passed at Salina, Kans., on the 6th day of this very month. Twenty-eight States were represented, representing 3,000,000 American farmers. Those 3,000,000 of American farmers in a resolution couched in the strongest of terms asked this Congress to give them an open and honest market in which to sell the products of their farms—asked us to stamp out gambling in farm products on the exchanges. I beg you in this moment of haste if you are going to adopt an amendment do not adopt one that will leave a hole in the net by which they will slip through. I fear the substitute amendment will let them get away, and I believe it for this reason: Mr. Speaker, for the last 10, 12, and 20 years the amount of actual spot cotton that seeks the New York Cotton Exchange has decreased constantly each year. In 1901 205,000 bales of actual spot cotton reached the New York Cotton Exchange. In 1906 approximately 6,000 bales reached the New York Cotton Exchange, and I now call your attention to the startling fact that last year they sold fifteen times the amount of cotton produced in the whole United States, and in 1911 over 16,000,000 bales were produced in the whole United States. I do not know how you gentlemen will feel about it, but it seems to me such an enormous speculation, it seems to me such an inflation up and down of prices as this frenzied speculation must bring about, must be unwholesome, must be unnatural, must be unhealthy. It seems to me that no better opportunity will ever come than that provided by the Senate amendment—that is, to adopt the Senate amendment—that will be a stepping stone that will finally eradicate the evil altogether.

I have been permitted to remain in Congress and observe the annual appropriations for the promotion of agriculture in this country go upward each year, until in the last annual appropriation bill it reached the sum of $17,982,945. That is the largest annual appropriation ever made by Congress for the promotion of agriculture in this country. I am proud, personally, to know that this Democratic Congress recognizes the necessity of raising the appropriation even yet. It begins to look like the farmers' cares are our cares and that agriculture might take a new lease on life.

Again, I am proud to have remained in Congress sufficiently long to see lumber take its place on the free list, so that home builders may have better homes for less money. It has long been my hope and my efforts have long been in the direction of aiding the settlers, the homesteaders, the home builders, and the town builders on the bald prairies of the West by releasing them from the grasp of the Lumber Trust. It has been a long-felt want among those settlers and home builders, and I am proud that this Congress has made them secure in that hope, for within the pages of the pending tariff bill there is a provision which has passed both Houses and will before the end of this week be signed by the President which gives us lumber free of tariff burdens.

Again, I am proud that every agricultural implement used by the American farmer, from the garden hoe to the steam thrasher, upon the passage of this bill, which will become a law before the end of this week, will take its place on the free list, so the American farmer will in the future be free from the clutches and ravages of the American Harvester Trust.

Again, I am proud to have been a Member of Congress while wool took its place on the free list, so that threadbare limbs could be better clothed for less money and that the Woolen Trust might not longer like the viper sap the lifeblood from the labor and energies of America's poor.

Again, I am proud to have remained a Member of Congress until such time as Congress in its wisdom and two-thirds of the State legislatures have adopted an amendment providing that hereafter Senators shall be elected by the popular vote of the people. This leaves the doors of the American Senate, our highest legislative body, ajar to every ambitious youth within this country. With the election of Senators by a popular vote, dollars can not outstrip brains; crooked politicians can not overreach honest endeavor; bickering, bartering, corrupt legislatures can not longer veto the will of the electorate. Senatorships can not longer be bought like the meat on the butcher's scales. All this and, nay, more, have been helpful to America's 40,000,000 producers, but there yet remains one desire of the American farmer which towers above them all. He desires to have an open and an honest market on which to sell the products of his toil—the desire to be free from the stock gamblers who have too long manipulated prices behind closed doors to the great detriment of both producer and consumer alike in this country.

It has been asserted by advocates of the exchanges that the American farmer was in favor of it and would object to stamping it out. I scarcely think it necessary to answer this charge, but will present the following resolution, passed and adopted by the National Farmers' Union, with 28 States represented, at Salina, Kans., September 6, 1913, which certainly ought to settle that phase of the matter. This position is where it has always been. They desire its early demise. The resolution is as follows:

Whereas gambling in cotton and other farm products is a vicious, immoral evil that has been fully investigated and reported upon by congressional committees and executive branches of the Federal Government, as well as testified to time and again before our national lawmakers; and

Whereas such gambling in farm products threatens the very foundation of our financial and business and commercial prosperity, and should be abolished, not licensed or legalized by an internal-revenue duty short of one that would actually destroy it: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union, in national convention at Salina, Kans., representing over 3,000,000 farmers, That we urge the abolition of gambling and certain commercial different practices and fraudulent transactions on the exchanges by which the prices are regularly depressed during the harvest seasons and run up 50 and 60 per cent later, and that some such bill as has passed the lower branch of Congress repeatedly and is now before the Senate and House be passed.

The question before us is not a new one—that of eradicating and driving out gambling in American farm products. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD teems with bills, speeches, arguments, and debates, parliamentary tangles, and efforts to pass some legislation that will put a stop to these practices in America. In 1907, when I first became a Member of Congress, I made extended investigations on this particular subject. I find that the present Secretary of State, the Hon. William J. Bryan, in a speech delivered on Monday, June 18, 1894, in the Fifty-third

Congress, second session, denounced the gambling in farm products in the following language:

When the farmer has taken the chances of rain and drought, when he has taken the chances which must come to the farmer as they scarcely come to anybody else, when he has escaped the grasshopper and the chinch bug and the rain and the hail and the dry winds, I insist that he shall not then be left to the mercy of a gang of speculators who for their own gain will take out of him as much of the remainder as they can possibly get.

Again, I presented my then pending bill to the various farmers' union organizations of my State, dealing with this identical subject, it being H. R. 11785 of the first session of the Sixtieth Congress. The bill was indorsed by 41 farmers' organizations in my State, copies of which I will print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a part of my remarks.

Again, Mr. S. H. Greely, a Chicago commission merchant, in his testimony in substance says that the law of supply and demand no longer controls prices of farm products, which are regulated by four distinct systems—bucket shops, railroads, warehouses, and future speculation. Mr. Greely, a seasoned commission merchant, asserted that from 75 to 90 per cent of the business done on the stock exchanges is fictitious, and that the success of the bucket shops is depressing to prices and markets.

Mr. Joseph Brigham, who was Assistant Secretary of Agriculture during the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, testified before an investigating committee that gambling in farm products on the exchanges tends to injure the American farmer.

Mr. Franklin Dye, former secretary of the State board of agriculture of New Jersey, was of the opinion that gambling in farm products was detrimental to both consumer and producer alike.

Mr. Michael P. Moran, at one time president of the National Grain Growers' Association, advocated the total abolition of gambling in futures, holding the bucket shop and exchanges to be destroyers of values.

William A. Graham, former president of the North Carolina Farmers' Alliance, had no doubt that dealing in futures has much to do with the low prices of farm products, and believed that the Government ought to treat such dealing as it did the Louisiana lottery—stamp it out.

Mr. O. B. Stevens, former commissioner of agriculture of the State of Georgia, declared that grain and cotton gambling had been very harmful to the farmers of the South and to industry in general. He believed that if all gambling in futures could be suppressed the price of commodities would advance and the farmers would be in much better condition.

Mr. J. Pope Brown, president of the Georgia State Agricultural Society, was of the opinion that dealing in options and futures has a tendency to demoralize the prices of cotton, and on the whole to depress them. Forty, fifty, or a hundred times as much cotton is sold in a week on the exchanges as is raised in an entire year, and it is apparent that such speculation is inimical to the best interests of producer and consumer.

In 1893 President Cleveland, in his inaugural address, spoke in the strongest language against trade conspiracies which, he said, "were unnatural and opposed to all American sense of fairness."

In 1894 the German Emperor announced in his speech from the throne the introduction of two Government measures "in connection with the gambling 'future' systems and agricultural depression, in order to protect the trading and industrial community."

If time permitted, I might give authorities that would be both startling and amazing—still the practice has gone on.

I have consulted authorities on this proposition, have gone and visited the exchanges in person, have read briefs, pamphlets, and circulars both for and against, have tried to fathom and understand the arguments both pro and con, and as a result of it all I have come to the conclusion:

1. That "dealers in futures," "dealers in margins," "bucket-shop dealers," and gamblers in American farm products are conducting a fictitious, fraudulent, and dangerous business in New York, which has a very depressing effect on the price of farm products and is stifling both to purchaser and consumer.

2. As a result of it all I am convinced that by false reports and fictitious sales these cotton gamblers are playing largely to control the prices of American farm products, are playing to raise and lower them almost at will and wholly independent of the law of supply and demand.

3. Again, I have become convinced that fully 90 per cent of their dealings are fictitious, irregular, and tend to throttle and curtail the market; that they neither plant, harvest, spin, weave, or handle any considerable part of the product on which they constantly gamble.

4. Again, I am convinced that more than 90 per cent of their contracts are wagers as to whether the price of commodities will go up or down, and that there is no apparent ability to perform the fictitious contracts they enter into at the time of their making, and that they are totally unable to accomplish them even were their intentions good.

5. The best figures and data that I can get hold of on the subject disclose that they buy and sell by these fictitious and fraudulent methods 100,000,000 to 240,000,000 bales annually, when in truth and in fact the largest cotton production in any single year was in 1911, when the total output only reached 16,109,000 bales.

6. I am confirmed in the belief that their fictitious sales have constantly been increasing while the spot cotton actually handled has been constantly decreasing. For example: In 1901 they actually received and handled 205,897 bales of cotton, while in 1906 the cotton actually handled as a decoy on which to base this exorbitant 100 million-bale business reached the insignificant amount of 6,575 bales. I can not believe but what it is the solemn duty of this Congress to stamp out this evil at the earliest possible moment. It is, and always has been, my thought and belief that this gambling in farm products should be eradicated by an ordinary criminal statute the same as we eradicate any other crime. However, for more than 25 years the best talent we have had in Congress have sought to bring it about in this way by independent legislation and have failed. I am, therefore, heartily in favor of an amendment to the tariff bill placing the taxes sufficiently high to drive them from this disreputable and damnable business into fields of honest endeavor by the taxation method, as proposed by the pending amendments to the tariff bill. I am not ready to assert this is the best legislation that could be devised, but it is better than none. Our faces are toward the rising sun; what we lack to-day we can supply to-morrow; it is a start.

Before proceeding further with a description of this subject let us look at the equation and see who is demanding this legislation and who is opposing it. It is my belief that every farmers' organization in the United States, if the matter were put squarely up to them, would, without a moment's hesitation, join hands in stamping it out and eradicating it root and branch. I believe every consumer would like to be free from the uncertain and exorbitant profits that he must of necessity share in paying before the gambling in farm products, the stock exchanges, and gambling dens can succeed. I therefore think it safe to say that none but those immediately interested in these transactions or their agents and employees will seek to support and defend such a speculative and outrageous transaction.

It is urged by the stock gamblers and speculators, and some few who have been misled about it, that this weird speculation and gambling is a necessary evil inasmuch as people will gamble. I deny the foundation on which this flimsy argument rests. I deny that gambling is ever necessary to create any healthy condition in prices or anything else, but even granting the erroneous assumption that gambling is necessary, I then assert that this gambling is the worst kind. I assert that it is the most far reaching and that it is not confined alone to the immediate participants or their associates, but is of far-reaching character, reaching innocent ones on every hand who are in no sense to blame or a part of the transaction.

I pause to suggest an example: If Mr. A plays at dice, at cards, at faro, or any other game of chance prohibited by the statutes, he demoralizes himself and denies his family and loved ones his association, attention, and support; he makes himself a criminal in the eyes of the law. His crime is described upon the statute books; his property is subject to confiscation; his crime has subjected him to fine and imprisonment and the world agrees that it is right. No one would repeal the statute if they could. No one could if they would. Still this transaction which no man will seek to uphold has not the far-reaching effect that gambling in farm products has. The latter reaches out its bony hand and levies tribute upon everyone connected with the cotton industry from the time the seed is planted into the fallow soil until it is woven into cloth and made into the costly garment. For example:

A steps into one of the Wall Street dens where agricultural products are gambled upon and trafficked in and buys a margin contract for future cotton at the rate of 10 cents per pound, the same to be delivered some time later, and pays $1 per bale down to hold it. We will say he buys 1,000 bales and pays $1,000 for the option. When he buys it he knows these stock gamblers have no cotton to supply his contract. He knows that there is no such cotton in existence; he knows that the largest crop of cotton that was ever raised in the United States was in 1911, when we produced 16,109,000 bales; he knows they have sold through the exchange many times that amount, or any other reasonable or probable crop. Further, he well knows that he does not want any cotton for export; further, he does not want any cotton for use; further, never expects to see the cotton or have it delivered to him—would not know what to do with it if it was. Now, what does he buy it for? The answer is clear. He buys it as a plain wager as to whether the price will go up or down. What does he do to accomplish the raise in price, so that his fictitious contract may become valuable to him? He at once joins in with other stock gamblers and they put out false and fraudulent reports as to the true output of cotton; further, put out false reports from the ginnings; further, put out false reports from foreign countries, and the farmer is induced to hold his crop, thinking he will get a higher price; further, that while the farmer holds his spot cotton the spinners will become anxious to buy their contracts for spots for the ensuing year.

The unsuspecting American producer thinks these false reports are genuine and are a good criterion to follow. Thinks he, "I will hold my crop; will wait for higher and better prices." The spinner thinks it is time for next year's supply; he finds there is little spot cotton on the market. Cotton goes up and is apparently scarce and continues for a time to go up in price. The stock gambler and dealer, while the price is high, is hurriedly disposing of his cotton-future contracts as fast as he can, some to the spinner and some to the unsuspecting speculating buyers. Well knowing his selling price is speculative and unhealthy, he can reduce the price by exposing his original false reports so that he can buy the future contract back for about half of the amount sold for. The spinners are then supplied with contracts which they expect to be carried out. There is little call for spot cotton. The false reports have spent their force, and then comes a reaction. Cotton goes down, down, down, until it has reached a price at which the producer can hardly afford to raise it and pick it.

What does the stock gambler and dealer do? He lays in wait like a tiger for its prey, and the speculator, with his little or no means with which to pay the balance of his contract price, is forced to sell his equity or interest in his fictitious contract for what he can get. The farmer's taxes, mortgage, and interest become due and he is forced to sell his cotton product for what he can get. He is not situated so he can hold his crop. What does the stock dealer do? He buys back from the lamb speculator for 6 cents a pound the future contract he had previously sold to him for 12 cents. He buys the spot or actual cotton from the farmer for 6 cents and supplies the contracts that have reached the hands of the spinners at 12 cents. Here the farmer has sold for less than it cost to produce the cotton. The sacrifice and his loss are hard to bear and without his fault. Here the weak and unsuccessful speculator or "lamb," as he is called in bucket-shop parlance, has lost his money. The spinner has paid higher prices than he should pay for the cotton; the stock-exchange gambler has made the money, and practically all of it.

Which of these classes have profited? Which have lost? The answer comes that "surely the farmer has not profited," for he has sold his cotton for less than it cost him to raise it and has no product to sell and no money with which to buy again. The imprudent lamb has lost his money and has performed a hard day's labor in the toilsome field of experience. The stock gambler or middle man has the money in his pocket, and he is safe and sound and consequently of the opinion that Congress should not disturb business by legislation of this sort. The spinner has paid an exorbitant price, but has a chance to get out. We ask, how? Why, he can weave the cloth and add his profit on top of the swollen price he was forced to pay the gambler, and the poor consumer who wears the garment pays tribute to them all. In this transaction there is no escape for consumer or producer. The manufacturer has a humble chance, while the speculator preys on them all. Is there wonder that costly briefs and heart-rending appeals are made to us not to act on the part of the exchange crowd?

You may say, Why does not the farmer hold his crop? Many of our American farmers are in debt. They have mortgages on their homes; many of them have mortgages on their teams and wagons, mortgages on their crops. Interest rates are high. Their annual credit is extended to them on the strength of their cotton crop, which must be sold the moment it is ripe. They know not the facts, the bickerings and jugglings of these wily speculators. It is all in secret, all behind closed doors. Memberships on the exchange are worth from forty to sixty thousand dollars apiece. It is all confusing to their brain. They must sell their products or lose their homes under the mortgages; must sell or lose their teams; must sell or lose their cotton crops, with court costs and attorneys' fees along with it. Interest rates are high. The producer who earns slowly but honestly can not compete with these speculators on interest rates, for one earns honestly but slowly, while the other earns rapidly but dishonestly. There is no alternative for the producer. He needs the help of Congress to make him secure in an open and an honest market. It is therefore the duty of this Congress to help maintain an open, uniform, and healthy market for him, and it is our duty now.

The farmer is at the additional great disadvantage when the prices are rising and falling almost with the rising and falling of the tide. Their uniformity in change is not governed by the sun, the moon, or the revolutions of the earth. The sliding and gliding of prices come not with equal regularity so honest calculations may be made, but without notice, without warning, and while the farmer is wholly unawares change with the will and wish of the future dealers who operate independent of the law of supply and demand, independent of right and wrong, independent of intrinsic value, and even wholly independent of the very existence of the actual commodity itself.

The producer and consumer alike are chained like Prometheus to this practice of future dealing, fictitious dealing, margin dealing, corner dealing, and bucket-shop dealing that divest them of an honest, healthy, and open market, divest them of the value of their products without advice, consultation, or a sigh. The stock-exchange advocates in their costly briefs, their telegrams, and letters assert "that this system furnishes them a boundless market." "They need a market as wide and boundless as the ocean," they will blandly remark. It is quite true; they do need a boundless market. But the difference of opinion is whether this fiction and gambling will afford it to them. Instead of affording a boundless market as broad as the ocean they are afforded a market the width of Wall Street, and that, during the recent disclosures, is not a very popular street at that. It but serves to blind the eyes and shackle the feet of the American producer in a network of unlawful practices behind closed, locked, and bolted doors. The total number of members belonging to this benign concern is at all times limited to 450. The membership fee on this New York Exchange fluctuates from $40,000 to $60,000.

Is such a proceeding as all this conducive to the best interest of our American farmers that we have sworn to protect? Is such bickerings and juggling as that what it takes to afford the producer with an untrammelled, open, boundless, and honest market? Must we confess that such an evil as that is an inevitable condition that we must submit to and refuse to legislate upon? Is that good government for all and special privileges for none? Will that serve as a protection to the 40,000,000 people that are engaged in agriculture? Does that tend to promote and encourage the historic and noble art of agriculture? The answer comes from every farmers' union in all the land; the answer comes from most of the rulers of the leading countries of the world; the answer comes from most of the legislatures of the States where the fleecy staple grows; the answer comes from most of the Governments of the world; the answer comes from W. J. Bryan in his speech in Congress in 1894—all answering it is unhealthy, unwholesome, undesired, and should be stamped out.

I have on my desk, and I receive almost daily in the mails, briefs, pamphlets, circulars, letters, and appeals sent out, transmitted, and inspired by the gamblers in agricultural products in one form or another who urge and stubbornly contend that speculation is healthy and conducive of higher prices. I can not believe that something founded on nothing can create something. For example: If the speculator produces nothing, manufactures nothing, neither does he weave nor spin, how can the trafficking and machinations of 450 stock gamblers, behind closed doors, in secret, accomplish healthy or wholesome results? Again, it has been contended that the betting and gambling on the prices of cotton, which does not in fact exist, will stimulate the cotton planter in the field to a better yield. Can it with propriety be contended that the speculators will make the cotton easier to gather, more susceptible of the loom or the costly garment? Can it be well contended that the bickerings, jugglings, and gambings connected with the sale of more than 100,000,000 bales a year, when the highest output in the entire United States in any single year will not reach one-tenth that amount, can be conducive of the best results? Again, would the fact that each year the spot cotton actually used in this business decreases while the speculation and gambling increases benefit the producer and the consumer? To me there can be but one answer. In the last analysis all this gambling, all this fiction, all these fraudulent and false reports are but to blind the eyes of the farmer, to dim his vision and hope for justice, to mar his hope of reward, to place a blight upon his efforts, and bring nothing but poverty in return for his faithful, industrious efforts. No. It is all wrong; I can not believe that from nothing something can be produced; I can not believe but what both producer and consumer would be better off if this gambling as to whether the price will go up or down could be stamped out first, last, and for all. If this be done, then the American producer would enjoy his first fair day, and would say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

One brief, which has been on my desk for some time purporting to come from 16-18 Wall Street, New York, blandly argues that their transactions are just as honorable as the man who gives his note for $100 to another, contending that both are contracts to do something in the future. Let us pause and compare. Comparison is always a fair method to arrive at true and just conclusions. For example, we will say Mr. A lends Mr. B $100. Mr. B executes a promissory note to Mr. A, which, of course, is a signed promise to pay a certain sum of money on the future date therein mentioned. Here Mr. A has money that he does not need; here Mr. B needs money that he does not have; here an actual commodity is transferred from one person who does not need it to another person who does need it. This transaction is one born of necessity and is honorable in its every detail. On the other hand, in a cotton gambling transaction the gambler sells cotton that he does not have; cotton that he can not procure; cotton that does not grow; cotton that is not in existence; cotton that will not be in existence from the very laws of nature and the abilities of this country to produce. The gambling transaction is pregnant with deception, charged with false assumption, based upon nothing and is purely and simply a gamble as to whether or not the price of cotton will go up or down. The buyer is well aware the seller has no cotton to sell him and would not want it if he did have. He does not pay over the price of the cotton; he merely makes a payment on it at a dollar a bale, which is nothing more than a wager deposited with the speculator to be turned over to the relative owner, based on the rise and fall of the price of the fleecy staple. Such mysterious, foolish, unreal, unhealthy transactions as this latter one is a blight upon agriculture. It is the duty of this Congress, before it completes its labors at this special session, to stamp it out once and for all.

Again, the letters and briefs with which the membership of this House are constantly flooded are consistent in their contention that there is no way to separate the wheat from the chaff. In other words, it is difficult for Congress to show which ones are legitimate contracts and which ones are not. I confess this has been the perplexing problem, and one that has so long postponed action by the Congress of the United States. I contend, however, that the wheat can be separated from the chaff and that Congress can legislate out the chaff and retain every kernel of wheat. For example, Mr. A sells Mr. B 160 acres of land for $10 an acre. They draw up a contract similar, if not identical, with the cotton contract, save that one relates to land and one relates to cotton. In this Mr. B only pays $1 per acre down on the land and agrees to pay $9 per acre additional at some time in the future. If Mr. A had good title to the land and authority to sell it, the transaction is a valid one, and Mr. B will take the land and pay the balance. If it develops that Mr. A had no title to the 160 acres of land and had no authority to sell the same, he lays himself criminally liable for fraud under the statutes, which would make him criminally guilty of fraud and subject him to indictment and imprisonment. I assert, in the same way could the valid, healthful, and legitimate contracts regarding the American farmers' produce be protected and upheld, and that the gambling, which is fictitious, unreal, unwholesome, unhealthy, and vicious, could be stamped out and a penalty prescribed for it on the statute books.

If it were true that the cotton exchange were a necessity to the cotton growers, the following figures, compiled by the Census Bureau, conclusively show that the actual spot cotton used by the New York Cotton Exchange has been, with little interruption, constantly on the decrease for the last series of years:

	Bales actually received.
1901	205,897
1902	161,964
1903	57,577
1904	45,123
1905	33,798
1906	6,575
1907	23,108

It seems to me that the figures above for the last 20 years would furnish ample foundation for us to believe that as the fictitious business prospers and reaches up to more than a hundred-million-bale mark in a single year it is at the expense of the real business. This constant decrease can but lead us to further believe that the future or gambling in cotton for business and the actual cotton business do not walk hand in hand, are not a necessity, are not conducive to the best interests of the producer or the consumer, but are a constant menace instead. The figures above quoted certainly prove well that the cotton does not seek this gigantic gambling institution. The location of this gambling institution conclusively shows that the New York Exchange is far removed from where the fleecy staple grows. We can not but conclude that the farther apart the real product of the soil is from this institution the better for both.

The figures, if we can rely on figures and they prove anything, prove it a myth and a snare. They offer nothing to commend it and everything to condemn it.

Oh, but the friend of the cotton exchange and bucket shop says: "Why, the price of cotton is higher now than when the bucket shop was in its infancy." This may be true; but of course there is no sound course of reasoning that can trace the credit of this to the gamblers in farm products. Everything is higher now than it used to be. Money is more plentiful; hence commodities of all kinds are high. It is also true that cotton is more universally used. It now takes the place of the silkworm and the sheep. There was a time when it could only be used when woven with hemp, flax, wool, or silk. To-day, under the benign influence of modern science and invention, this useful product stands alone and is king. It has robbed the silkworm of his tedious and toilsome task. It has robbed the historic shepherd of his usefulness. Cotton is king of every clime. It is used in every home. It pleads with this Congress to allow it to be sold on an open and an honest market free from snares, pitfalls, and gambling dens, which do not help, but constantly retard, disappoint, and annoy.

The recent panic of 1907, with its many ghastly disclosures, very vividly demonstrates to a marked degree who is even furnishing the money to carry on this business. When the southern and western banker called for his account in the local bank in the fall of 1907 he learned that his money had gone East to the reserve banks, as it has been permitted to do under the very defective banking laws of the present. The reply came that he could not draw his own money on account.

The reserve banks would not, if you please, pay over the funds that had been intrusted to their institutions by the western and southern banks. Where was the money? The answer came faint but clear. It was loaned to carry on the very business the American farmers are asking to have driven from our borders—the stock gamblers. Whose money was it? We can easily trace it. The local farmers and business men of the West and South had unsuspectingly deposited their money and little accounts with their local banks. The local banks in turn had forwarded it to the eastern banks. The eastern banks in turn had loaned it to the benign speculators with which to gamble on American products. I respectfully ask, Who furnished the products? The American farmer. I again repeat, Who furnished the money? The American farmer. The American farmer here furnishes all the paraphernalia for this New York Stock Exchange gambling, but is not permitted to sit in the game. He is not, if you please, permitted to even make inquiry as to what is to be done with his money or his product, but must believe the gamblers when they say, "It is inevitable, for men will speculate, men will gamble." Sir, will this Congress permit 40,000,000 American farmers to longer be looted, overridden, and abused? Will men adopt some makeshift in their haste to dispose of a matter so vital? Legislation should come on this tariff bill and we should pause and digest it. It is all important.

Who is here defending this nefarious business? Is it the American farmer? No! He is opposed to it. Is it the American consumer? No! He is opposed to it. It robs him. These several defenses come from a few good men, deceived, but mostly from agents of the cotton exchange in one form or the other, seeking to ridicule and disgust Members with the idea of legislation to prevent it. Such a defense, though unsound, is dangerous to those who are not personally and vitally interested in the matter.

I have read their several defenses carefully, and they have nothing even bordering on a true or genuine defense. They offer such defense as "men will gamble, and there is no use to try to prevent it." Shame on such a theory! Shame on such an argument! Shame on such a principle! There is no place in the world where such a principle, where such a thought, can find lodgment in an honest breast or a thoughtful brain. It may be practiced by good men, but they wink at vice and forget virtue when they do it, and an honest man will not cling to or be swayed by such logic.

These defenders of gambling in farm products set up such logic as the following: "Why it would be to the utter ruin to let the spinner and the producer deal direct." "Their interests are directly antagonistic to each other," they blandly contend.

"One, you see, is the buyer; he wants to buy as cheaply as possible, while the producer is the seller, and he wants to sell as high as possible." Think of this logic.

As to the status of the buyer and the seller and their respective interests with reference to the price, we must all subscribe to the fact that their interests are opposed to each other in that regard. But it is an open, an apparent divergence of interest, that accompanies every legal business transaction known to the business world.

Now, pause for a moment and think of this logic. Now, I want to urge this Congress to think of what a deplorable condition that would be to put the real producer in if, perchance, he was ever permitted to sell to the real spinner himself instead of letting a horde of middlemen who have bought, sold, and juggled with the product, and every one made a profit before it reaches the true market, which is the spinner. It is to be remembered of them—that paternal, knightly, and good Samaritan spirit of the New York exchange in their telegrams, briefs, letters, very tastefully gotten up, full of deception, full of ridicule, full of snares, and full of pitfalls, aimed at those who have not a deep interest, and who are not willing to study the philosophy they call into vogue. It is amusing and interesting to know of the keen sensibilities they possess for the producer.

No; I never was more certain of any fact than I am that it is all wrong. It has not a peg on which to stand. It is a vicious practice of speculating that this Commonwealth not only does not need, but is very desirous of getting rid of. It needs legislation to wipe it off. It needs hasty legislation to do it. There are two amendments and a number of bills pending on the subject. I have introduced one on the subject in every session of Congress since 1907. These amendments to this tariff bill now pending may not be the best. But in any event, they are better than none. It is a step toward the honest and open market, and I am for it. What the 40,000,000 American farmers want is legislation to cure these evils. No matter whose amendment or bill you pass or from which side of the House it comes; in either event it shall have my loyal support so long as it travels in the right direction. It is relief the farmers want. They want it now, not next session or next year, but now.

Let the farmer have an open market where all can read and all can know. Let the farmer have a chance. His lot is not the brightest in all the land. Let that ever-faithful wife and children of tender years, when they crawl on their hands and knees from gray daylight till close of day gathering the fleecy staple in the sunny Southland, believe and know that they are gathering nature's most useful crop for an honest and open market. Let them feel a true and honest pride in procuring and being made secure in a fair price, and let it serve as a solace to their tired constitutions, but ever-rested souls, that this Congress has yet a heart that throbs, yet an ear that hears, and is willing to give them heed.

Let us not permit the bucket shops and dens of gamblers in farm products to longer curb, throttle, checkmate, divert, debauch, and destroy this noble and historic art. Let us not permit them to discourage, hamper, and burden the 40,000,000 of American citizens who are engaged in agricultural pursuits living and residing on 6,000,000 cultivated farms. Let us not permit further exploitation of that class that produce more every year than they themselves consume. It is wrong in principle. It is wrong in morals. It is the burning duty of this Congress to make it extinct, either by criminal prosecution or by taxation as provided by this amendment, or both.

The farmers know not of the "bulls" and "bears." They do not want to know them. They do not want to know of or concerning them. It has been humorously but truthfully said by those more humorous than I that our American farmers do not care to know of any bulls but "Durham bulls" nor any bears but the ones in the zoological gardens in safe captivity. I take it this rule is quite universal and applies to the American producers generally.

The products of the soil should be a sacred matter. They should not be longer subjected to this orgy of speculation by a failure on the part of this Congress to act. This Congress has authority to act—has authority to go into this matter in detail. This Congress has men on both sides of the House who have introduced bills on the subject.

This is not a partisan question. This is not one that Republicans should be against because the Democrats are for. This is not an amendment that will unsettle conditions that ought to exist. This is not an amendment that will wound the feelings of any, save a few gamblers or their agents who are making their living by irregularity and speculation. It is a measure the farmers are pleading for, a measure the consumers all need and many of them are asking for, a measure that is to-day being opposed chiefly by New York speculators who are annually robbing the farmers out of millions of dollars, not by honest business methods, but by fraud, vice, stealth, and irregular transactions, in secret, behind closed doors.

If you legislate for them as you ought to do it will not retard the growth of the historic cotton plant in the springtime. It will not make the cotton bloom in midsummer with less splendor; it will not increase the appetite of the ever-vigilant boll weevil; it will not cause the bolls holding the valued product to open with less speed or less certainty; it will not make the task of gathering it more difficult; it will not increase the expense of hauling to market or of ginning. The fleecy staple will germinate, grow, open, and yield as of yore. To refuse to legislate against this evil will not make the wheat of the North and West greener in winter and spring, will not make it more golden at the harvest time; it will not quicken the binder or the sickle; it will not make the showers less plentiful in summer; it will not make the sun-kissed petals produce less than before. But if Congress will act nature will continue to do her annual task, and do it well. Agriculture will progress and improve. The ever-faithful American farmer will start with new zeal and new energy and agriculture will take a new lease on life. [Applause.]

It has been asserted in this debate, asserted in the press, that the American farmer himself did not desire this legislation to pass. I do not think it necessary to spend time on this subject, but to make sure about it I will present the indorsement of 41 farmers' union locals from my own State of Oklahoma, who indorsed a bill introduced by myself in 1908 for the express purpose of driving the gamblers out of business. I will print them herewith.

FERRIS BUCKET-SHOP BILL INDORSED BY OKLAHOMA FARMERS' UNION.
BECKHAM COUNTY INDORSEMENT.
DOXEY, BECKHAM COUNTY, OKLA.,
February 19, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

We indorse your "antibucket-shop" bill and want it to pass.
(Signed by 12 farmers.)

JACKSON COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

MARTHA, JACKSON COUNTY, OKLA.,
March 16, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned, are very anxious to have the "bucket-shop" business abolished. We believe it an injustice to the farmer.
(Signed by 20 farmers.)

JACKSON COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

ELDORADO, JACKSON COUNTY, OKLA.,
March 29, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

I indorse your "antibucket-shop" bill now pending before Congress.
J. M. BAKER,
President of Eldorado Local.

POTTAWATOMIE COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

WANETTE, POTTAWATOMIE COUNTY, OKLA.,
March 19, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned, do heartily indorse your "antibucket-shop" bill and want it to become a law.
(Signed by 30 farmers.)

CLEVELAND COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

LEXINGTON, CLEVELAND COUNTY, OKLA.,
March 17, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

We indorse everything that you have done and are trying to do, especially in passing the "antibucket-shop" bill, No. 11785. The bill will stop gambling in farm products.
(Signed by 19 citizens of Lexington, Okla.)

GREER COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

SANDY, GREER COUNTY, OKLA.,
March 16, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned citizens of Greer County, Okla., heartily indorse your "antibucket-shop" bill, No. 11785. We ask all who are interested in the welfare of the "common people" to assist you in its passage.
(Signed by 35 farmers.)

POTTAWATOMIE COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

GRIFFIN UNION, No. 314,
Trousedale, Okla., March 15, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned members of this local, do petition the House of Representatives, now in session in Washington, D. C., that they support House bill 11785.
(Signed by 21 members of local.)

CLEVELAND COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

CANADIAN TOWNSHIP, CLEVELAND COUNTY, OKLA.,
March 17, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS:

We, the undersigned legal voters of Canadian Township, Cleveland County, Okla., do indorse your "antibucket-shop" bill, No. 11785.
(Signed by 17 voters.)

CLEVELAND COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

NORMAN, CLEVELAND COUNTY, OKLA.,

February 14, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

We want all gambling on farm products abolished by law. We heartily indorse your bill on gambling in futures.
(Signed by M. B. Fulkerson, president Cleveland County Farmers' Union, and 9 other members of the local union.)

POTTAWATOMIE COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

TEMPLE HILL LOCAL UNION, No. 315,

Pottawatomie County, Okla., March 16, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS:

We, the undersigned members of the F. E. and C. U. of A. of Pottawatomie County, Okla., do heartily indorse your "antibucket-shop" bill, No. 11785.
(Signed by 15 members of local.)

KIOWA COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

FARMERS' INSTITUTE OF KIOWA COUNTY,

Snyder, Okla., January 16, 1908.

To the Committee on Agriculture:

We, the Farmers' Institute of Kiowa County, Okla., do hereby approve and indorse the principle and purpose of House bill 11785.

W. J. CAUDILL, President.

W. J. MCCOLLUM, Secretary.

WASHITA COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

FARMERS' UNION OF KORN, WASHITA COUNTY, OKLA.,

RED TOP LODGE, No. 605,

Korn, Okla., February 16, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

My order instructed me to express our gratitude to you for the stand that you have taken on bill 11785, now pending in the House. We indorse the bill and want it to become a law.

JOHN ESTES, Secretary-Treasurer.

KIOWA COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

LONE WOLF, OKLA., February 16, 1908.

We, the undersigned citizens and landowners of Kiowa County, Okla., do heartily indorse House bill 11785, introduced in Congress by Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, and want to see the bill pass. We think it for the best interests of the people.
(Sixty signers of Kiowa County.)

STEPHENS COUNTY, OKLA.

PARKS, OKLA., March 15, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS:

We indorse your "antibucket-shop" bill 11785 and wish to see it pass.
(Signed by 30 farmers.)

BECKHAM COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

ERICK, BECKHAM COUNTY, OKLA.,

February 11, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned, heartily indorse your bill to prevent gambling in cotton, grain, and other farm products.
(Signed by 20 farmers.)

GREER COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

LOONEY, GREER COUNTY, OKLA.,

March 19, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

We, the Farmers' Union of Liberty, Local No. 812, do by a unanimous vote adopt the following resolution:

That the Congress of the United States do pass and cause to become a law House bill 11785, so that we can put our produce on the market without being molested and robbed by a lot of gamblers and speculators.

A. C. BOYETT,

President Greer County Farmers' Union.

W. L. OSBAN,

Secretary.

CLEVELAND COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

LITTLE RIVER LOCAL, No. 462,

Cleveland County, Okla., February 4, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

Little River Local, No. 462, of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, has instructed me as its secretary-treasurer to write to you that our local heartily indorses House bill 11785, so vital to the interests of the farmers.

JAS. A. DUNBAR, Secretary-Treasurer.

TILLMAN COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

TILLMAN COUNTY, OKLA.,

March 20, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

We, the Farmers' Union of Tillman County, Okla., met in our annual county meeting March 19, 1908, and passed resolutions indorsing your "antibucket-shop" bill.

J. L. GIVENS, Secretary.

GRADY COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

GRADY COUNTY, OKLA.,

January 22, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

The Farmers' Union of Grady County, in session at Rush Springs, Okla., met on January 17, 1908, and passed resolutions indorsing your bill (H. R. 11785) to prevent gambling in cotton and grain futures.

E. I. WILLIAMS, Secretary.

GREER COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

LONE STAR LOCAL, No. 325,

Kelly, Okla., February 20, 1908.

To Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

The Farmers' Union of Lone Star Local, No. 325, of Greer County, Okla., passed resolutions indorsing your bill to prevent gambling in cotton and grain futures, and instructed me to write you that we as a body of 75 members indorse said bill.

F. M. LOCKE, Secretary.

POTTAWATOMIE COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

ASHER, OKLA., February 16, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

Avoca Union, No. 571, requested me to write you that we agree with you in every particular and that we extend to you our sincere thanks for the interest you have taken in behalf of the producers of all wealth, and that we indorse your "antibucket-shop" bill.

JOHN H. HOOVER,

Member Avoca Union, No. 571.

UNION LABOR AND RAILWAY UNIONS' INDORSEMENT.

THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA,

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,

Guthrie, Okla., March 26, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: We, the joint legislative board of the State of Oklahoma, now assembled at the State capital, Guthrie, Okla., composed of the farmers, American Federation of Labor, and railway unions, do hereby make the following request:

Whereas we do heartily indorse the "antibucket-shop" bill, No. 11785, now pending in the House of Congress, and further request that you use your influence in its passage.

Respectfully submitted.

JACKSON COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

Frazier Local Union, No. 86, Jackson County, Okla., pass resolutions indorsing House bill No. 11785:

ALTUS, OKLA., March 22, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS:

All the members of Frazier Local Union, No. 86, indorse your "antibucket-shop" bill and want it passed.

W. H. XANDER, Secretary.

JACKSON COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

Farmers' Union, No. 384, Jackson County, Okla., indorse bill 11785:

ELDORADO, OKLA., March 24, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: Your "antibucket-shop" bill was presented to our Local Union No. 384, and it was unanimously indorsed. We hope you will succeed in getting your bill passed.

J. A. DICKERSON.

CLEVELAND COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

Members of Cleveland County, Okla., F. E. C. U. of A. indorse House bill 11785:

NOBLE, OKLA., March 18, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS:

We, the undersigned, heartily indorse your efforts to suppress gambling in farm products. We urge the passage of your "antibucket-shop" bill 11785.

(Signed by 24 members of the Farmers' Union.)

Resolution adopted by Victory Local Union, No. 738, F. E. and C. U. of A.:

MARCH 14, 1908.

Be it resolved by this union, That we favor the "antibucket-shop" bill, No. 11785, offered by Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, of Oklahoma. We urge the United States Congress to act favorably on the bill.

I. M. BYRD,

J. B. KETCHERSID,

J. P. HENSLEY,

Resolution Committee.

M'CLAIN COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

Resolutions from Washington Local, No. 392, F. E. and C. U. of A., McClain County, Okla.:

WASHINGTON, OKLA., March 31, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS:

Your "antibucket-shop" bill, No. 11785, was read and discussed in our union and unanimously indorsed. We sincerely urge that Congress pass the bill.

W. W. YODER, Secretary.

ROGER MILLS COUNTY INDORSEMENT.

Willow Springs Local, No. 350, Roger Mills County, Okla., pass resolutions indorsing the bill No. 11785:

BERLIN, OKLA., March 21, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS has introduced in Congress a bill known as the "antibucket-shop" bill, No. 11785: Therefore be it Resolved by Willow Springs Local Union, No. 350, F. E. and C. U. of A., That we urge Congress to pass said bill to prohibit gambling in farm products.

A. M. UNDERWOOD,

Secretary-Treasurer.

INDORSEMENTS FROM BECKHAM COUNTY, OKLA.

MAYFIELD, OKLA., March 21, 1908.

To the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned voters of Beckham County, Okla., respectfully and earnestly ask your votes in the interest of the "antibucket-shop" bill, known as House bill No. 11785, introduced by Congressman FERRIS, of Oklahoma.

(Signed by 15 farmers.)

INDORSEMENTS FROM WASHITA COUNTY, OKLA.

FARMERS' LOCAL UNION, No. 136,
Cordell, Okla., March 25, 1908.

To the United States Congress:

Whereas there is now pending for the action of Congress a bill known as "antibucket-shop" bill No. 11785: Be it

Resolved, That we give such Congressmen as give the bill their support our hearty cooperation, and Hon. SCOTT FERRIS especially.

Be it further resolved, That we ask our friends in Congress to notify us of those who oppose the bill that we may mark them for future elections.

W. B. DRUCE,
R. R. NANCE,
JESSE STOVALL,
Committee.

(Also signed by 14 other farmers.)

INDORSEMENTS FROM BECKHAM COUNTY, OKLA.

ERICK, OKLA., March 26, 1908.

We, the members of North Star Union, No. 250, do petition and pray that Congress pass an "antibucket-shop" bill to put a stop to gambling in farm products.

(Signed by 29 farmers.)

INDORSEMENTS FROM GRADY COUNTY, OKLA.

COLBERT LOCAL, No. 76, F. E. and C. U. of A.,
Bradley, Okla., March 30, 1908.

We, the members of Colbert Local, do indorse, commend, and approve the bill known as "antibucket-shop" bill No. 11785, introduced by the Hon. SCOTT FERRIS in the House of Representatives. We therefore urge the passage of the bill at this session of Congress, as we believe it is one of the crying needs of working humanity.

W. E. SPENCER, President.
N. E. HEYING, Secretary.

INDORSEMENTS FROM M'CLAIN COUNTY, OKLA.

DIBBLE, OKLA., March 28, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.

We, the members of McClain County Local, No. 391, F. E. and C. U. of A., do indorse and recommend "antibucket-shop" bill No. 11785. We think gambling in farm products is against the interest of the farming class.

JERRY RAMSEY, President.
L. H. DAVIS, Secretary.

THE MURRAY COUNTY FARMERS' UNION INDORSES "ANTIBUCKET-SHOP" BILL NO. 11785.

SULPHUR, OKLA., March 23, 1908.

Be it resolved by the Murray County Union in regular session assembled, That we do hereby indorse the efforts of Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, our Representative in Congress, in his efforts to stop gambling in farm products, and we ask all our Representatives and Senators to assist him in every honorable way, to the end that his bill introduced for this purpose may pass and become a law.

Unanimously adopted this 28th day of March, 1908.

BIRT RUCKER,
County Secretary Farmers' Union of Murray County, Okla.

INDORSEMENTS FROM POTTAWATOMIE COUNTY, OKLA.

TROUSDALE, OKLA., R. F. D. No. 2, March 30, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your "antibucket-shop" bill No. 11785 was read before our local, and we unanimously indorse and heartily recommend the passage of said bill. We realize that the worst enemy the farmer has is the parasite who gambles in farm products. We feel that in you we have a representative of the working people of Oklahoma.

W. T. OTIS,
Secretary-Treasurer Cloverdale Local Union, No. 490.

INDORSEMENT FROM STEPHENS COUNTY FARMERS' UNION.

MARLOW, OKLA., March 25, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, as a lodge, hope your "antibucket-shop" bill No. 11785 will pass.

JOHN MARLER, President.
W. D. CARUTHERS,
Secretary-Treasurer Local No. 1451.

FARMERS' UNION LOCAL IN JACKSON COUNTY, OKLA.

WILMOTH, OKLA., March 19, 1908.

To the House of Representatives of the United States,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the members of Farmers' Union Local, No. 588, unanimously favor the "antibucket-shop" bill No. 11785, presented by Hon. SCOTT FERRIS.

C. L. FORD, President.
W. G. BURNS, Secretary.

PRAIRIE VIEW LOCAL UNION, BECKHAM COUNTY, OKLA.

DOXEY, OKLA., March 31, 1908.

To the Congress of the United States:

Prairie View Union in session begs to submit the following resolutions:

That we do hereby indorse "antibucket-shop" bill No. 11785. We ask for the passage of the bill.

J. E. HORENSHELT, President.
C. S. STOKESBERRY, Secretary.

FARMERS' LOCAL UNION, NO. 1215, M'CLAIN COUNTY, OKLA.

PURCELL, OKLA., March 31, 1908.

Be it resolved by the Johnson Local, No. 1215, of the F. E. and C. U. of A., in convention assembled at Johnson, McClain County, Okla., March 31, 1908, That we indorse and recommend the passage of H. R. No. 11785, entitled "A bill to prevent gambling in cotton and grain futures, and providing penalties for the violation thereof," introduced January 6, 1906, by our Representative, Hon. SCOTT FERRIS.

R. E. SINGLETON, Vice President.
J. E. MADDEN, Secretary.

COOPER LOCAL UNION, NO. 183, POTTAWATOMIE COUNTY, OKLA.

ASEER, OKLA., March 22, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

The Cooper Local Union, No. 183, F. E. and C. U. of A., in convention assembled, heartily indorses your "antibucket-shop" bill No. 11785.

F. T. LASTER, Secretary.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, it is utterly impossible in five minutes to discuss the matter I want to discuss. We of the South are especially interested in the cotton-future amendment.

I want to call the attention of the House to the substitute offered by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, that it puts half a cent a bale tax upon a legitimate sale of cotton. That is wrong. In other words, it endeavors in this substitute for the Senate amendment to put a half-cent tax on the sale of a bale of cotton which is absolutely legitimate. If they can put half a cent tax on a legitimate sale of a particular bale of cotton, they can put a dollar on it. I am unwilling to go to the cotton farmer of the South and say to him that when he sells his cotton he is called upon to pay half a cent tax upon the legitimate sale of it.

Another thing. Under the amendment which is offered in the Senate, commonly known as the Clarke amendment, the only tax placed there upon the cotton is a tax of $50 per 100 bales upon a pure gambling transaction, and it is admitted by all the cotton gamblers, whether you like that method of getting at this cotton business or not, that it will put them out of business on the New York and New Orleans Exchanges. The New York Cotton Exchange has ceased to be a cotton exchange. There is no spot cotton worthy of notice bought and sold in New York. The cotton that is bought and sold there is nothing more nor less than pure gambling transactions.

Now, the Democratic Party in its platform, if it means anything, means that it is committed as a party to the suppression of gambling in agricultural products; and I belong to that school of political thought that does not believe it is necessary that men should gamble in the products of the toil of the people of this country in order that they may get a market. The southern cotton farmer, raising cotton that supplies the millions of spindles throughout the world, has a legitimate market for that which he legitimately offers, and he will always find a legitimate purchaser.

The New York future market is not much more than a generation old. In other words, they handled the cotton business before the Civil War, and they handled it after the Civil War, without the intervention of the future market. And to-day the interior cotton buyer that buys the great bulk of the cotton, puts up a margin of $5 per bale for the purpose of buying his cotton, and for $5,000 a cotton buyer can carry in a Southern bank 1,000 bales of cotton and can deliver it to the spinner who needs it.

What is the result under the present system? In round numbers about 120,000,000 bales of cotton are bought and sold on the New York Cotton Exchange, and about 100,000,000 on the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, and more than that on the Liverpool Exchange, and there never has been but 20,000,000 bales of cotton raised in the world. In other words, New York will sell 120,000,000 bales. Why? Because, if they were to charge an honest commission upon honest sales on a legitimate cotton for one year, they would have to go out of business as gamblers. The stupendous sum of $100,000,000 in round numbers in commissions they get under the present system. Therefore, they must have the future market in order that this great horde of men may live and prosper. But it is costing over $100,000,000, which the consumers throughout the world are paying to these men who toil not neither do they spin. They do no legitimate cotton buying. [Applause.]

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I have not the time. I can not talk about this matter in five minutes. I am sorry that I can not get to vote for a proposition that will for all time stop gambling in cotton futures.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I want to address what few remarks I shall make to the gentlemen on this side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, the two gentlemen who have just preceded me laid considerable stress upon the fact that the Democratic platform at Baltimore had declared in favor of the suppression of gambling in future cotton and called upon Democrats, therefore, to support this measure.

The platform adopted at Baltimore, Mr. Speaker, contained other provisions than that, and I wish to call the attention of Democrats here to one of the planks in that platform, a plank which announced the policy of the Democratic Party as it has been proclaimed in platforms and on the stump for more than a generation; and I call the attention of gentlemen particularly to this declaration, because it says that it is fundamental:

We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic Party that the Federal Government under the Constitution has no right or power to impose or collect tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue.

This was no new faith embraced in this age of progress. On the contrary, it was the old-time religion, a religion which had always been professed by those who claimed to be Democrats. It was taken almost bodily from the platform of 1892, upon which we had won our last victory. That platform was as follows:

We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic Party that the Federal Government has no constitutional power to impose and collect tariff duties except for the purposes of revenue only.

I know it is claimed that declarations of party faith are sometimes adopted without mature deliberation and, in fact, with little consideration, but no man who is at all familiar with his party's history can lay this charge to this particular plank. The fact is that in the convention of 1892 the committee on resolutions brought in a tariff plank which did not go as far as a minority of that committee desired, and Mr. Neal, a delegate from Ohio, moved on the floor of the convention to strike out the plank as reported by the committee and insert the declaration which I have just read in its stead. A very interesting debate ensued, which was participated in by Mr. Watterson, Mr. Vilas, and other leaders of the party, and upon a roll call of the convention this substitute was adopted by an overwhelming majority. Since that day it has been a cardinal article of faith in our party and was deliberately written as such into the platform at Baltimore.

Nobody claims that Congress has a better right to impose any other taxes, either excises, imposts, or duties, except for the purpose of revenue, because the grant is all in the same section of the Constitution which declares simply that "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, imposts, duties, and excises." But, lest some one may attempt so to differentiate, let me read what the President of the United States, in accepting the presidential nomination on that platform, said:

Our own clear conviction as Democrats is that in the last analysis the only safe and legitimate object of tariff duties, as of all taxes of every kind—note these words: As of all taxes of every kind—is to raise revenue for the support of the Government.

My colleague [Mr. Sisson] who just preceded me says that all admit that, if the Clarke amendment prevails, these gambling establishments will go out of business. If so, then we shall collect no revenue by it. No man even pretends, and no man will pretend, that this tax is levied for the purpose of raising revenue. Its purpose is frankly declared to be to destroy the New York and New Orleans Cotton Exchanges.

When we put these declarations in our platform, when we went on the stump and denounced the Republican Party for its "perversion of the taxing power," and some of us, the distinguished Postmaster General among them, went so far as to say "the prostitution of the taxing power" to purposes other than that of raising revenue, were we serious, or did we mean to say to the people that this is to be taken in a Pickwickian sense?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I regret that I can not at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. We denounced the tax on State bank issues as unconstitutional. We denounced the tax on oleomargarine as unconstitutional, and all the Representatives from the cotton-raising section of the country denounced it as an outrage. It was an outrage. It was a prostitution of the taxing power. The tax was purposely fixed at a rate so high—as is done in this amendment—that it could not be paid; and oleomargarine, which was largely made from cottonseed products, was deliberately outlawed in the interests of the dairymen. "Stand by the cow" was the battle cry then, and the vote showed that the cow had more friends here than the Constitution. We denounced here last year—some of the distinguished gentlemen, who are advocating this measure now—the tax on the phosphorous match, because it was, as Mr. Burleson said in that debate, "a prostitution of the taxing power."

And yet in the very first measure that the administration is to put on the statute books we go out of our way to tack upon it what? What we have declared to be a violation of the Constitution, what we have been holding in our platform to be abhorrent to a fundamental principle of our party.

Gentlemen say that the Baltimore platform calls for this legislation. I deny it. Here is what the platform says:

We believe in encouraging the development of agriculture, etc., and as an efficient means to this end we favor the enactment by Congress of legislation that will suppress the pernicious practice of gambling in agricultural products by organized exchanges or others.

By any rule of reasonable construction these two platform declarations must be read together, and when so read no man who deliberately seeks accurately and fairly to interpret that platform can say that it promises "to suppress the pernicious practice of gambling in agricultural products" by violating that "fundamental principle of the Democratic party—that the Federal Government under the Constitution has no right or power to impose or collect taxes except for purposes of revenue." At the time of this platform declaration the Beall bill had passed the House and was pending in the Senate. It would have suppressed the pernicious practice of gambling in cotton futures in a perfectly orderly and constitutional way. It was no more like the pending amendment than I to Hercules. I have drunk too deep at the Democratic spring; I have too long followed the faith of the fathers in their construction of the taxing power under the Constitution to be clamored into an abandonment of the convictions of a lifetime now.

And Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the people of this country will ever take us seriously if we here deliberately turn our backs upon these protestations of faith upon which we have been making our appeals for their indorsement ever since there has been a Democratic Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask how the division of the time stands?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has 90 minutes. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has 40 minutes, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] has 9 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] desire to proceed now?

Mr. FORDNEY. I would be pleased to proceed at any time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has 40 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas has 9.

Mr. PAYNE. I thought I had 45 minutes. I used an hour myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman used five minutes more than that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half a minute to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FAISON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FAISON] is recognized.

Mr. FAISON. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced in Congress recently two bills—one appropriating $350,000 for the study of, testing, and experimentation of the best and cheapest electrical methods of obtaining nitrogen from the air, and the other bill appropriating $50,000 for study of, testing, and experimentation of the best electrical methods of obtaining a larger per cent of acid phosphates from phosphate rock by baking such rock in high-temperature electric ovens, for agricultural fertilizing purposes.

The present supply of nitrogen or ammonia for such purposes comes largely from the salt-peter beds of Chile as nitrate of sodium. Some also comes from cottonseed meal, fish scrap, waste from packing houses, coal, and peat. It is largely controlled by trusts, which have been controlling the output of these mines and gradually increasing the cost, until to-day it costs the farmers about $60 per ton retail, containing about 19 to 20 per cent ammonia. During the summer months in my State and district in eastern North Carolina, where much nitrate of soda, with other fertilizers, is used by the berry and truck farmers and for cotton, tobacco, and corn crops, the annual supply gave out and could not be purchased when needed for late application to cotton and corn for larger yields.

This Chile saltpeter—sodium nitrate—supplying 19 to 20 per cent of ammonia for plant food, or 100 pounds of ammonia only to the ton, at a retail cost of 60 cents per pound to the farmers, contains besides much sodium compounds not only not needed as plant food but beyond certain limits distinctly retarding plant growth stimulated by the ammonia, and with other chloride and chlorate compounds from continued use tending to harden, dry, and crust the soil. Such drawbacks to plant growth, particularly strawberry, tobacco, grape, vegetable, and fruit crops, so largely now grown in the South, in my State and district—the market-garden section of the South Atlantic States—are a most serious objection to the extensive use of nitrate of sodium, yet this Chile saltpeter furnishes the largest per cent of rapidly soluble ammonia so much needed by these quick-maturing fruit, berry, and vegetable crops.

Free nitrogen or ammonia gathered from the air by electrical methods in the form of calcium or lime nitrates is an ideal compound for fertilizing purposes, having no deleterious sodium compounds to retard plant growth, especially of tobacco, strawberry, grape, and other fruit and vegetable crops.

The nitrogen or ammonia is taken up for plant food just as well as in the Chile saltpeter, while the lime or calcium nitrates from the air increase the plant growth in sandy and rocky lands by correcting the acids in the soil and also soften and mellow the soil rather than harden or crust it, as do the sodium compounds of the Chile saltpeter. In fact, plant-food chemists state that nitrogen or ammonia is only taken up and assimilated as lime or calcium nitrates, while the lime or calcium hastens humus decay and corrects and disinfects the toxic excreta of plant growth in the soil. Hence such lime nitrates gathered from the air by electricity are nature's ideal fertilizer for such class of agricultural crops.

Again, the cost of nitrogen or ammonia in the Chile saltpeter is about $60 per ton retail to the farmer, or 60 cents per pound for the 100 pounds of ammonia contained in each ton of sodium nitrates. The air enveloping the earth contains 78 per cent nitrogen and 22 per cent oxygen, or 75.5 per cent nitrogen by weight. It is estimated by accurate scientists that resting upon each square yard of the earth's surface in the 10 miles of air above are 5.5 tons of nitrogen per square yard, or 20,000,000 tons to each square mile of the earth's surface, worth, at 60 cents or more a pound, $12,500,000,000 per square mile of the earth's surface. Of this great quantity of nitrogen in the air we breathe the nitrogen is not only not needed for breathing to sustain human and animal life, but is poisonous to both if it were free, not combined with oxygen, as only the 22 per cent of the oxygen in the air is required to sustain animal and human life.

Only a minute fraction, about 0.000,002 of this 78 per cent nitrogen, is taken up by ordinary plant life, and when fed to animal life returns back into the soil as barnyard manure. By lightning and from rain and through chemical and bacteria action of certain leguminous crops—field peas, soy beans, clovers, alfalfa, and so forth, known to farmers as "diversification and rotation of such crops"—a small amount, about 65 tons, of nitrogen can be returned annually to each square mile of soil, leaving practically the whole amount of nitrogen, 78 per cent of the air, or 20,000,000 tons, worth $12,500,000,000 to each square mile, unused.

For years chemists, scientific students, manufacturers, and agriculturists have been studying and testing methods of utilizing this enormous quantity of nitrogen in the air. As the Chile saltpeter (nitrate of sodium) has been used so freely as a fertilizer for larger crop yields and increased in value by such larger use and by the monopoly of trusts, and in view of such limited supply in the Chile saltpeter beds becoming exhausted in 50 years (about 2,500,000 tons being sold last year and increasing annually), such study, tests, and experiments have been an inviting field for chemist and capital.

In 1901 Americans first began the air-nitrogen electrical manufacturing industry at Niagara Falls, but their electrical plant, gathering only 3 per cent of free nitrogen, was too expensive to operate. Norway chemists in 1903 began the air nitrogen electric manufacturing and now successfully manufacture nitrogen from the air, forcing the air rapidly and highly heated and cooled over pulverized limestone, as lime or calcium nitrates. German chemists began about the same time with equal success and later formed all these companies into a trust by patenting their processes, and have succeeded well, as only the cheapest raw materials are needed—air, water, and limestone—with large water powers developing cheap electrical power plants, as found and developed in Norway and Germany. From these two countries and Chile the United States imports about $50,000,000 of sodium and calcium or lime nitrates now per annum, largely for agricultural fertilizing purposes, above our exports of fertilizing chemicals. Still larger quantities must be used annually to supply our wasting soils for larger and larger yields of food crops for the increasing millions of people, as ammonia, unlike potash and acid phosphate, the other two ingredients of commercial fertilizers, is so soluble that it washes away in the soil, if not soon taken up in plant food. There are, besides, such large deposits of potash and phosphate rock in Germany and America, respectively, that no exhaustion is expected for centuries. The lime or calcium nitrates thus manufactured from the air, containing about 14 per cent nitrogen, equal to 17 per cent ammonia, is an ideal fertilizer; yet, like sodium nitrate, it is probably more hygroscopic than nitrate of sodium of Chile and becomes too wet to ship in bags or mix with potash salts and acid phosphates for a dry fertilizer easily handled and rapidly distributed for manuring growing crops, which has to some extent become corrected by the mixture of more slaked lime.

This electric-manufactured calcium or lime nitrate can be manufactured much cheaper per ton—only 50 to 80 cents per ton—than the Chile salts taken from their deposit beds, together with the $10 or $12 per ton export duty levied by the Chilean Government (from which Chile gains its largest revenues, which practically maintains its Government expenses) and makes it cost f. o. b. Chile about $35 to $40, yet on account of the small water powers of Europe not sufficient amounts of the air-nitrogen electric-manufactured calcium or lime nitrate at six to ten times less cost than Chile saltpeter, have been manufactured in Germany, Norway, and other European countries to compete with the much larger yields of the Chile saltpeter beds, and the price continues to advance under larger consumption, larger export duties of the Chilean Government, and trust-manipulated prices. Hence the larger water powers of America at Niagara Falls, of Iceland (by the English Government), and Niagara Falls in Canada have attracted attention of capitalists, scientists, and chemists and are being used for cheaper electric power, ranging from 37 cents to 50 cents and $1.25 per horsepower, and high electrical heat and other larger water powers throughout the South and West—30,000,000 horsepower yet undeveloped in the United States—while Alaska can furnish still larger water powers, on account of the larger winter snows and rainfalls of that section. Continued perfection in the detail methods of manufacture of this air nitrogen calcium nitrate will greatly cheapen this most expensive and most soluble ammonia fertilizer constituent, as it will take about $860,000,000, estimated, to produce the amount of free nitrogen or ammonia now consumed as Chile saltpeter for fertilizing purposes.

In 1910 capitalists with the patent rights of German chemists began the manufacture of nitrogen from the air, known as calcium cyanamide, using heated limestone and coke pulverized in equal parts for absorbing the nitrogen gathered from the rapidly heated air, at Niagara Falls, Canada. This calcium or lime cyanamide contains 20 per cent nitrogen, equal to 24 per cent of ammonia. This calcium cyanamide also has the greater advantage of being thoroughly pulverized and is not hygroscopic, remaining dry for years in bags and easily mixed with and, even, drying wet acid phosphate, yet at the same time when wet in the soil, gives up the ammonia freely for plant food, but not so readily, as Chile saltpeter or calcium nitrate made from the air, both of which are great advantages.

The coke used in its manufacture is about as cheap as limestone, and the process of manufacture being so simple, the calcium cyanamide with 10 per cent more ammonia than the calcium nitrates and 5 per cent more ammonia than the Chile sodium nitrate—not hygroscopic nor volatile and containing lime and not sodium—will be largely used when these electric manufacturing plants can supply sufficient quantity for agricultural fertilizers and will become the common source of ammonia obtained from the inexhaustible free supply in the air around us. Such is the purpose of this bill.

The other bill introduced calls for an appropriation of $50,000 for the study of, testing, and experimentation with the best methods of obtaining larger per cents of acid phosphate from the large deposits of phosphate rock in the United States, the common source of such soluble acid phosphate necessary for plant food. Heretofore this phosphate rock has been mined, crushed, and treated with sulphuric acid for extracting in soluble form acid phosphate for plant food. By such chemical treatment of phosphate rock only 16 per cent soluble acid phosphate has been rendered available for plant food, the remainder being insoluble and probably not taken up from the soil, and therefore useless. By such sulphuric acid treatment a quantity of free sulphuric acid remains in the commercial acid phosphate commonly sold for agricultural fertilizers, which sours the soil and retards plant growth until corrected by the application of lime to the soil, which in turn corrects the surplus free sulphuric acid in the acid phosphate and stays any further solubility of the remaining 84 per cent of acid phosphate in the phosphate rock, rendering it inert and useless as plant food.

Recent experiments with baking crushed or pulverized phosphate rock in high-temperature electric ovens has fully demonstrated the fact that as much as 40 per cent of soluble acid phosphate for plant food can be extracted from this crushed phosphate rock without the excess of free sulphuric acid, which retards plant growth by souring the soil. Such electric method increasing the available acid phosphate from 16 per cent to 40 per cent for plant food increases the plant-food value 250 per cent and relieves the necessity of liming the soil at additional expenses to the cost of production of food crops, and adds largely to the yield of the soil, and thereby cheapens food products to the ultimate consumer.

The increasing large quantities of commercial fertilizers for the increasing necessity of larger yields of foodstuffs to supply the need of a larger population, now increasing in America at the rate of about 2,000,000 per annum, born in and immigrating to America, besides our exports of foodstuffs to foreign countries, will demand larger and larger quantities of such commercial fertilizers. It is estimated that about 10,000,000 tons of fertilizers or more, valued at $250,000,000, are now consumed annually in the United States, while about $40,000,000 to $50,000,000 go abroad in excess of our exports of phosphate rock, largely for the ammonia and potash ingredients of these fertilizers.

Ammonia being the highest priced—$60 per 100 pounds—the most volatile, and the least plentiful, except as nitrogen in the air, how important, then, it becomes to farmers, producers, and consumers of such foods in the United States that such an all-important and valuable agricultural fertilizer as ammonia should be made as cheaply as possible from the inexhaustible supply of nitrogen in the air—20,000,000 tons to each square mile of the earth's surface—and, not only, not needed to sustain animal and human life, but poisonous to both when not combined with the oxygen. It is only combined in the atmosphere, useless, stored, in four times the quantity of the life-giving oxygen by an all-wise, provident Creator to increase the yield of the soil to feed increasing humanity when the "high cost of living" has become burdensome and the other natural supply of such needed fertilizer nearly exhausted.

Such a bountiful, inexhaustible supply of ammonia as nitrogen in the atmosphere and so freely provided for humanity by an all-wise and provident God, more free and bountiful than water composing three-fourths of the earth's surface, was never intended in His divine beneficent economy to be controlled by any trust nor protected by any patent rights of greedy, selfish, human invention or legislative action in order to control or lessen the yield of mother earth when the food supply is limited by the natural increase of consumers, now crying out for cheaper food in these days of the "high cost" of the common necessities of life.

It therefore should become the urgent duty of Congress to thoroughly investigate and test the best methods of utilizing these natural and much-needed highest-priced volatile ingredients of commercial fertilizers, "nitrogen or ammonia," so bountifully and freely supplied in the air, and acid phosphate for the larger yields of food supplies for hungering increasing humanity, and relieve the stress of the "high cost of living" heard on all sides. Find out the cost of the same by the best and cheapest methods of electric manufacture and regulate the trusts and patent rights which control the price and sale or corner the output of such needed agricultural fertilizers for the larger yield of old mother earth when famine or hunger seems to threaten the masses of the American people.

For this purpose I have introduced these two bills in Congress—to investigate, test, and study the manufacture of free nitrogen or ammonia by electrical methods from the atmosphere, and of acid phosphate in larger quantities from the phosphate-rock deposits of America.

I have also introduced a resolution of investigation to investigate the Fertilizer Trust, controlling by combination the price and output of commercial fertilizers and their ingredients, which are fixing annually the quantity manufactured and mined and the prices, wholesale and retail, of three ingredients—ammonia, acid phosphate, and potash—when sold in the United States as Chile saltpeter, and from vegetable and animal sources, or manufactured from the air by patent processes as calcium nitrate or calcium cyanamide, potash, as sulphate or muriate of potash, or kainit, and, third, acid phosphates.

Such study, tests, and investigations by the United States Secretary of Agriculture will give the farmers and stockmen of the States commercial fertilizers at cheap and legitimate prices, which will enable them to increase their yields of meats and foodstuffs by more intensive, scientific, and modern methods of agriculture and stock raising; and such increase will cheapen the rapidly increasing cost of such foodstuffs due to the annual decrease of production and benefit alike both producers, middlemen, and the ultimate consumers. Who, then, can say nay?

Congress can spend a few thousand—yea, a few hundred thousand—dollars in no better way, and hungering humanity will hail such relief with universal approval. It will be in thorough accord with the present policy of the present administration in reducing the tariff, passing proper currency legislation, curbing the monopolistic grip of the trusts, enacting into just laws a long-time credit farm-loan system, establishing vocational schools and demonstration-farm schools; in fact, it is "the key to the arch," as old mother earth can only bring forth bountifully her increase when the proper plant food, drawn from her soil by centuries of yielding, is easily and plentifully supplied in soluble form in the ammonia, potash, and acid phosphates of commercial agricultural fertilizers so well known to all agricultural chemists and scientific farmers, who are busy as never before feeding the growing millions hungering for food and raiment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] to go ahead.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no complaint to make about the part that has been given to me in the preparation of this bill. It is a Democratic measure, and I could not agree with them, and therefore did not expect them to call me in to help them make up their bill.

My Democratic friends, if your tariff bill brings happiness to the people of the United States and that measure of prosperity you have promised, you will receive your reward. You will be continued in power, which would be no more than right.

If, however, it does not meet the expectations of those you have led to agree with you on the question of radical tariff revision, if it does not bring to the people that added prosperity and happiness you have pledged, you can not escape the responsibility, you will lose the confidence the people have placed in you, and the power you now enjoy to control legislation will be soon taken away.

I can not conceive of a plan being beneficial to our people that invites greater importations of competitive products from foreign countries employing cheap labor. Added imports coming into competition with like articles produced in the United States at the American scale of wages and standard of living will certainly displace employment heretofore given to our people under tariff protection.

As the volume of imports into this country increases, so will the volume of unemployed increase, and as the volume of unemployed increases so will the purchasing power of our people decrease. The consumption of products in this country, both agricultural and manufactured, depends upon the ability of our people to purchase. Curtailing their purchasing power will most certainly curtail the amount of food they will eat and the amount of clothes they will buy. Every dollar sent across the seas to employ foreign capital and foreign labor is sent there to the detriment of capital and labor in the United States. It matters not how cheaply an article may be offered in this country, it is dear if we have no money with which to buy it, and no article is dear if we have the purchasing power.

You have complete control of legislation, but were not elected to that power by receiving a majority of the votes of the people. The majority was opposed to you and the platform on which you stood, but was divided. By divided opposition you won out, and you are now engaged in enacting a low-tariff measure with full knowledge that a majority at the last general election voted in favor of a continuation of the policy of protection.

In writing this tariff bill not a single article produced by the farmers of this country have you permitted to escape your pen, a pen which, as far as the agricultural interest is concerned, has proven to be a two-edged sword. Before election you assured the country you would injure no legitimate industry. As it appears to me, you either tricked the farmers out of their votes or did not consider their industry a legitimate one. What worse could you do to the woolgrower than to give him free wool? What worse could you do to the wheat grower than to give him free wheat? What worse could you do to the cane and beet growers than to give free sugar? A man is presumed to know the consequence of his own acts, and if this proposed law proves disastrous to our farmers, as I firmly believe it will, you will be held responsible and they will repudiate you in the near future at the polls. The farmers are the bone and sinew of this Nation, and our prosperity depends directly upon their success.

It has been well said, and often repeated, that to give a man work for his hands gives him work for his teeth. What have you done in this bill to provide for added employment? I believe this bill will encourage foreign importation, discourage domestic production, and decrease employment offered to American labor. The $105,000,000 of foreign goods now in bonded warehouses awaiting the passage of this measure will be dumped on our markets with low duties and free trade, and will have a telling effect on competitive products produced by our people.

Your determination at this time to hurriedly enact an emergency currency law leads me to believe you expect this tariff bill to bring business depression.

I have studied this tariff question long and earnestly, and experience of the past has helped to form my convictions. I hold the welfare of this Nation above all else, and it makes me wish and hope that I am wrong and that you are right, but the deeper I go into the measure you now propose to enact into law the more strongly am I convinced that in the future this will be looked back upon as a great mistake of legislation.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] stated that this bill would reduce taxation. I differ with the gentleman in that respect, for it is not possible to reduce taxation in this country. It never will be done. With increased population, and as our Nation grows broader, greater taxation must come to the people, because larger expenditures will be required to support the Army, the Navy, and all Government service as our Nation grows. But you may shift the responsibility of that taxation from one class to another. In my opinion, you have in this bill shifted the responsibility of taxation to a great extent from the South to the North. You have struck a telling blow at the woolen industry. In my opinion, you have greatly injured the cotton industry of this country. But, my friends, the evidence before the committee showed that the cotton industry, especially of North and South Carolina, where the majority of the cotton industries of the South are located, employ their labor at an average of 85 cents a day, or $256 a year for each employee, whereas the wages in the New England States, where the great cotton industries of the North are located, are in the neighborhood of $1.40 a day, or more than $400 a year. Therefore, with your cheaper labor in North and South Carolina, your cotton industries will, under the provisions of this bill, have an advantage over the cotton industries of the New England States.

Gentlemen, we have produced in this country annually in the neighborhood of $30,000,000,000 worth of agricultural and manufactured products, 93 per cent of which has been consumed in this country and is being consumed here. [Applause on the Republican side.] Therefore the best market in the world for our products is in the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.] If by the processes of your bill you transfer industry across the sea, you will injure and lower the income of the great masses of the people. [Applause on the Republican side.] You will therefore weaken their purchasing power; and when you have destroyed or weakened their purchasing power you have destroyed or weakened the greatest market on earth for American products, produced by American capital and American labor. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Gentlemen, I only wish I had the time to express myself fully upon this subject, but there are many gentlemen who wish to speak upon the merits of this measure in the limited time given them. Therefore I will not encroach upon the rights of others. But I firmly believe that you are making a most serious mistake in enacting this legislation into law. I hope my convictions, which are sincere and come from the bottom of my heart, may turn out to be wrong. I thank you. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back two minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER]. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] recall to my mind the fact that one of the principal grounds for the assault upon this bill by the other side has been the claim made by them that this bill discriminates against the American farmer. We have repeatedly heard in this House the statement that the removal or reduction of the tariff duties on farm products constitutes in some way a discrimination against the farmer. In the body at the other end of the Capitol the refrain has been taken up, and we have heard men who for years have advocated a reduction of the tariff duties excuse themselves from voting for this bill because they say, forsooth, that it discriminates against the North and the West.

I recall the fact that the distinguished Senator from Iowa, Mr. CUMMINS, has been an advocate of lower tariff duties for many years. I also recall the fact that when the Payne-Aldrich bill was up for discussion in the Senate of the United States he expressed himself on the subject of farm products and the duties thereon, and I want to call to mind to-day the attitude of the distinguished Senator at that time, as compared with his attitude now, when he claims that his principal objection to the Underwood bill is because it discriminates against the American farmer. On June 11, 1909, in the Senate of the United States, Senator CUMMINS said:

I know that my friend from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] does not agree with me in respect to these things, but I do not believe that we in Iowa receive any direct benefit for the 400,000,000 bushels of corn that we raise every year; I do not believe that we receive any direct benefit from the duty on 8,000,000 or 10,000,000 hogs that we market every year; I do not believe that of the $700,000,000 of agricultural products that we pour every year into the channels of trade, protection advances the price of a tithe of them. * * * We will this year supply the people of the United States and the people of the world with a product that will surpass in value $700,000,000, and it is idle for even any enthusiast to assert that the price of these products is directly affected by the protective tariff.

I simply call that to your attention at this time as evidence that at the time the Payne-Aldrich bill was under consideration many of you who now oppose this bill did not dare to claim that the tariff on farm products was of any benefit to the farmer.

I do not believe there is a man on the floor of this House, no matter what his politics nor from what section he comes, who would knowingly and willingly do that which was unjust or unfair to the great agricultural interests of the country. The farmer has never been one of those who sought or received legislative favors at the hands of the Government. Agriculture is now and has always been the principal source of our wealth, and admittedly is the basis of our national prosperity. It has borne the burden of tariff taxation meekly and uncomplainingly for years in order that manufactures might be established and sustained. But, in my judgment, there has never been a day since the beginning of this Republic when the farmer received a single benefit from the tariff on farm products.

Mr. Speaker, in refutation of the claim that the Underwood bill discriminates against the American farmer I submit the following propositions, which I believe the facts abundantly substantiate:

THREE PROPOSITIONS.

FIRST. That the tariff on farm products has never been of any benefit to the farmer, and therefore its removal from such products in no way injures him or discriminates against him.

SECOND. That the real and substantial reduction of the tariff on manufactured products, covering practically everything the farmer has to buy, directly benefits the farmer by enabling him to purchase his goods in a competitive market rather than in a highly protected and monopolistic one.

THIRD. The enactment of the income-tax law as a part of the tariff bill shifts, in a large measure, the burden of taxation from the backs of the consuming public and places it upon the accumulated wealth of the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as to the first of these propositions, the claim now made by those who hope to defeat or discredit this bill that the removal or reduction of the tariff upon farm products constitutes a discrimination against the farmer can not be sustained from any standpoint. It is my contention, sir, that such a claim is without any foundation of facts and that the argument used in support of the same is entirely fallacious.

The tariff, Mr. Speaker, has never been a boon to the American farmer. The great agricultural staples of the United States have never been, are not to-day, and probably never will be in danger of effective competition from the outside. Neither the farmers of Europe nor those of India or China or Australia have any surplus of products to dump upon our shores.

For several years there has been a studious and persistent effort made to make the American farmer believe that duties on agricultural products were of some benefit to him, although originally no such claim was ever made by protectionists. The fallacy of such argument has often been exposed, but apparently there are those who hope they may succeed in continuing the delusion.

How ridiculous it is to say that it is a discrimination against farmers to free list agricultural products, when the facts of tariff history show that taxes on agricultural imports produced practically no revenue returns and are therefore valueless as revenue producers.

I submit here at this point a table showing the revenue from 10 leading agricultural products during the last four fiscal years.

Articles.	1910	1911	1912	1913
Cattle.....	$727,000	$702,000	$1,214,000	$1,764,000
Corn.....	18,000	8,000	8,000	129,000
Cream.....	37,000	117,000	56,000	62,368
Eggs.....	35,000	83,000	55,000	73,588
Milk.....	3,000	4,000	1,000	36,480
Poultry.....	38,000	33,000	33,000	14,980
Sheep.....	98,000	39,000	20,000	13,910
Swine.....	3,000	4,000	1,000	2,313
Wheat.....	9,000	6,000	352,000	135,523
Potatoes.....	87,051	51,448	3,434,000	85,055
Total.....	1,055,051	1,047,488	5,174,000	2,307,988

The tariff revenue during these four years has run from two hundred and eighty millions to three hundred and twenty-nine millions, while the total revenue from these 10 agricultural products ran from one million to a trifle over five millions.

In 1913 we exported of these products as follows:

Cattle.....	$1,777,000
Corn.....	28,801,000
Eggs.....	4,392,000
Milk.....	474,000
Poultry.....	1,755,000
Sheep.....	606,000
Swine.....	152,000
Wheat.....	89,036,000
Potatoes.....	1,646,000
Total.....	128,039,000

It will be noted that while we imported but $9,629,000 worth we exported at the same time $128,039,000.

We have been an exporting Nation of agricultural products for many years—no doubt will be for years to come—and as exporters we must sell in competition with the world.

To emphasize this point I submit here a table showing a 10-year survey of wheat in the United States, showing production, exports, and imports:

Year.	Production.	Exports.	Imports.
	Bushels.	Bushels.	Bushels.
1900.....	547,303,000	186,000,000	320,000
1901.....	522,229,000	215,990,000	603,000
1902.....	784,000,000	235,000,000	121,000
1903.....	670,000,000	208,000,000	1,080,000
1904.....	637,000,000	121,000,000	217,000
1905.....	552,000,000	44,100,000	3,285,000
1906.....	692,000,000	97,600,000	262,000
1907.....	735,000,000	147,000,000	590,000
1908.....	634,000,000	163,000,000	520,000
1909.....	664,000,000	114,000,000	456,000
Total.....	6,401,532,000	1,526,690,000	7,455,000

Six and one-half billion bushels produced, one and one-half billion exported. One-fourth of all we produce must be shipped outside and sold in competition with all the world at prices which fix the prices of the three-fourths retained and sold for home consumption.

The story of corn production and exportation is even more illuminating. Here are the figures:

Year.	Produced.	Exported.	Imported.
	Bushels.	Bushels.	Bushels.
1900.....	2,000,000,000	213,000,000	2,000
1901.....	2,100,000,000	181,000,000	5,000
1902.....	1,500,000,000	28,000,000	17,000
1903.....	2,500,000,000	77,000,000	40,000
1904.....	2,200,000,000	58,000,000	11,000
1905.....	2,467,000,000	90,000,000	15,000
1906.....	2,700,000,000	120,000,000	10,000
1907.....	2,927,000,000	85,000,000	10,000
1908.....	2,592,000,000	55,000,000	19,000
1909.....	2,668,000,000	38,000,000	228,000
Total.....	34,654,000,000	946,000,000	357,000

Our farmers can not possibly receive any benefit from a tariff on corn. No tariff ever added one cent to the price received by the farmer. We produce this great staple and sell it in the world's market.

The same facts substantially can be shown with relation to practically every product coming from the farm. In the face of such facts and in the light of conditions as we know them, it seems passing strange that intelligent men would attempt an argument with a view of proving any benefit received by the farmer through a tariff on his products.

The farmers themselves are fully alive to the situation and have been for some time. Attempts by interested politicians to deceive them will, in my judgment, prove of little avail. It will be interesting to note in this connection what a prominent farmer has to say upon the subject. Mr. C. B. Kegley, master of the Washington State Grange, contributes a statement upon this subject in the Western Farmer of Spokane, Wash. He says:

As a system, protection is doomed. If we, as farmers stand for it, we shall lose our share, and the public believing that it has secured relief from the burden of living cost will stop there, causing whatever of loss occurs to fall all upon the farmer. Consequently the businesslike course open is for the farmers to fight, not to continue the system, but to smash it. Fight, not to hold his own questionable benefits of tariff on grain and live stock and wool, but to strip the coats of privilege off the back of every business engaged in supplying the necessities of life.

The American farmer to-day has learned his lesson. He has listened to the song of the siren for, lo, these many years. He has listened to Republican orators tell him that the price he gets for his corn and wheat and all the products of his farm is regulated by the high-protective tariff; and you have to some extent, I must say, succeeded in making him believe that there was some relation between the tariff and the price of his products, but every man who has given the subject any consideration knows that when the farmer ships abroad a large percentage of all the corn he raises, when we know that he ships abroad nearly one-fourth of all the wheat he raises, and sells it in competition with the world, that the price received abroad fixes the price received at home. So I say, Mr. Speaker, that this cry of discrimination is a false cry. It is a cry raised simply for the purpose of beclouding the issue before the great mass of the people of the country.

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE STORY.

Now, as to the second proposition: High protectionists have used the tariff to fool and despoil the farmer of his hard-earned gains. Behind the tariff rate of 25 cents on wheat, 10 cents on corn, 11 and 12 cents on wool, rates which have never added one whit of price or value to the product, plutocratic tariff beneficiaries have persistently plucked the farmer on all that he had to buy. He has been forced to buy all that he needed in a highly protected market, while he sold his surplus in competition with the world.

The home market, in which the farmer has had to buy his agricultural implements, is dominated and largely controlled by combination and monopoly; the market in which he buys his hardware and iron goods is dominated and largely controlled by the Steel Trust; his clothing he must buy of the Woolen Trust; if he wants sugar, he must buy it at Sugar-Trust prices; if he wants leather, harness, or shoes, he must again pay monopoly prices.

While humbugging the farmer with a few agricultural rates which never pan out, our Republican friends, through exorbitant tariff exactions, have persistently fleeced him on every article he buys. Republican tariffs, made and voted for by men who now complain that our bill discriminates against the farmer, made the farmer pay taxes on the things he had to buy as follows:

Tax exacted from farmer under Payne-Aldrich law.

	Per cent.
Glassware.....	60
Knives and forks.....	50
Salt.....	104
Sugar.....	63
Rice.....	65
Cutlery.....	65
Carpets.....	66
Furniture.....	96
Blankets.....	93 to 140
Flannels.....	91
Ready-made clothing.....	65
Knitted goods.....	95
Shawls.....	96
Window glass.....	80
Files.....	68
Building stone.....	50
Iron chain.....	183
Machinery.....	45
Screws.....	128
Women's clothing.....	74 to 92
Men's clothing.....	78
Cotton goods.....	60
Woolen goods.....	87

As to all the above articles and many others of prime necessity to the American farmer, the tariff under the Underwood bill has either been removed or materially reduced, thereby reducing the cost to the consumer.

Looking at these effects of Republican tariffs, what can be more farcical than to hear men—especially so-called progressive Republicans—wail over the farmer? The tariffs made by their party have plundered him for years, and they now grieve sorely that their day of plunder is over. The cry goes out that the farmer will be ruined, but the real cause of the commotion is the fear that the crime against the farmer is to be fully exposed and the guilty parties punished.

The Democratic tariff bill compels the plunderers to take their hands out of the pockets of the farmer and leave him to enjoy the proceeds of his toil.

The Democrats were commissioned by the people to reduce the tariff and they have lived up to that mandate. Some agricultural products have been placed upon the free list. A still greater number of manufactured products have been placed upon the free list. There has been no discrimination against the farmer, and I challenge anyone to prove to the contrary. For every product of the farm placed on the free list there have been six or seven manufactured products placed on the free list; and in addition to this there has been material and substantial reduction made on other manufactured products all along the line.

Everyone knows that if ever we cease to be exporters of basic farm products and should attempt to levy a tariff tax upon them under conditions that would actually increase their price in this country and constitute a tax on bread and meat to the American people no political party would dare advocate and defend such a tax.

Everyone knows also that the great body of tariff revenue must come from tariff on manufactured goods. Attempts to inject the cry of sectionalism in this bill by arguing that some States or some sections of the country receive more consideration in this bill than others, is so wanting in knowledge as to the fundamental principles of tariff taxation as to be almost childish. It used to be admitted by high protectionists that a protective tariff did not directly benefit the farmer, but the claim was made that by fostering industrial enterprises additional and high-priced labor would be employed and this labor would increase the home market for the products of the farm.

The failure of this argument in time became apparent, because it was easily demonstrated that while the manufacturer sought and received protection upon his products, yet he did not hesitate to buy his labor at the lowest obtainable price.

We now find our protection friends falling back on the claim never made originally, that the tariff on farm products is of some direct benefit to the farmer. Men who think and reason upon these questions are not going to be deceived. I do not believe that the American farmer will allow himself to be misled in any way by this cry of distress from interested politicians.

In connection with the argument that a protective tariff increases wages and thereby benefits not only the wage worker but the farmer, I desire to quote an editorial from the Saturday Evening Post of September 20, 1913, which expresses in a few paragraphs the prevailing view of a large number of thinking men and women:

LOW TARIFFS AND HIGH WAGES.

Wages have always been higher in this country than in Europe. Throughout the Colonial period—when no blessed protective system shed its phantom bounty upon American labor—wages were so much higher here that scores of travelers from Europe remarked on the fact, as Senator WILLIAMS pointed out the other day.

And wages were higher here because men were freer. If Spanish tyranny had extended to the St. Lawrence, labor, in all human probability, would presently have been as little rewarded as in Europe. No part of this continent was richer in undeveloped natural resources than Cuba, and so soon as Spain got that island well in hand wages fell almost to zero.

Russia to-day fairly matches us, both in natural resources and in prohibitive tariff; but wages there are among the lowest to be found anywhere in Europe, because nowhere else in Europe are men less free.

For 60 years wages in England, with no tariff protection at all, have been decidedly higher than on the protected Continent, and on the whole there has been more actual individual liberty in England.

Whatever condition enslaves, cramps, or degrades a man necessarily lowers wages; whatever liberates a man necessarily raises wages.

If you think of it a moment, you must see that your own wages will be higher in proportion as you are actually free and can choose what you will do. When you find men working for beans and a calico shirt you need no professor of civil government to tell you they are not free.

As a thoroughly aristocratic system, based on the notion that government should confer benefits on certain chosen persons who will hand the benefits along to the masses, protection is opposed to liberty. If on the largest view it has had any appreciable effect upon wages that effect has probably been to lower them.

WHAT LA FOLLETTE SAYS ABOUT THE BILL.

Senator LA FOLLETTE, the distinguished Republican Senator from Wisconsin, voted for the Underwood bill in the Senate, and in discussing the measure in his paper says:

The trusts and combinations in their relentless oppression of the public have been materially aided by the monstrous tariff law enacted four years ago. Their power will not be broken when that law is supplanted by the present bill. But its passage is significant. It marks a change. It is the winning of the first battle in the long war which must be waged against industrial monopoly. This warfare is not against legitimate business; it is against the tyranny of unlawful combinations, overprotected, overstimulated, overcapitalized. Our industries will of necessity feel the strain of readjustment to a normal healthy basis, a basis of actual values. Through this period we must pass to secure industrial peace and real industrial prosperity.

Much more could be said in support of the proposition that this bill will be of direct and substantial benefit to the great consuming public, of which the farmer forms an important part; but I desire to take up for a brief time the discussion of the third and last proposition, that relating to the income tax.

INCOME TAX.

For years there has been an overwhelming sentiment in this country in favor of the income tax.

The justice of such a tax is so self-evident that few, if any, have been heard in opposition to its enactment. Its success in foreign countries has been demonstrated for years.

This provision of the Underwood bill, when enacted into law, will place upon the wealthy of this country, in a measure at least, a fair share of the burden of sustaining the Government.

The swollen fortunes accumulated as a result of special privilege obtained under former tariff legislation will now be compelled to contribute a portion of the income to help bear governmental expenses.

A map might be prepared which would show that the greater portion of this tax will fall upon the people living in the Eastern States, and especially New England, but I fancy there will be but few men who will contend that by reason of that fact the bill discriminates against the East and New England.

Many criticisms have been uttered against the Underwood bill during the long debate in this House and in the Senate. Its 4,000 items have been subjected to searching analysis and criticism. Against its provisions have been hurled arguments and epithets from every conceivable angle. Yet it has stood the test.

It may not be a perfect bill, but it is an honest bill. There may have been some mistakes made in the course of its formation, but if so, they are honest mistakes. The significant thing about the history of this legislation, to my mind, is the fact that there have been none so bold or so reckless as to state or even insinuate that special privilege in any of its insidious forms has found lodgment within the pages of the bill.

For the first time in the memory of men now living we are to witness the enactment of a tariff law written for the benefit of all the people—a bill which carries out with fidelity and faithfulness the mandate of the people for an honest revision of the tariff downward.

CRITICISM OF PRESIDENT WILSON.

Surprising as it may seem, there are those who, during the course of debate upon the bill, have felt called upon to criticize the President of the United States for the part he has taken in this legislation. It is particularly noticeable, however, that such criticism has found little response or approbation among the people at large.

For my part, I glory in the fact that we have a President with the courage and the patriotism to take his part in the battle against special privilege and protected monopoly.

His voice has been the voice of 90,000,000 of tax-burdened consumers of the land crying for relief.

His influence has been the concentrated influence of a myriad of minds hoping and longing for relief from iniquitous tariff exactions foisted upon the people against their will.

His power has been the power of a righteous cause—a human cause—a cause as big and broad as our common country, as vital as liberty, and as sacred as human life itself. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman from Alabama will allow me, I desire to yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, the Underwood bill comes back from the Senate with the Simmons flavor and the following chronology:

Introduced April 7; considered by Democratic caucus, 12 days; considered by full Ways and Means Committee, a few minutes; considered by House, 16 days; heard before partisan members Senate Finance Committee, 35 days; considered by Senate Democratic caucus, 20 days; considered in Senate, 52 days; considered by partisan conferees, 18 days; considered by full conference committee, 7 minutes.

It may be of interest to the people of the Northwest to consider a few striking facts relative to the agricultural schedule, known in the bill as Schedule G.

It has been one of the storm centers of the tariff fight in both Houses. Perhaps the cavalier treatment accorded by some of the majority Senators of the great West is worthy of note. One Member of that distinguished body said the farmers' protection was purely imaginary. A second said that it was merely a mental operation. A third said the farmers' pretended protection was a humbug, and the fourth denounced it as a fraud.

A distinguished Member of that other body was asked if he had made a study of Schedule G as a revenue producer. He said he had not, any further than he understood it was very trifling and entirely inconsiderable. Others seemed to have a similar impression. For these reasons I desire to submit a few observations on Schedule G.

I assume the following principles to be sound and applicable to the present tariff discussions, not contested by the friends of the Underwood measure nor its opponents:

First. Substantial duties levied and material amounts collected at our ports do protect the competing home product.

Second. Material reductions or removal of those duties increase that competition to the disadvantage of the home producer. If these two propositions are not correct, then the expense of time and money to the Government, as well as injury to business, through the agitation of an extra session has been worse than vain.

Third. In the reduction or removal of tariffs those articles should be selected where importations are least and duties collected are inconsiderable and decreasing from year to year, because that condition would indicate relatively prohibitive duties.

Fourth. When importations and duties collected are both large and show increase from year to year, then such schedule, if modified, should be but slightly so, and removal of duties should in no case take place, because that would sacrifice the Government's interest in the revenue and cause disastrous competition to the producer. This should never be done unless there is sought to be created an aristocracy of the consumer over the toiler.

With these elementary suggestions in mind, I wish to call attention to the following statistics taken from the Statistical Abstract of 1912, showing the importation of dutiable articles in the 14 schedules covering a period beginning with 1897 and ending 1912. I use this period because 1897 is used as the past focal date by the Committee on Ways and Means in its various statements and arguments. I stop with 1912 because it is the last year under the Republican tariff uninfluenced by the immediate prospect of drastic reduction and heavy removals of duties.

Imported dutiable merchandise entered for consumption: Values, duties collected, and ad valorem rates, 1897 to 1912, by schedules of the respective tariffs in force in the years named.

Year ended June 30—	Schedule A.—Chemicals, oils, and paints.			Schedule B.—Earths, earthenware, and glassware.			Schedule C.—Metals, and manufactures of.			Schedule D.—Wood, and manufactures of.
	Values.	Duties collected.	Average ad valorem rates.	Values.	Duties collected.	Average ad valorem rates.	Values.	Duties collected.	Average ad valorem rates.	Values.	Duties collected.	Average ad valorem rates.
			Per cent.			Per cent.			Per cent.			Per cent.
1897	$19,003,638	$5,440,024	28.63	$21,166,515	$7,605,169	35.93	$23,603,665	$8,955,132	37.94	$1,485,479	$339,974	22.88
1898	19,513,037	6,146,884	31.50	15,192,178	7,887,433	48.63	18,847,123	8,454,289	44.86	5,341,083	1,205,278	22.57
1899	21,570,616	7,009,695	32.50	17,244,220	8,863,349	51.40	18,152,727	7,809,281	43.02	7,568,420	1,671,048	22.08
1900	26,955,991	8,184,044	30.36	20,090,172	10,108,541	50.31	29,089,333	11,280,853	38.78	11,711,446	2,351,940	20.08
1901	26,414,360	7,415,495	28.07	20,166,399	10,301,489	51.08	28,631,743	10,922,077	38.15	10,636,183	2,049,457	19.27
1902	29,991,974	8,499,709	28.34	21,424,011	11,365,381	53.05	38,870,207	14,973,244	38.52	14,556,267	2,572,527	17.67
1903	31,249,644	8,980,673	28.74	25,735,463	13,320,181	51.76	65,164,750	22,368,210	34.33	16,659,208	2,814,734	16.90
1904	30,808,543	8,813,962	28.61	24,704,368	13,163,258	53.28	40,011,304	15,682,484	39.20	14,449,585	2,463,948	17.05
1905	31,010,996	8,845,176	28.52	23,126,296	12,193,546	52.73	36,327,218	14,448,673	39.77	16,707,735	2,750,017	16.46
1906	33,481,921	9,664,910	28.87	26,589,979	13,749,020	51.71	50,917,147	18,769,616	36.86	22,760,988	3,650,271	16.04
1907	40,246,137	11,124,088	27.64	31,306,009	15,350,019	49.03	67,148,963	21,882,145	32.59	24,472,483	3,701,201	15.12
1908	39,127,306	10,530,174	26.91	26,224,241	13,250,558	50.53	45,279,789	16,003,780	35.34	23,349,686	3,301,256	14.14
1909	42,936,600	11,217,784	26.13	21,148,142	10,641,572	50.32	41,103,417	15,656,102	38.09	23,285,386	3,140,844	13.49
1910	42,021,558	11,072,239	26.41	24,774,251	12,467,509	50.33	66,960,781	22,333,344	33.35	27,489,155	3,184,697	11.59
1911	48,869,382	12,563,788	25.71	24,495,258	12,669,182	51.72	58,757,341	18,869,321	32.11	24,709,532	2,959,669	11.98
1912	47,235,641	12,239,742	25.91	21,994,265	11,156,221	50.72	50,491,870	17,346,221	34.35	24,414,943	3,042,834	12.45

Year ended June 30—	Schedule E.—Sugar, molasses, and manufactures of.			Schedule F.—Tobacco, and manufactures of.			Schedule G.—Agricultural products and provisions			Schedule H.—Spirits, wines, and other beverages.
	Values.	Duties collected.	Average ad valorem rates.	Values.	Duties collected.	Average ad valorem rates.	Values.	Duties collected.	Average ad valorem rates.	Values.	Duties collected.	Average ad valorem rates.
			Per cent.			Per cent.			Per cent.			Per cent.
1897	$98,283,469	$41,346,400	42.07	$18,782,759	$20,971,882	111.66	$33,716,958	$8,613,987	25.55	$11,880,430	$8,136,014	68.48
1898	38,330,580	29,695,301	77.47	8,225,482	9,916,183	120.55	29,553,286	11,608,121	39.28	9,319,646	6,026,607	64.66
1899	81,227,498	61,660,942	75.91	9,371,597	10,627,399	113.40	32,505,236	12,743,785	39.21	11,072,774	7,490,674	67.64
1900	80,890,937	57,823,285	71.48	13,597,162	14,382,305	105.77	35,762,588	13,183,635	36.86	12,897,506	8,828,660	68.45
1901	87,079,079	63,089,412	72.45	15,055,601	16,655,744	110.63	38,566,704	13,043,820	33.82	14,009,924	9,533,524	67.61
1902	61,116,367	53,040,877	86.79	16,331,536	18,756,035	114.85	43,682,461	16,012,639	36.66	15,367,757	10,562,022	68.73
1903	65,959,090	63,625,731	96.46	18,298,780	21,891,687	119.63	46,221,428	16,282,144	35.23	16,784,608	11,646,532	69.39
1904	77,898,029	58,152,347	74.65	17,875,683	21,176,293	118.46	49,013,792	16,890,988	34.46	17,120,014	12,105,788	70.71
1905	91,577,274	51,442,112	56.17	20,725,297	22,689,611	109.48	47,570,416	15,418,334	32.41	17,912,332	12,547,900	70.05
1906	86,133,491	52,648,866	61.12	22,917,352	23,927,700	104.41	53,868,946	18,126,575	33.65	19,669,398	14,009,516	71.22
1907	92,784,081	60,338,523	65.03	29,959,081	26,125,037	87.20	63,720,855	19,203,886	30.14	23,083,420	16,318,120	70.69
1908	83,626,684	50,168,155	59.99	26,495,243	22,160,089	83.64	69,609,535	21,618,559	31.06	21,419,770	15,213,085	71.02
1909	93,478,607	56,414,434	60.35	27,332,038	23,269,458	85.14	71,719,009	23,633,333	32.95	23,381,943	16,144,031	69.05
1910	101,586,708	53,105,357	52.28	29,581,469	24,124,239	81.55	84,872,747	25,160,516	29.64	25,315,878	18,113,512	71.55
1911	97,877,463	52,809,371	53.95	29,788,180	26,159,615	87.82	105,974,044	28,744,295	27.12	20,354,501	17,298,858	84.99
1912	105,744,519	50,951,199	48.18	31,116,052	25,571,508	82.18	117,711,156	34,146,071	29.01	20,731,233	17,409,815	83.98

Year ended June 30—	Schedule I.—Cotton manufactures.			Schedule J.—Flax, hemp, and jute, and manufactures of.			Schedule K.—Wool, and manufactures of.			Schedule L.—Silks and silk goods.
	Values.	Duties collected.	Average ad valorem rates.	Values.	Duties collected.	Average ad valorem rates.	Values.	Duties collected.	Average ad valorem rates.	Values.	Duties collected.	Average ad valorem rates.
			Per cent.			Per cent.			Per cent.			Per cent.
1897	$22,650,234	$9,903,895	43.73	$34,852,448	$14,110,685	40.49	$48,902,866	$22,702,726	46.42	$26,517,092	$12,421,070	46.85
1898	14,663,418	7,500,252	51.15	33,704,889	15,712,121	46.62	18,360,631	13,057,164	71.12	22,639,597	12,231,681	54.03
1899	17,002,769	8,934,913	52.55	44,412,454	20,892,285	47.04	22,342,090	17,230,152	77.12	25,026,504	13,506,312	53.97
1900	20,684,578	10,565,562	51.08	54,732,531	25,701,451	46.96	30,656,717	21,637,428	70.58	30,358,771	15,771,795	51.95
1901	19,568,242	9,715,747	49.65	57,669,270	26,218,962	45.46	30,727,663	21,575,104	70.21	26,836,267	14,245,693	53.12
1902	21,129,139	10,422,930	49.33	68,133,003	30,694,804	45.05	35,363,788	26,396,923	74.64	32,242,228	17,293,290	53.64
1903	25,332,216	11,944,300	47.15	71,297,682	33,190,646	46.55	40,600,037	29,195,736	71.98	36,047,873	19,276,546	53.47
1904	23,442,254	11,035,018	47.07	71,460,146	32,898,495	46.04	39,962,848	27,252,492	68.19	31,483,007	16,610,210	52.76
1905	22,027,367	10,409,188	47.26	73,284,154	33,768,719	46.08	53,465,490	33,077,578	61.87	31,822,655	17,010,130	53.45
1906	26,656,066	12,292,896	46.12	92,055,209	41,777,068	45.38	62,265,115	37,968,695	60.02	32,591,910	17,351,095	53.24
1907	31,857,017	14,284,628	44.84	114,124,372	49,890,953	43.72	62,831,601	36,561,217	58.19	38,816,839	20,313,706	52.33
1908	31,577,132	13,878,022	43.95	96,177,445	41,921,732	43.59	45,822,496	28,845,245	62.95	31,755,212	16,493,078	51.94
1909	26,228,434	11,666,308	44.48	91,209,596	42,144,980	46.21	52,814,238	33,365,316	63.17	31,001,307	16,284,117	52.53
1910	28,310,523	13,619,191	48.11	106,874,854	49,735,027	46.75	70,745,252	41,904,850	59.23	32,295,926	17,023,622	52.71
1911	26,204,150	12,325,584	47.04	99,401,935	47,053,000	47.34	48,895,406	28,982,553	59.89	30,993,562	16,053,261	51.80
1912	24,358,360	11,085,150	45.51	108,698,102	49,062,348	45.14	48,361,374	27,072,116	55.98	26,571,510	13,695,239	51.54

Imported dutiable merchandise entered for consumption: Values, duties collected, and ad valorem rates, 1897 to 1912—Continued.

Year ended June 30—	Schedule M.—Pulp, papers, and books.			Schedule N.—Sundries.
	Values.	Duties collected.	Average ad valorem rates.	Values.	Duties collected.	Average ad valorem rates.
			Per cent.			Per cent.
1897.....	$5,319,055	$1,200,043	22.56	$41,184,008	$10,031,293	25.01
1898.....	4,684,291	1,202,328	25.67	56,868,214	14,073,599	24.75
1899.....	5,223,668	1,349,575	25.84	66,420,324	16,272,012	24.50
1900.....	7,695,417	1,764,834	22.93	77,801,134	18,706,306	23.91
1901.....	7,021,206	1,702,776	24.25	76,193,074	17,912,848	23.51
1902.....	8,047,824	1,896,456	23.56	86,667,841	20,180,984	23.29
1903.....	9,907,819	2,220,756	22.28	98,422,646	20,843,433	21.18
1904.....	10,771,269	2,379,354	22.09	78,680,617	18,767,420	23.85
1905.....	11,974,859	2,525,896	21.09	92,512,767	20,771,250	22.45
1906.....	14,173,917	3,020,980	21.31	119,640,146	26,600,776	22.23
1907.....	20,005,025	4,136,029	20.67	133,092,951	29,892,107	22.45
1908.....	22,335,007	4,414,633	19.75	94,616,374	24,475,086	25.87
1909.....	22,764,740	4,412,020	19.39	113,862,410	26,387,031	23.17
1910.....	24,832,627	5,285,103	21.28	120,594,291	29,133,889	24.16
1911.....	26,136,975	5,645,302	21.62	109,049,968	27,448,145	25.17
1912.....	22,828,121	4,886,671	21.41	108,952,769	26,931,900	24.72

Imported dutiable merchandise entered for consumption, values, duties collected, and ad valorem rates by schedules of the existing tariff, during the fiscal year 1913.

	Values.	Duties collected.	Average ad valorem rates.
			Per cent.
Schedule A: Chemicals, oils, and paints.....	$49,386,692	$13,017,004	26.36
Schedule B: Earths, earthenware, and glassware.....	24,862,282	12,340,456	49.64
Schedule C: Metals, and manufactures of.....	64,299,772	20,513,874	31.90
Schedule D: Wood, and manufactures of.....	27,851,295	3,408,228	12.24
Schedule E: Sugar, molasses, and manufactures of.....	91,447,552	53,481,801	58.48
Schedule F: Tobacco, and manufactures of.....	32,437,743	26,748,125	82.46
Schedule G: Agricultural products and provisions.....	99,798,484	27,754,576	27.71
Schedule H: Spirits, wines, and other beverages.....	22,372,476	19,475,562	87.05
Schedule I: Cotton manufactures.....	25,056,975	11,061,373	44.14
Schedule J: Flax, hemp, and jute, and manufactures of.....	116,587,611	48,911,883	41.95
Schedule K: Wool, and manufactures of.....	45,335,616	25,833,028	56.98
Schedule L: Silks and silk goods.....	29,224,018	14,811,561	50.68
Schedule M: Pulp, papers, and books.....	24,890,335	5,091,232	20.45
Schedule N: Sundries.....	126,157,230	29,803,424	23.62
Total dutiable.....	779,717,079	312,252,215	40.05

An examination of the foregoing statistics will show the following facts:

First. That Schedule G, in 1897, in point of view of dutiable imports, ranked No. 5, while in 1912 it was first.

Second. That Schedule G as a revenue producer among the schedules in 1897 ranked ninth, while in 1912 it had risen to third.

Third. That Schedule G in 1897 showed dutiable importations of only $33,716,958, in 1912 it had risen to $117,711,156; and Schedule G in 1897 produced only $8,613,987 revenue, increased in 1912 to $34,146,071.

Fourth. That while Schedule G in 1897 had but 8 per cent of all the dutiable importations, in 1912 it had risen to 14 per cent.

Fifth. That while Schedule G in 1897 produced only 5 per cent of the import revenues, in 1912 it produced 11 per cent.

Sixth. It will be noted that while the revenues of Schedule G in 1897 were less than those of Schedule C (metals), in 1912 they were twice as great. While the revenues from Schedule G in 1897 were less than one-half those of Schedule F (tobacco), it now exceeds Schedule F by nearly $9,000,000. While approximately equal to Schedule H (spirits) in 1897, Schedule G now doubles it in the revenue production. While Schedule G was less than Schedule I (cotton), it now produces three times Schedule I's revenue. That Schedule G in 1912 produced more revenue than Schedule I (cotton manufactures), Schedule K (wool—raw wool amounting to $14,000,000 eliminated), and Schedule D (lumber) combined.

Seventh. The dutiable importations of Schedule G have increased more between 1897 and 1912 than any other schedule, and Schedule G has increased as a revenue producer more rapidly than any of the other grade schedules. Its percentage of increase in that period being 296 per cent.

As a schedule for "tariff for revenue only," viewed under the present law, it is certainly ideal. From a competitive tariff standpoint it is the most nearly perfect schedule of the list, and from a protective basis it has been satisfactory. Yet this is the schedule from which the free list receives its most numerous recruits, and the reductions on its remaining articles have been the most drastic of all the schedules.

I have subjoined to the tables figures for the various schedules obtained from a "subject-to-revision" list kindly furnished me by the Bureau of Manufactures for 1913. This should be considered by itself on account of these facts:

From statistics furnished from the same source the importations into this country under Schedule G from July 1, 1912, to January 1, 1913, are the heaviest in our history, while the total for the year ending 1913 shows a falling off from that of 1912. The loss of revenue from the free listing of various articles, as set forth by the Ways and Means Committee report, shows 80 per cent of it to be under free listing raw wool in Schedule K and the various articles of Schedule G. This is reflected in the reduced importations of these two schedules. It is a matter of common knowledge that mighty cargoes of mutton from Australia and beef from Argentina have been admitted to our ports present duty paid subsequent to July 1, the same having been started on their way with the anticipation that the tariff bill would be a law long ere this. Of the importations in all the schedules for 1913 showing a reduction under that of 1912 G, agricultural products, accounts for 50 per cent. The importations of fresh meats July, 1913, into this country amounted to $56,993; August, $64,847; with September probably a great increase, and October, with the bars down, will be the pacemaker for the northwestern farmers and stock raisers' foreign competition to feed the East and South. The increase in the imports in all schedules, except G, K, and E, shows which of the schedules presented an advantage under the Underwood law to be obtained by waiting for the new law to take effect. It was hardly a mere "mental effect" with the importers. They know protection when they see it. In 1897 our foodstuff exports were $416,472,744, being 40.37 per cent of all exports. Our manufactured articles and material therefor were $615,534,859, or 59.63 per cent. In 1912 foodstuff exports were $418,737,763, or 19.29 per cent; manufactured articles, $1,751,582,065, or 80.71 per cent. So it will appear that the exports of manufactured articles are growing much more rapidly than that of foodstuffs. If there should be any difference in the degree of scaling the tariff, the greater cut should be made on the manufactured article. On the other hand, during the last 10 years especially, the relative importations of foodstuffs compared with importations of manufactured articles have markedly increased. In 1903 we imported $145,784,548 in foodstuffs, while of manufactures we imported $453,753,710; that is, 24.32 per cent was foodstuffs and 75.68 per cent was manufactures. In 1912 our imports were $771,594,104, of which $209,898,564 were foodstuffs and $561,695,540 were manufactures—that is, 30 per cent was foodstuffs and 70 per cent manufactures.

That the bill was claimed by its sponsors to cut or remove the tariffs where trusts control a large amount of the output is found to fall far short, as an investigation of all the schedules will reveal. Pages 4, 5, 6, and 7 of the report filed by the Ways and Means Committee with this bill charge that 224 companies containing 3,843 plants, representing $12,900,000,000 outstanding capital and bonds, all of which, speaking by and large, are not subjected to one-half the reduction or removal of duties as are the products of the Northwest upon which no trust exists or can exist. About the only two trusts where rates were very seriously affected by this bill are the International Harvester Co., that did not care, and the Sugar Refining Trust, which asked to have duties removed. The Congress has been mild to the trusts. It has not been overdrastic to many manufacturers, but both Houses have assailed the agricultural interests of the Northwest with the fury of fiends, like the warlocks and witches in pursuit of honest Meg, by careless Tam bestrode; but, unlike that path of flight, there was no barring stream to cross—Meg escaped, leaving behind her "ain gray tail." But here the luckless fugitive was caught; the tail—rice, peanuts, and Angora hair—alone escaped.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman from New York consume some time?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not care to yield further.

Mr. MURDOCK. I can use five minutes, and I desire to yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL of California. Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to a description of the fearful and wonderful way in which this tariff bill has been framed, and I want to add a little testimonial along that line myself. On the 2d day of May, 1913, while we were discussing the citrus schedule of this bill, I called the attention of the Committee on Ways and Means to the fact that they were not only reducing the tariff on citrus fruits to one-half of 1 cent per pound on the capacity basis, but were, in fact, reducing it below that figure. But, of course, my amendment was ruthlessly swept aside. The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has said that when the bill reached the Senate, amendments were there carefully considered, and the justice of my contention was so apparent that an amendment was made in that body, changing the rate from a capacity basis to a pound basis, as follows:

Lemons, limes, oranges, grapefruit, shaddocks, and pomelos, $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 cent per pound.

When the conferees met there was some influence used on that important schedule and the Senate receded from this amendment. Now, when this bill was on its passage we listened to the very harrowing tale eloquently told by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] about the fever-stricken patients in hospitals all over this country who were clamoring with their dying breath for the refreshing juice of the lemon, and the reason why they were deprived of that comfort was because the wicked lemon growers of California, who, by insisting on having a tariff which equalized the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, were depriving those men of their solace in their dying days. It was a very touching tale, but now listen to what happened. When the wires flashed across the continent the news that a large percentage of the lemon crop of California had been destroyed, the benevolent institution for which some gentlemen in this House are laboring so hard, namely, the Fruit Importers' Union of New York, immediately raised the price of lemons a dollar a box. This is a matter of fact, and so I suppose these fever-stricken patients are now being solaced with imported lemons at a greatly increased price.

During the consideration of the bill in the Senate Senator WILLIAMS received and read in the Senate a letter from the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] in which he said that the change was made from the pound basis to the capacity basis because of administrative reasons.

But, Mr. Speaker, there are no substantial reasons, administrative or otherwise, why this change should be made, as I pointed out in the discussion of my amendment on the floor of the House to change the rates from a capacity basis to a pound basis. The only reason assigned by the Committee on Ways and Means for this change was that it thought the change would simplify the method of handling the imports by the customhouse by eliminating the necessity of refunds for decay. But the present plan will increase the cost to the Government, because the decay will have to be determined by counting each rotten fruit, rather than eliminating and weighing the decayed fruit as a whole. It has been held by the Board of Appraisers that there should be no allowance for decay where the duty has been levied on the capacity of the packages rather than the contents. This was Treasury decision 32108, but this decision was recently reversed by the United States Court of Customs Appeals, Treasury decision 32570, which holds that decayed fruit is subject to rebates whether the duty is levied on contents or capacity basis.

I will tell you why it was changed, Mr. Speaker. It is to allow the Importers' Fruit Trust of New York to escape payment of duty on 18 pounds of fruit in every box of 2½ cubic feet capacity, and that is what they do under this amendment. The reason is not very hard to find. It goes further than an administrative reason. One reason could be found in the very strong influence exerted by the Italian Board of Trade in New York and by some of the disciples of the powerful Tammany organization in New York who are reaching out for the votes of citizens that formerly lived in Italy, and it is a good card to catch that class of voters.

If this reduction in the duty on citrus fruits would result in lower prices to the consumer, or even if the Italian lemon grower was to be benefited by this change, there might be some excuse for this legislation; but it has been proven by experience that the consumer will not be benefited to any degree, nor will the lemon grower in Italy be a beneficiary under this reduction. The only benefit that will flow from this revision will be to still further enhance the large profits of the fruit importers in New York, 11 men of whom now control more than one-half of the imported fruit. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to use some of his time.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from New York requested that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] go on for the next speech.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the gentleman to whom I intended to yield does not happen to be in the room right at this time.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to allot myself eight minutes in view of this situation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania allots to himself eight minutes.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the gentleman from California, taken with those of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], indicate the misfortune which is likely to overtake certain sections of the country, because, through a difference in the Republican ranks, we placed the Democratic Party in power. Of course, the foreigner is going to be benefited by this tariff bill, and, of course, the American consumer is not to be benefited by it. Does anyone suppose the price of sugar to the consumer will be reduced by the importer? Why, the importer is the fellow who gets the duty relinquished by Uncle Sam. It is the same in woolens, in hosiery, in cutlery, and in certain chemicals. Wherever possible the foreign manufacturer—who is wise in his day and generation—will add the amount of the duty we take off to the goods he has to sell us. If he does not do it, the importer is not likely to forget it. You are not going to reduce the cost of living or to increase the wages of production by this bill. But I want to discuss another phase of the question.

Mr. Speaker, it may or may not be true that the President is dictating the passage of this tariff bill. He informed us in person last March that he desired legislation along these lines to destroy certain "artificial" industries that he insisted had grown up under Republican auspices, and we have been informed by the newspapers from time to time—and this is our sole source of information on the Republican side—that he followed up his recommendations by sundry personal visits to "the other side of the Capitol," more, as it was explained, for the convenience of the Senators than from a desire to interfere in tariff legislation. Since these precedent-breaking visitations the newspapers have told us of return visits by Senators and Representatives to the White House "to confer" upon tariff matters, and occasionally it has been announced that the President at these conferences has "given expression to his views," and in some instances has "spoken plainly," and in some others "stood firmly" for these things which he wished to find in any bill presented for his signature. Even so late as last evening the Star, a Washington newspaper whose representative does daily duty at the White House, announced that—

With the tariff bill practically in his hands for signature, President Wilson gave evidence to-day of an intention to push actively and steadily for a currency bill. * * * Representative CARTER GLASS, of Virginia, chairman of the House committee that framed and backed the currency bill which passed the House, was in conference with the President to-day. * * * In answer to questions to-day the President said "the Democrats of the Senate" were for currency reform, and for that reason he had little hesitation in predicting such legislation. The President's information is that Senator HITCHCOCK, of Nebraska, is the only Democrat who is likely to make trouble. * * * Mr. HITCHCOCK has never expected to obtain much of the Federal patronage in his State, and cares little for it. He has taken it for granted that Secretary Bryan would make the recommendations that would be accepted as to Nebraska appointments.

The President would, it is known, be sorry to see even one holdout in the Democratic ranks in the Senate on a measure that had been approved by the administration and Democratic leaders. It is known also that the President is immensely pleased with the harmonious cooperation that exists between himself and the Democratic leaders and Party in Senate and House. * * * The President is holding back the settlement of a number of perplexing questions until the currency law has been passed. Among these is whether recognition is to be given in Federal appointments to the colored race. Influential leaders of that race are clamoring to know the policy of the President as to recognition by appointment to Federal office.

It is fair to infer from these quotations that the President meant what he said when he visited us several months ago and advised us in his second address from "the throne" that a tariff law passed by the Democratic Party would be incomplete without the passage of a currency law. The President then said in effect that these two great reforms must be enacted together, and that the work of this extraordinary session of Congress would not be finished until it determined to do so. In other words—less elegant than those chosen by the President—"You Congressmen may expect to sit all summer and until Pennsylvania Avenue is covered with snow unless you send me what I want when I want it." [Applause on the Republican side.]

Administered with a literary insulation which softened the shock, this was the ultimatum, and straightway the procession of "conferences" at the White House and "caucuses" at the Capitol attested the eagerness of the representatives of "a free and untrammelled Democracy" to do their master's bidding. Did the "friends of the American people," the "brethren of the downtrodden and oppressed," "the liberty-loving sons of a new freedom," the tyrant-hating, boss-destroying gentlemen upon the Democratic side, who would rather die in their boots than sacrifice their sacred rights under the Constitution—did they resent this dictation from the White House? Oh, said the distinguished Speaker of the House in explaining last week the Democratic opposition to Republican caucuses, since so successfully imitated and enlarged by the Democrats themselves, "We were playing politics then."

What are you doing now? Still professing an undying love for the people, but keeping a weather eye on the White House plum tree, lest the slightest variation in your marching order shall cause a loss of your political pickings.

I am surprised at the gentleman from Alabama, the amiable and able chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. I had hoped his authorship of the tariff bill would not be dimmed by currency legislation or even by the White House. If there is any glory in the measure it belongs to him for his persistence, his energy, and his skill of management. He has been a successful leader under trying circumstances.

But upon this question of representative government, of constitutional liberty, what has been the attitude of him who stands to win or lose so much upon the passage of the bill which bears his name?

In those days when, according to the frank admission of our distinguished Speaker [Mr. CLARK of Missouri], the Democrats "were playing politics," the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] was outspoken in his opposition to presidential dictation. He stood then for the constitutional right of the Representative to vote according to his convictions. In a forceful speech upon this question, in 1910, the gentleman from Alabama made his position perfectly clear. I quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 17, 1910, page 6422. The gentleman from Alabama was opposing an appropriation of $250,000 recommended by President Taft for the creation of a tariff board—a board intended to enable Congress to obtain authentic data on the tariff. The gentleman from Alabama stood for the Constitution in that speech; he wanted no presidential interference. Here is what he said:

From the beginning of the Government down to the present time we have written every tariff bill that this country has lived under without the intervention or the dictation of the President of the United States. The Congress up to this time has been able to exercise sufficient intelligence and sufficient energy to gather the facts themselves and put their findings into the law; and the gentlemen on that side of the House, I find, are continually praising themselves for the work they have done along these lines with the old tools they have used in the past.

How was that for a declaration of the rights of Representatives? And the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] in his usual jocular vein broke in to help the gentleman from Alabama in this denunciation of presidential interference. I quote again from the RECORD:

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest to my friend that he is referring to the Republican members of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I most earnestly beg the pardon of my friend from New York. Certainly I meant the Republican members of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not even wish it to get into the head of anyone that any Democrat wishes to surrender this power.

The Democrats are taking suggestions from the White House now; were they "playing politics" when they opposed the President then?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE. In the momentary absence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] I yield myself two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. MOORE. And in that two minutes, Mr. Speaker, I must descend from the sublime to the Angora goat. [Laughter.] I would not want to miss paying tribute to the Angora goat. It will be remembered how with the fine support of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] the Angora goat, from hair to finished cloth and plushes, was given protection in the original Underwood bill. When you were depriving the northern and western farmers of protection upon their wool, when you were calling the turn upon the materials of the northern and eastern manufacturer, throwing him open to an injurious foreign competition, do you recall how the Angora goat was cared for? What has been the result of all your conferences and your caucuses with regard to this popular product of Texas? You have labored to cut duties in other directions, but the Angora goat still stands as a monument to the statesmanship of the gentleman from Texas. Starting in with protection built up to 165 per cent, you have managed by hard labor to relieve the people of 20 per cent of their "burden," and the pride of Texas comes through the crucible with a paltry 145 per cent of protection left. Other wool and woolen products can get along on the free list or with duties sadly reduced, but the Angora goat stands pat. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER]. [Applause.]

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I was much interested, though not at all surprised, to see that my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], has entirely changed his historic line of attack against Democratic tariff measures. For years and years he has been prophesying, both here and in Pennsylvania, that if ever a Democratic tariff law were to be passed, ruin, depression, and disaster would follow in its wake. Now he makes his concluding speech on this bill without ever once mentioning that subject, choosing rather to make an attack upon the President of the United States. The President and his course need no defense here nor before the American people, who are heartily approving of everything which he has done. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But the gentleman's change of front recalls to my mind an interesting incident which I feel I ought to mention.

Two or three weeks ago an association of woolen manufacturers in the city of Philadelphia had a banquet, and they invited two distinguished men to discuss economic subjects before them, being careful, however, to pick out Republicans in each instance. One of them was the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the other was a distinguished expert in tariffs and economy; the position of city statistician, I think, is the place he holds in the city of Philadelphia, though I am not entirely certain about that. My distinguished friend [Mr. MOORE] before that audience of standpat protective-tariff Republicans made his old-time prophecy of disaster, wreck, and ruin that would follow the course of the Democratic majority in this Congress; and, according to the Republican newspapers of his city, he was followed by the distinguished expert I have mentioned, who took 45 minutes to show his hearers that we are now on the eve of a period of the greatest development and prosperity, industrially, in the history of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And so effectively was my friend's speech answered that he has not made it since. [Laughter.]

He knows, and everybody who looks upon business with an unprejudiced eye must know, that to-day in the great industrial State of Pennsylvania—and the same is true elsewhere—there is every prospect of continued prosperity under this law. I have not myself heard of more than one mill which has closed down in Pennsylvania recently. I have not heard of any where the owner has stated that it must close down because of the effect of this law.

There was one, I said. It is a great woolen mill in my own district, which closed down last week and threw a large number of people out of employment. The mill is owned by a very prominent protectionist, a leading Republican of my district, and of course it was immediately published abroad that a fear of impending tariff revision compelled this mill to close. Be it said to the everlasting credit of that honest constituent of mine, he would not stand for the publication of that reason, and he issued a statement, printed all over Pennsylvania, that he closed his mill because, though flooded with orders to exceed anything he had in years, he could not get enough labor to run his mill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And so, pending some kind of arrangement for bringing labor out of this stricken city of Philadelphia, which my friend represents, up into God's country, in the mountains, where work is plenty and living easy, he was obliged to quit his operations.

Now, I have got only a few minutes, and I may skip around. I want to say a word in answer to my friend the leader of the Progressive Party upon this floor [Mr. MURDOCK], who rails at both the Democratic and Republican Parties for the methods they have employed, as instanced in the preparation of this bill. I know it is no answer for us to say that in considering this bill simply by the majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means and by the majority members of the conference we were following the precedents set by the Republican Party. It is no answer, and yet the fact surely ought to close the mouths of Republicans in criticism of that method. My friend the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] states that as his proposition, and undertakes, with the holier-than-thou attitude which is characteristic of the great party that he leads, to criticize us and say that when that happy time comes when T. R. and V. M. are in power such things will not happen. I want to see if we can not close his mouth to that sort of criticism.

Over in my State of Pennsylvania his party last year carried the State. They got the electors. They carried the Republican organization. They announced that they would control the legislature. They promised to the people certain industrial and social reforms, to be performed and accomplished out in the open before all the people. And what did they do, and how did they do it? Did they go to open sessions of their committees in the legislature and perfect these measures? No. They formed what they called the legislative committee of the Progressive State committee, picking up a dozen private citizens from various parts of Pennsylvania to frame the laws which the Progressive Party proposed to pass; and after these private individual citizens, not clothed with a particle of power by the people, had prepared these pieces of legislation they dumped them into the hopper at Harrisburg and demanded support of those measures without change or amendment as the price of advertised fidelity to the Progressive cause; and when a member of the legislature refused to vote for one of those machine-made bills their great newspaper organ in the city of Philadelphia excoriated them and welshed them for a refusal to go along in the operation of the rule of the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And what do we find down here? When this Congress opened and the Progressive Party held its first caucus—I beg your pardon, what do you call it?

Mr. MURDOCK. Open conference.

Mr. PALMER. When it held its first open conference, or exchange of confidences, it was announced that the national legislative committee of the Progressive Party, consisting of Mr. Roosevelt and Miss Jane Addams and a few others, including my constituent, Mr. Gifford Pinchot—

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman's pronunciation is as bad as his information.

Mr. PALMER. I know his name all right. He has lived in my district all his life, and voted against me every time I have run. I know his name. Up there we have Anglicized him, and we call him Pin-ch-o-t, as he calls himself. But that is beside the question. They were the members of your national legislative committee, which according to your announcement were preparing the legislation to be introduced in this Congress; and if I am not much mistaken, they have prepared many of the bills which you have introduced here in this House as the measures of the Progressive Party. Is it the rule of the people, out in the open, if representatives of the people in this great House abdicate their powers, duties, and responsibilities to a committee of private citizens back home, who dump into yonder basket the legislation that they would make the price of fidelity to their cause? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCGILLICUDDY). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PALMER. So if that is the course of this new party in the State where it has made its greatest stand and won its greatest victory, and here in the House where it makes its loudest show, it seems to me that its mouth has also been closed to criticism of the Democratic method of passing this tariff bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

A word about this matter of exports that my distinguished friend, the chief mourner at these ceremonies, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], talks about. He loudly proclaims that our exports have risen in this country to the enormous sum of $2,500,000,000; and as if he himself were the creator of all this export business, he boasts of it as the author of the Payne tariff law. Think of it for a minute, gentlemen. Why did the exports go abroad? Why does American manufacturing industry produce goods that can be and are sold in the foreign market? There are just two reasons for it always, just as certain to follow as the night the day. In the first place the American producer can produce those goods more cheaply than the foreigner who buys them; because men buy from selfish aims and not from sentimental motives. They buy where they can buy the cheapest.

The second reason is that foreign goods come into this country in exchange for them. You got $2,500,000,000 of exports in spite of your efforts to dam up the foreign article which would come over here to buy our goods in the exchange of trade. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but I venture the prediction that under this bill, with imports of foreign goods which can be made cheaper abroad than they can be made here coming to our customhouses to pay for articles which can be made cheaper here than they can be made abroad, you will find that in the next year the export trade of this country will exceed three billion dollars and go on steadily up and up. And in the course of that increase of foreign trade there will be no decrease in the amount of production in this country, nor decrease in the amount of profit; because it is just as certain as the gospel itself that men can make more money out of those things which they can make the best and cheapest than they can make out of the production of those articles which others can make best and cheapest. If it were not so I would be making this suit of clothes I wear and the shoes on my feet instead of bending my energies and activities in some other direction. It is just as true of nations as it is of individuals, and our prosperity as a nation lies in the direction of producing those things which America by her genius can make cheaper than other countries of the world, and bring into this country in exchange for those articles those things which the foreigner can make cheaper than we can. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The more we bring in the more we send out; for in the last analysis you pay for imports not in gold, not in money, not in exchange of credits. You pay for them in exports of the products of your land. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] will find that while the exports have been going up despite his high tariff rates, when once they are put down in order that there may be imports coming in, those exports will go up even higher than they have in the past. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the handsome and debonaire gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] always makes an interesting speech and is always the most interesting when he is the least hampered by facts and information. I simply want to say that the statements made regarding the conduct of affairs by Progressives in the State of Pennsylvania were interesting, but they were not true. Not one of the statements made by the gentleman regarding the conduct of Progressive legislation in the Legislature of Pennsylvania is correct. As a matter of fact, the State convention, composed of delegates elected by the people, named a committee to draft legislation, and that committee held meetings in many cities from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh. Every meeting was advertised in every paper that would use the item, and the public was invited to attend every meeting of that legislative committee of the State convention. The public did attend. Every measure was changed and revised time after time in response to the requests and suggestions of those who came to the meetings. Every interest, employer and employee, city dweller and rural resident, helped in framing the bills. When they were introduced into the legislature at Harrisburg not a single effort was made to force the legislation through by means of the caucus or party lash. No influence whatever was brought to bear on that legislation save the aroused public sentiment of the State of Pennsylvania.

I will go further and say that the legislation would to-day be on the statute book of Pennsylvania had it not been for the fact that members of the party of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] deliberately betrayed their people and misrepresented their wishes and voted against the measures, and thus prevented their being enacted into law. The leader of the Democratic Party in the legislature gave out a statement on the closing day in which he denounced these members of the Democratic Party and others who would not obey the demands of the people.

I want to say that there is no use, however, in going back to Pennsylvania to consider the questions brought up by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I want to know what kind of tactics have been used by the gentleman himself in endeavoring to compel obedience to the party mandate in this Congress. How about the case of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DOXON], who represents a great manufacturing district in Philadelphia? He went before his people in the campaign and promised that he would vote on a tariff measure schedule by schedule in an effort to decrease excessive tariff duties. He told his constituents that he would not vote for an indiscriminate reduction of all duties at once. He was elected and came to this House, and in time announced himself as opposed to the Underwood bill. What happened when his vote was recorded against the bill?

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], who is the high priest of Pennsylvania Federal patronage, served formal notice upon Congressman DONOHUE, of Philadelphia, that he should no longer have any Federal patronage, and his patronage has been taken from him as a result of his stand on this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Gentlemen of the House, these are the facts, and they are facts which can be borne out by the most cursory interview with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. DONOHUE. We are witnessing under these conditions not what was promised last year by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] would happen as a result of Democratic supremacy. Instead of the new freedom, we are having the new thralldom; instead of liberty, we see despotism in its worst form. We are not having a Government through parties, but we are having a Government for parties, and nothing else. Offices, instituted for the public service and benefit, are parceled out to the faithful ones who bow to the lash, while those who will not submit are punished by loss of patronage. If Pennsylvania Democrats will not follow their master, he will see that they get none of the loaves and fishes.

As official spokesman of the President of the United States, the gentleman from Pennsylvania shines in added splendor perhaps, but his actions as to the patronage he controls, and remarks such as those he has just made, do not add luster to his own achievements nor to the fame of the Chief Magistrate of this Nation.

I want to call attention also to a feature of this conference report we are considering which indicates the same kind of prostitution of public offices to private and party ends. The conference provision regarding the appointment of persons to administer the new income-tax section is one of the most vicious blows at the merit system that has been struck in many years. The bill as it left the House was bad enough in that respect, but it has been made far worse in this latest development. The House bill provided that all persons employed in collecting the tax should be appointed without civil-service examinations but it went no further. Now, the provision is that persons so appointed may be transferred to the general service of the Internal-Revenue Bureau. Not only that, but it provides that civil-service employees in the Internal-Revenue Bureau may be detailed to field work in the income-tax department. Then, to cap the climax, the conference report strikes out the provision that such employees shall not lose their civil-service status. That means that the entire force of the Internal-Revenue Bureau, which now consists of 290 persons, together with the 500 or 600 to be added under the operation of this law, may be taken from the civil-service list and may be placed under the arbitrary and irresponsible power of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. Speaker, it should not be open to argument that as the functions of government grow in extent, complexity, and importance it becomes more necessary that they should be administered not only by honest employees but by employees of trained ability and knowledge. This income tax is a new development and a worthy one, but it should not be ushered in with a return to the old spoils system, necessitating a new scramble for spoils and plunder.

If we are to have a Government of the people, for the people, and by the people, it follows that all offices shall be instituted and charged with certain duties solely for the service and benefit of the people. If the administration of public office is used to serve other ends than the public benefit, if offices are given to persons because of political strength and not because they can give efficient service, just so far we come short of real democracy in this Nation.

That is what is being done in this case. It is a sacrifice of the interests of the people for the interests of a party. It is putting party organization above the public welfare. It is a return to the old spoils system, which alone has made possible the despotic power of political bosses and party machines in the cities and States of this Nation.

The people of this Nation had thought that the merit system had won its way and that its battle for existence was over. They have demonstrated time and again how thoroughly they believe in making efficiency and ability the test of appointment to such positions as these. But this is a blow in the dark, it is a step backward, and it will not be tolerated. The people of this country will not endure quietly this treachery to a principle they had thought firmly intrenched and beyond attack, and those responsible for it will be called upon to give an account of their actions in this regard. The overwhelming demand on the part of the people for an income tax will not excuse those who, under cover of that demand, strike a blow at the merit system and would insert the entering wedge, which, if driven on, would mean a spoils debauch such as the Nation had thought long since impossible.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to quote in the extension of my remarks, with full approval, a speech recently delivered by United States Senator CLAPP, of Minnesota, a statesman second to none in this Nation, a patriot who scorns subterfuge and quibbling, and a friend, tried and true.

The following is the address of Senator CLAPP:

SYNOPSIS OF SPEECH OF SENATOR CLAPP AT THE PROGRESSIVE CONGRESSIONAL CONVENTION HELD AT MOUNDSVILLE, W. VA., SEPTEMBER 20, 1913.

Gentlemen, as you have, so far as this particular occasion is concerned, finished the work of adopting a platform and nominating a candidate, many of you are doubtless anxious to return to your homes, and I will therefore try to be brief, and I shall only deal with those fundamental principles which bear upon the question of the necessity of and the reasons for your acting as a separate and distinct political organization under the name of the Progressive Party. In doing this I shall try to be fair to all parties, because, independent of a desire to be fair, sooner or later every statement a man makes is tested in the crucible of truth and he gains nothing by being unfair, even if so disposed.

In dealing with this subject I may have occasion to mention persons, but it is without any feeling of hostility toward anyone, for according to my creed there is no person except in the individual's relation to those activities of which he is a part.

To understand the necessity for this separate movement we have to consider the nature of political parties, how they are brought into existence, and the conditions under which they develop with reference to the effect of those conditions upon the original purpose and character of the party itself, and to understand this we have to go back further and for a moment consider the conditions under which free government has to meet those forces which result in progress and development. A moment's reflection will satisfy you that there never yet was sufficient human wisdom and patriotism to form a government, subject to the processes of free government, which will not sooner or later be outgrown by the people who live under such government.

POPULAR ELECTION OF SENATORS.

One or two illustrations from our own history will suffice for this purpose. There never was a body of men combining more wisdom and exalted patriotism than the group of men who framed the Constitution; and we have absolutely outgrown in many particulars, and some of them fundamental, their concept of government. They were afraid, for instance, to let the people vote directly for United States Senators, and we had the somewhat grotesque spectacle presented of a system of government under which every voter of a given age was eligible to the office of United States Senator and not eligible to vote for United States Senator. That privilege was relegated to a body of men possessing no constitutional requirements except the necessary age and citizenship, known as the legislature. But it is a law of human nature that when you once set the force of free government in motion there is no power on earth that can prevent their reaching, in their last analysis, popular government; and so the American people, by one process and another, began to take the election of Senators into their own hands, until now we have a constitutional amendment under which the people vote directly for Senator.

Let me remark in passing that a great many people view with alarm the election of Senators by the people as an untried experiment. This shows how easy it is for people to get the "cart before the horse." The natural thing at the outset would have been for the people to elect their Senators, just as they elect their governor, Congressmen, and other officers. The election of Senators by the people is no experiment. The action of the framers of the Constitution in turning over the election to the legislatures was the experiment. Taking back the right by the people is not, therefore, an experiment, but the termination of an experiment.

NATIONAL—NOT STATE—PROBLEMS.

Again, the men who framed our Constitution undertook to create two sovereignties in one without defining the limits or declaring who should define the limits of each. Now, there never was on this earth and never will be such a thing as two coordinate human agencies. From the very nature of things one must be above the other. When the fathers were framing the Constitution the first draft of the instrument contained the word "nation" twenty-three times.

In the second draft it had been stricken out twelve times, and in the final draft it was stricken out wherever it occurred; and the principle that the American citizen owed his higher allegiance to the Federal Government was never expressed in an American Constitution until the constitution at Nevada was adopted, in 1864. But, as I have said, you could never have two coordinate human agencies. One or the other must dominate. And so the American people went to work to build a nation, and when Lee's shattered squadrons melted away at Appomattox the American people had put the word "nation" back into their organic law.

I simply mention these to show that there is nothing sacred in what has been, and that human foresight can not guard against the necessity of change to meet the growing will and purpose of the American people.

Applying this principle to political parties, we find another condition attaches to political parties in free government. There are two forces in the world, the right and the wrong. As the right only seeks relief from the wrong it is only active when it asserts itself, seeking relief from any unbearable burdens. But the wrong, on the other hand, ever seeking to that which it is not entitled, is always alert and never abates its interest. This is seen in the history of any community. Let there be a moral uprising and the human agencies of wrong—those who are associated with any vicious activity—are driven to their hiding places, but they always console themselves with the thought that in a little while the enthusiasm of the movement will abate, and they can come forth again and claim that which they call their own.

Now, in free government it is natural that the people should turn to political agencies to advance their material and moral welfare. Under this principle of the constant activity of wrong and the intermittent activity of right the forces of wrong are always alert and ally themselves with whatever political organization will best serve their purpose. No matter how pure the motive of those who bring the party into existence, no matter how altruistic the purpose of that party, there will come a time when the vicious forces of the country will gravitate to that party and in time will dominate that party, because there comes a time in the history of every party when countless thousands of voters sustain the party, not for what it stands for, not for what it is doing, but simply under the thrall of the tradition of a party name.

In the early history of a political party men united with the party not because of its past achievements, not from any tradition, for it had none, but they united with it because they stood for the things which the new party stood for; but in the long course of years voting that party ticket a large proportion of the voters came to sustain the party simply through the tradition and the prestige of party name. Thus it is as a party grows in years and the keen alertness of those who belong to it is simply lost in the prestige of party name the sinister forces of the country, as I have shown, ever alert and never sleeping, caring nothing for party name, seeking alignment only where it will serve their purposes, sooner or later will dominate such political party and thus, from the very nature of things, there comes a time when, like the Constitution which our fathers gave us, the people find it necessary to bring about changes. While you can change the Constitution and call it the same instrument, you can not change the purpose of a political party by leaving that party in the control of the men subject to sinister influences that have gradually gathered themselves about a party organization. In this respect political parties differ from all other organizations. A church may maintain its pristine purity for generations because it does not attract the vicious. It can not become the instrument of the vicious, sinister forces of society. There is no inducement for them to turn to it, while, on the other hand, political parties, dealing with governmental policies, able to bestow or withhold privileges and benefits, naturally, as I have conclusively shown, attract and draw this evil, sinister influence and force that ever has and probably ever will exist among mankind.

Now, at this point I want to deal with another principle which marks the difference in citizenship between the right and the wrong. Men who stand for the right are naturally men of keen conscience and conception, always feeling a sense of obligation to that with which they have been associated, somewhat held in check by the tradition of party name and great achievements which may have marked the early history of their party.

NEED OF PROGRESSIVE PARTY.

The forces of evil and wrong have no such sentiment. To them the past is nothing, party name is nothing, to be loyal is nothing. As Jay Gould once testified, when he was operating in a Democratic district he was a Democrat; when he was operating in a Republican district he was a Republican. This gives the forces of wrong, in any sense, a great advantage, for it knows no limitation of party or party name. The moment any party comes into power it immediately begins to gravitate toward that party, and that gravitation involves a sort of association that brings the men who would oppress child labor, who would add to the swollen fortunes on the overwork hours of womanhood, in a political kinship with every vicious force. Whether it be the traffic that enslaves men or enslaves women, every evil, sinister force, is unconsciously allied in a unity of purpose.

Applying these principles—which I think you will all recognize—to the present situation, we have the following conditions: The Republican Party was born of a great crisis. It was the coming together of men who threw off the shackles of former party association, rose supreme to the sacrifice, and founded a party probably of as pure and altruistic purpose as was ever founded in the history of the human race. It had its great leader, Abraham Lincoln, who typified upon a broad and exalted scale the personality of those who formed the rank and file of the party. It was founded upon the law of party government that party policy, instead of being dictated by the few who temporarily are in official position, should be the voice of the rank and file and be reflected in the policy of the so-called leaders. It was this law of leadership that made Lincoln immortal. He could wait, and wait with patience, amid the jeers and sneers and denunciation alternately of his enemies, until he realized that the American purpose had ripened for action, and he reflected that purpose in his own activities.

A party thus born and adhering to this law of leadership was destined to great achievement, and for almost 50 years it was, with the single exception of Cleveland's administration, the instrument employed by the American people in solving their great problems. On the 4th of March, 1909, it entered upon its last administration. Back of that 4th day of March, 1909, lay almost 50 years of splendid achievement; and yet in that 50 years, outside of the 4 years which covered the overthrow of the Rebellion, there is no period so resplendent with achievement in the interest of the American people as the 7½ years just preceding the 4th day of March, 1909.

In that seven and one-half years we had worked out some great policies, not perfect because worked out through the medium of human instrumentalities, and yet they were along the line of the broad recognition of the rights of the American people, in a broad equation, as opposed by the interests of the few in a narrower equation. During this seven and one-half years we passed the great antirebate bill of 1903, the great railroad bill of 1906, the pure-food law, the publicity law, and on the 4th of March, 1909, we stood at the threshold of the most vital legislation that ever confronted the American Congress since the days of reconstruction, viz, the consideration of child labor.

Now, man always has to have a symbol as an outward expression of the faith within him. You could never have religion without a church; you could never have a country without a flag; and the American people, by common instinct, came to take as the symbol of those great policies the name of the man under whose leadership the purpose of the American people had been wrought into legislation, and they came to be known then, known now, and will be known in the future as the "Roosevelt policies." Those of us who were more directly in sympathy with these policies supposed, of course, they were Republican policies, and yet, within six months from the 4th day of March, 1909, we were condemned as insurgents and traitors to the party for standing against the repeal of the Roosevelt policies.

On the 4th day of March, 1909, the party stood, not only with this history behind it but apparently permanently entrenched in the confidence of the American people, for under the inspiration of these policies great States that had for generations been Democratic had wheeled into the Republican column, and yet within 18 months from that day that great party found itself shipwrecked, its bulwarks stove in, its decks awash, and plunging bow foremost to destruction.

Now, it is not important who is to blame for that change, except so far as the policies of the men who may have been to blame are involved in the question of what policies the American people are going to stand for. Everyone knows that Mr. Taft was elected because of his supposed sympathy with the Roosevelt policies, and yet no sooner had he taken his seat than we witnessed in the American Senate a strange spectacle. When Senator Aldrich would reach a proposition that was absolutely indefensible he would seek to get the Republican support for the proposition upon the plea that it was the President's desire. It was a very strange spectacle, indeed, to see him become the mouthpiece of the administration, for during the seven and one-half years of Mr. Roosevelt's Presidency Senator Aldrich had not been recognized by either Mr. Roosevelt or the public as the mouthpiece of the administration.

Mr. Taft sought to excuse his affiliation with Aldrich and Cannon by insisting that it was necessary that he have their support to carry out his policies. When I used to try lawsuits I always used, if it was possible, the witnesses of the other side to prove my case, because the other side could not very well contradict its own witnesses; and so in this case I introduce Mr. Taft's statement to prove that he was not carrying out the Roosevelt policies when he says he had to have the help of men like Aldrich and Cannon, for Mr. Roosevelt never required their assistance in carrying out his policies, and the admission of the necessity of their assistance is the proof that the new President was not carrying them out.

The first test came in the tariff bill of 1909, known as the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill. The Republican Party had promised in its platform a revision which everyone knew then, and knows now, meant a scaling down of duties where they were excessive. In fact, Mr. Taft himself, so far as I can now recall, is the first man who claimed to be a Republican and yet referred to the protective tariff as a tax, in a speech made, I think, at Bath, Me., wherein he referred to the fact that these taxes must be reduced. But no sooner had we entered upon a revision of the tariff than it became evident that the real issue was not between free trade and protection but between honest protection and monopoly. In fact, wherever it served their purpose they struck down protection with as ruthless a hand as that with which they bolstered monopoly.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN LABOR.

At that time it was claimed that there were 12,000 American cigar makers on the streets of America out of work; and yet, notwithstanding their pretended affection for protection, they stood for a large influx of Philippine cigars as against the right of protection of the American cigar makers. Those of us who came to be called "insurgents" and "progressives" opposed the effort to put Philippine cigars upon the free list and some other reductions, as we opposed many of the increases.

We urged upon Mr. Aldrich the fact that if he forced a bill through the Senate in the interest of monopoly instead of fair protection, that the people of the United States would revolt against it and turn around and elect a Democratic administration, and if there is any man here to-day who regards as a menace to the industries of this country the pending Democratic tariff bill, I want to remind him there is nobody to thank for it except the Aldrich-Cannon-Taft combination that put the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill through Congress. The best friend of protection is the man who stands for honest and fair protection. The worst enemy of protection is not the blatant free-trader, but the man who, under the guise of protection, has bolstered monopoly, and the sequel proved the truth of this assertion.

As an evidence of the spirit that dominated that measure and under the new leadership of men like Aldrich and Cannon who had secured control of the Republican Party I cite the so-called corporation tax. Whether you desire an income tax or not you will agree with me, I think, that the income tax is the fairest form of tax that can be devised. You may have a piece of property that actually is not earning enough to pay the tax, and yet it is taxed as property; but no man can pay a dollar of income tax until he has first made the income out of which the tax is derived. We had, upon a poll of the Senate, a majority of 4 for the income tax, when suddenly, like a bolt from a clear sky, the administration sent in its so-called corporation-tax amendment to sidetrack the income tax.

Now, this corporation tax was not a tax on property. It was in the nature of an excise tax for the privilege of being a corporation; and yet, under this new leadership, the interests had obtained such a control that that corporation-tax law actually exempted the most vicious form of corporations, viz, the holding company or trust, from the payment of a corporation tax. Notwithstanding that we fought to take that exemption out, Mr. Aldrich was strong enough to retain it in the law.

I speak of this as showing the spirit that dominated, that had suddenly assumed control of that great party which you and I had so long worshipped as almost perfect. It is not a pleasant task, and yet, if we obtain any guidance for the future from the past, we have to deal with that history, regardless of whether it is pleasant or unpleasant.

The election of 1910 came. The Republican Party suffered a disastrous defeat in that election, and these men of whom I have spoken charge that defeat to those of us who had come to be called "insurgents" and "progressives." As I have said, it is unimportant who is responsible, save as it bears upon present and future policies. That year we lost the State of Maine, and I would like to be furnished with the name of some Republican insurgent in the State of Maine in 1910. We lost the State of Massachusetts, and while I profess some familiarity with current political events I can not recall the name—nor can you, either—of any insurgent Republicans in Massachusetts in 1910. We lost the State of New York. Perhaps you can remember the names of some valiant Republican insurgents in that State in 1910. We lost the State of New Jersey, and possibly you can recall the name of some Republican insurgents in that State in 1910. If you can, your memory is better than mine. You know what happened in Pennsylvania, and perhaps the least discussion of it the better. We lost the State of West Virginia, your own State. You ought to be familiar with the history of your own State, and perhaps you can favor me with the names of the militant Republican insurgents in 1910 who lost the State of West Virginia to the Republican Party. We lost the State of Ohio, the President's own State. He sent his Cabinet ministers to that State to tell the people that a vote for the Democratic candidate—Harmon—meant a vote against their President, and back came the answer—a majority of 100,000 for Harmon.

Now, of course, there are local conditions in all these States, but underlying every consideration was the revolt of the American people against the betrayal of the trust and the violation of the pledge of the party in 1908 with reference to the tariff. In every one of these States what has come to be known as the stand-pat element of the party was in control and we lost the States where they were in control. Contrast this result with the result in those States where the men now called "insurgents" and "Progressives" were then in control. So let us once and forever put a stop to the claim that the insurgents wrecked the party in 1910. It is as fallacious as the claim that Mr. Roosevelt wrecked it in 1912. The Republican Party was absolutely wrecked, shattered, and shot to pieces in the spring of 1909 when Mr. Taft, backed by men like Aldrich and Cannon, undertook to reverse the spirit of the preceding seven and one-half years in the overthrow of the Roosevelt policies.

The railroad law of 1906 came on under Mr. Roosevelt. We had made splendid advance in the control of railroad rates; we passed the antirebate law of 1903 and the great railroad law of 1906. There was no particular demand for very much more legislation in 1910, except that the "interests" saw that under this new leadership, which had now come into power, they could perhaps repeal some of the more stringent regulations that had been passed under the Roosevelt leadership, and so a bill was sent in with the injunction that not a "t" should be crossed nor an "i" dotted and to debate that bill would be considered treason to the Republican Party.

I see hanging on the wall a picture of Abraham Lincoln, the real, great founder of that party. Do you not think strange times had fallen upon the party when the party of Lincoln should be told that a great piece of legislation should be passed without dotting an "i" or crossing a "t" and to debate a measure affecting 80,000,000 people would be treason to the party? That was not the spirit of Lincoln's leadership. The spirit of leadership that wrecked the Republican Party in 1909 will wreck any political party that has ever been created in the annals of the American people.

I have not time to analyze that bill, except to point out some of the backward, reactionary provisions of the bill. Those of you who are lawyers realize that in what are known as "equity proceedings" usually you can not appeal from what is called the intermediate or interlocutory decree. You have to take your exceptions, and when the final judgment is entered you can appeal from that, and that involves the points you have made as you have gone along. Now, it often happens that if you could appeal from the intermediate or interlocutory decree, it would settle the question and save several months and perhaps years of delay. So in 1906 we put a provision in the railroad bill that the shippers could appeal from interlocutory decrees, but this bill of 1910, which we were told should be passed without crossing a "t" or dotting an "i" and to debate the bill would be treason, repealed the right of appeal from interlocutory decrees.

We had found from long experience that Federal judges might issue injunctions against the Interstate Commerce Commission without giving the commission any hearing. It would seem that before one of the great agencies of your Government should be tied up with an injunction it should be heard, and so we put into the law of 1906 a provision that no judge sitting in his chambers at midnight could issue an injunction against any of the great agencies of your Government without first giving five days' notice, but this bill, which we were told should not have a "t" crossed nor an "i" dotted and to debate it would be treason, repealed that requirement and left it optional with judges to issue injunctions against the Interstate Commerce Commission without any notice whatever.

While the Interstate Commerce Commission makes its orders affecting rates, and the railroads where they appeal bring suits against the commission, yet these rates affect the interest of the shipper, and so we had provided in the former law that the shipper, who was the party really interested and not the commission, might appear in these cases and defend the order made by the commission. But this bill of 1910, which was accompanied by the declaration that not a "t" should be crossed nor an "i" dotted and to debate it would be treason, contained a provision expressly prohibiting the shipper from appearing where he was vitally interested in the result of the litigation. In other words, it was taking from the American citizen the right to appear in a case where his interests were directly and vitally at stake.

Well, I want to tell you in confidence that before we got through we crossed several "t's," dotted several "i's," and debated the bill until we forced them to take out of it most of the objectionable reactionary features; but in doing so we were, so far as they could do it, read out of the party and declared traitors to the Republican Party. Now, it is of little concern what became of us, but it is of interest to know what the people think and how they stand upon these questions, and, as I have shown you, the verdict of 1910 was an overwhelming defeat of the men who paraded as the Republican Party and sought to turn back the spirit of the Roosevelt policies.

We believed then and believe now that after the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill was passed, if we could have secured a clean-cut, nonpartisan tariff commission so that we could have said to the American people, "Whatever the imperfections of this bill, we are now in a position where we can give you tariff legislation that is honest and fair," we might still have saved the party. But Bourbonism is always blind, and we were powerless to secure the enactment of a law giving the country a clean-cut, nonpartisan, efficiently equipped tariff commission.

The campaign of 1912 came on and we then believed that if we could convince the American people that this aggregation that had thus violated the pledge of 1908 was not the real Republican Party, we might still save the party, and with that in view we appealed to the people of many of the States in primary campaign, more or less statutory, more or less informal, but at all events calculated to get the expression of the people. Again the overwhelming verdict of the people was against the crowd who had paraded as the Republican Party. But we went to Chicago, and you all know the result, as many of you were there and witnessed that tragedy. I say "tragedy" because in my humble judgment it meant the beginning of the end of the Republican Party. I believe that the American people, even under the inspiration of a party name or party lash, will never again clothe with political power the men who perpetrated the Chicago outrage.

AMALGAMATION IMPOSSIBLE.

I do not care to dwell upon it. The men who dominated that situation were not only determined to nominate Mr. Taft, but they had a deeper purpose than that, and that was, at any cost, to once and forever, if they could, stamp out the growing purpose of the American people to nominate their own candidates, independent of political bosses and Federal machines. That was the underlying issue and that is why they would yield to nothing. They forced the matter through, with the result that when the election came, when the third verdict of the people came, of those who called themselves Republicans, their candidate received 8 electoral votes, while the protests of the people, formulated in the candidacy of Col. Roosevelt, secured 88 electoral votes.

Now the question comes, What of the future of these two forces? The men who secured 8 electoral votes, with a patronizing air say to those who secured the 88, "We forgive you for your iniquities, we pardon your sins, and you can return to the fold of the 8." It strikes me as not only a political but a gastronomic problem as to how the 8 can swallow the 88. But there is no use in dealing with that phase of the question. One side was wrong, the other side was right. If the nomination of Mr. Taft as a supplement to his efforts and that of his immediate associates to reverse the policies of Mr. Roosevelt was right, then those who opposed his election were wrong. The only test that I know of as to what is right or wrong in a broad sense, in political and economic problems, is the voice of the people, and the voice of the people was heard, the result, I think, announced, and it strikes me it is absolute folly to talk of those securing 8 electoral votes welcoming back to the fold as repentant sinners those who secured 88. If those who call themselves Republicans—those who secured 8 electoral votes at the last election—really believe, as some of them profess, in the principles which those who secured the 88 electoral votes, and who call themselves Progressives, stand for, then they should join the Progressives, and the union of these forces would be sufficient to prevent further Democratic victories.

An event occurred recently which to my mind settles this matter absolutely. I refer to the election in the State of Maine, which I awaited with intense interest. When the result was announced, it became evident, to my mind, that it was the death knell of the Republican Party. Nothing except a great panic, which would coalesce the people regardless of political affiliations with the one purpose to overthrow the present administration, can ever bring together the various political forces of this country.

A year ago in that district in Maine there was no Progressive congressional candidate running. Col. Roosevelt carried the district by a very handsome majority, and the Republican Congressman was also elected. Now, a year ago there were hundreds of thousands of men who voted for Col. Roosevelt, partly because of his magnetic leadership, partly because they admired his past achievements, partly because they wanted to put the seal of condemnation upon the Chicago transaction, but they voted for him without stopping to think or to care particularly where it would lead them with reference to their final divorce from the Republican Party, so that the vote which he received, while it was a splendid tribute to him and to the platform of the Progressives, did not mean by any means that all who voted for him had finally determined to leave forever the party with which he had been so long associated. But this year it is not voting for Col. Roosevelt. His magnetic leadership, his splendid achievements are not a direct inspiration to voters. This year no man could vote the Progressive ticket without calmly and deliberately determining that he was through with the organization known as the Republican Party, and when in that rock-ribbed district up in Maine 6,500 men, under these conditions, walked up to the polls and deliberately registered their purpose to forever abandon the so-called Republican Party, it meant that that force, carried to its equation throughout the United States, is the absolute death knell of that leadership which parades as the Republican Party. It can never survive that condition.

Now these men are going somewhere politically. They are either going to hold back until the time comes when the Democratic progressives learn in their own bitter experience, as we learned in ours, the utter futility of reforming an old outworn, canker-eaten political organization, and they come out and join the progressives; or, in time, if harried and impatient they do not see that result, they are going, by a natural law of human nature, to the Democratic Party, and all the progressive leaders on earth can not hold them from so doing. It is a law of human nature that when a man, upon calm and deliberate conviction, finds that that with which he has been associated is a shock to his sense of justice and leaves it, wherever he goes, he never returns to that organization, and it is only the traditional blindness of Bourbonism that could dream of human nature reversing itself.

Now, that leads me to a consideration of the Democratic Party and what will become of the progressive Democrats. I believe in being fair in these things. During the four years in which the Aldrich-Cannon combination sought to reverse the Roosevelt policies there were these same progressive Democrats, loyal to their convictions, courageously standing shoulder to shoulder with us against the reversal of the Roosevelt policies. Their party is now in power. For 16 years their party has had no opportunity to show what it would do. It is no wonder, then, that these progressive Democrats hope and believe that their party is the ark of the covenant to which, if they stand true, they will find themselves, eventually, in possession of and bringing about the desired reforms through their party organization, and I would be the last man on earth to even rail at them for not now standing out as independently and boldly as they did when their party was out of power. But they are doomed to the same bitter disappointment. They believe that their leaders can overcome the sinister forces of their party as Roosevelt, when President, overcame the sinister forces of his party.

I am no hero worshiper. To me Col. Roosevelt is simply an individual possessed of high ideals, with the courage to stand by his convictions, and it is no reflection upon anyone else to say that probably there is no other Roosevelt in Roosevelt's generation. If you want to know a man's strength, judge of what he has done in the light of the conditions under which he accomplished it. A man with 200,000 appointments held back can for a time force party leaders and party workers to a certain line of policy, but it must be remembered that when Col. Roosevelt assumed the Presidency upon the death of McKinley it was not a change of party—the patronage had been disposed of. There were no offices to give out, and yet, deprived of this power of patronage, Roosevelt was able to force a reluctant Congress to do the bidding of the people, because the secret of Roosevelt's strength lay after all in the fact that Roosevelt unlike many men who have to sink a plummet into the current of human thought to measure the force, depth, and direction, never had to do that, because he himself was the incarnation of the best convictions of the American people. This was the secret of his strength. Measured, then, by the lack of the power of patronage, you have the accomplishment of the man that can not be copied by any imitator. The man who would do what he did has to be his equal in strength and purpose, and has to have that absolute sympathy with the common people, a part of that spirit of the people which he possesses and which he was. So I say the dream of the progressive Democrats that they will see the reforms worked out in their own party is a futile dream. It is a futile dream for another reason. The party is not equipped with the necessary instrumentality for doing the work. On the one hand, it is dominated by the bossism that finds its kinship

In Tammany; and on the other, it is dominated by a class of men highly intellectual, patriotic as they see patriotism, but bound under the spell and thralldom of an old tradition, a tradition of State rights.

HOPELESS POSITION OF PROGRESSIVE DEMOCRATS.

That party which will render the highest service to the common people has to be based upon the principle that government is organized for the people, instead of the people being here for government. It has to be based upon the principle that this great coordination of force which we call the "Federal Government" has to be employed whenever and wherever the Federal Government can best serve the material and moral welfare of the American people, and the trouble with the Democratic Party—and I say it in all frankness—is that while its young members, perhaps, are less enslaved by its traditions, the party has been, and is to-day, bound in the thralldom of a strict construction of the powers of government, and that involves a narrow concept of the functions and service of government. It has been an interrogation point. In asking what service the people require, and in asking the question, Can the Government, in view of its organic limitations, render that service, I do not mean by this that we must ignore all written limitation. What I mean is that we have to approach the question of the power of government from the standpoint of service to be rendered rather than a technical interpretation of the power of government itself, recognizing that the real purpose for which free government is organized is the service which it may render.

Again, the Democratic Party is suffering to-day from just what the Republican Party suffered from. As it has come into power it has drawn, and is drawing, to itself the sinister influences of the country. Any party will do it, as it is done in obedience to a great law of human nature, and, as when the mantle fell from Roosevelt the progressive spirit of the Republican Party found itself powerless to give shape and color to the activities of the party, so the progressive spirit in the Democratic Party will find itself powerless to give shape and color to the activities of the Democratic Party, and all we Progressives have to do is to wait until the progressive Democrats learn the same bitter lesson, and then, if the Progressives who have come from the Republican Party maintain their organization, we will find an accession of power that will make them a power that is equivalent to the force that will carry out their great purpose and policies. It seems to me, then, the duty of the Progressives is plain, for this force that has revolted, and revolted forever, against Republican leadership must either be the nucleus of the final force, or it must melt into the Democratic Party and be as hopelessly involved as it was in the Republican Party.

Now, sooner or later in human experience that which is natural comes to happen. We have had in this country a most grotesque situation. We have had two political parties which of late years have not differed materially. Even on the tariff bill in its last passage, if you have read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD you will see that day after day the so-called Republicans voted to put items on the free list which the Democratic caucus refused to put there. The natural line of demarcation between political parties in a country should be the line that separates those who desire progress and those who desire to remain stationary. In all the ages that has been the line of demarcation between the great forces—one that wanted to move forward and the other to remain still. But in the early history of this country we became involved in the question of State rights, and that became an issue, and even to-day, although practically forever settled by the Civil War, it is the nucleus around which a great party centers. We have, therefore, to-day a grotesque spectacle of two parties, not with a line between them, as it should be, but a line through each party. We have our reactionary Republicans and progressive Republicans, our reactionary Democrats and progressive Democrats.

I do not like to use names in a public speech, but you can readily recall the names of those who claim to be Republicans and yet are as diametrically opposed to one another in everything that involves the highest interests of the American people as any two political parties could be. You can, on the other hand, call to mind Democrats, each of whom calls himself a Democrat, who are simply, absolutely opposed to one another in everything that pertains to the real welfare of the people. This condition can not last, because it is unnatural, and sooner or later the American people are going to have two political parties with the line of demarcation running between them—one composed of those who always turn to the rising sun, the other of those who always turn to the setting sun. When this will come no man can say. If we should escape any great business depression, I believe it will work out within a short time.

When it comes it must be through a party like the Progressive Party, which sinks all minor issues in the real paramount issue of progress; which will call to its ranks all who believe in progress as the fundamental issue, leaving others of whatever present political faith to naturally drift together in one general reactionary party. This will leave the voters divided, as they should be, with a party line separating parties from each other on one side of which will be the forces of progress and on the other side will be the forces of reaction.

YOUR LOCAL CANDIDATE.

I only want to say a word of the local situation. I heard your platform read and listened with intense interest. It rings true in every line. I also know your candidate. He is a living incarnation of the great principles enunciated in your platform. They are all right, but while they are vital, the real vital thing after all is the man himself. The Republican Party under the leadership of Roosevelt worked out great policies which were not foreshadowed in platforms. Under the leadership of Mr. Taft it violated a pledge which was written in its platform, and so the vital question over and above platforms is the man himself, in his splendid personality, in his loyalty to his convictions, in his willingness to make what seems to many a sacrifice. He is the personification of your platform and a candidate that, if elected, will in himself be the assurance that, unlike some platforms of the past, there will be a fulfillment of your platform in the activities of the man who stands as a standard bearer.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the sad and melancholy dirge of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. With tear-dimmed eyes and mournful voice he has witnessed the last sad rites of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. He has expressed his grief and he has mourned its demise, but let me say to the gentleman, dry your tears; your loss is the people's gain. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The most oppressive tariff law ever written dies in this House to-day. All hail to the Underwood law! [Applause on the Democratic side.] Let the people rejoice and be glad. Trust magnates and trust barons have been located in the temple of the people, and the Democratic Party is calling them to judgment. [Applause on the Democratic side.] To-day, Mr. Speaker, we are enacting a law that looks to the greatest good for the greatest number. The average man is given a fair chance in the struggle for existence. Special privileges and governmental favoritism are stricken down. The old doctrine of our party is restored, equal rights to all and special privileges to none. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Gentlemen on that side are bewailing their fate because these privileges are gone. Let the people rejoice, for they are coming into their own once more. They have occasion to rejoice, and I congratulate Majority Leader UNDERWOOD for the great work that he has done. The bill that bears his name, in my judgment, will go down in history as one of the best laws ever written in the interest of the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, a word or two about the Clarke amendment and the substitute to be offered. There are good provisions in both. I have never lost an opportunity on this floor to vote to regulate cotton exchanges so that actual cotton could be handled on the exchanges, and so that they would have to call upon the farmer for cotton with which to fill contracts. There are some features in both that ought to be changed. As a whole, neither one of them is entirely to my liking. The late lamented Cushman, from Washington, told a story here once about a man in the West who stole a horse. A dozen men had him out and were about to execute him. Six of them discussed the proposition of hanging him and five preferred to shoot him. One of them stood guard, and the unfortunate fellow heard all the debate, nervously listening, and finally one of them said, "Suppose we ask him his preference in the matter; he may have some views he would like to express"; and so they said, "Old fellow, have you any preference as to the plan of disposing of you?" He said, "To tell you the truth, I can not enthuse over either one of the plans." [Laughter.] So, Mr. Speaker, there are some features in both propositions that I would like to change.

One of the features in the Clarke amendment is good; it distinguishes between legal and illegal business in cotton. It puts a premium upon that transaction that calls for dealing in actual cotton. It encourages contracts where actual cotton is delivered, and provides that if cotton is delivered the tax shall be returned to the person paying it. Those who speculate, as they do now in hundreds of millions of bales of cotton in a season, when we produce only twelve or fourteen million bales, are the ones who are to pay the tax that would not be returned. Those who deliver cotton would have their money refunded to them. So this class of cotton dealers are treated differently from the way the cotton gambler is treated. But they tell us that the gambling exchange helps the farmer. Mr. Speaker, they help the cotton farmer like a vampire helps its victim; they suck his very lifeblood; they sell these hundreds of millions of bales and never tender on contract a pound that is spinnable.

We have a pure-food law that condemns certain articles of food. Bad articles of food are destroyed because they are injurious to health and dangerous to life. Some of these so-called cotton exchanges keep a brand of stuff that is unfit for spinning purposes. Why not enact a law to condemn that cotton and destroy it? They have no right to use that character of stuff and tender it in the name of cotton on contracts calling for spinnable cotton. They use a kind of cotton as basis for contracts that you can not spin and will not accept, and they pay you the difference between the 1 or 2 cents a pound stuff and real cotton. Then they keep the dog-tailed cotton to sell and resell over and over again to the great injury of the cotton producer. There are two good features in the substitute offered by Mr. UNDERWOOD, contracts would be noted and a record would be kept of all transactions in cotton on the exchanges.

Then we would be able to find out just how much cotton they sell in season. We are unable to find that out now, but we ought to know. We are entitled to know. If these contracts were recorded, we could tell in one year how many millions of bales they sell on the New York Cotton Exchange, where never a pound is delivered. Hundreds of miles away from the cotton belt, it can not be a spot-cotton exchange. This exchange, with its unspinnable cotton and 23 grades, ought to be regulated or outlawed by the Congress of the United States.

They tell us that the farmer can not get along without this wild speculation, this gambling in cotton. I deny it, Mr. Speaker. What he needs is an exchange that will call on him for real cotton with which to fill contracts. All this talk about cotton going begging for somebody to buy it but for the gambling exchange is the merest rot. This great product, worth $900,000,000 a year, and the finished product therefrom—the manufactured cotton goods—worth five to ten times that amount, and the growing demand for cotton throughout the world is evidence enough to convince even the wayfaring man that cotton will never lack for buyers. If we can remove some of these hindrances, the producer would have more to do with fixing cotton prices than he now does. The gambling exchange that settles its contracts with money and not with cotton is a burden on the back of the cotton farmer.

I believe exchanges could be made useful. I am in favor of exchanges if they are run properly. They can become great agencies for good in distributing the crop and in aiding the producer, but instead of that, they gamble as to what cotton will do. If they bet that the price will go down, why, they send out reports from their agents in the South that rains have come; that the crop is in a flourishing condition; and that a bumper crop will be made. Regardless of the facts, the bears publish reports that will help them win their bet. That is the kind of speculation that we are subjected to in the South, and we want to get away from that character of speculation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. HEFLIN. I think that two features of the substitute would help the situation. One is the proposition that compels the exchanges to adopt the nine grades of cotton standardized by Congress. I helped pass that law. Every exchange in the United States has adopted the standard grades except the New York Exchange.

Mr. Speaker, I want to see the time come when the exchanges claiming to deal in cotton will be required to call on the cotton farmers for cotton with which to fill cotton contracts. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] desire to use some of his time now?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen on the other side seem to be difficult to please. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] who has just taken his seat has bewailed the fact that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has cited the thrilling and glorious story of the prosperity of our country under the Republican protective tariff. He characterized it as a song of woe. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] who took his seat a moment ago criticized his colleague [Mr. MOORE] because he declined to make mournful prophecy of what is likely to occur under this legislation. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] is not properly appreciative. He probably does not understand the desire on this side of the House to spare your feelings this day, to do nothing to add to that Stygian gloom of apprehension that is settling down over that side of the House as you realize the hour is soon to strike when you will be called upon to vote for a measure which will greatly injure or entirely paralyze the industries of your country and of your constituents.

This is the day of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. No matter what our views may be of this legislation, all of us join in our appreciation of the manly attitude of the gentleman in charge on that side. We all appreciate that it is largely through his personal influences, his energy, his considerate ways that you are now prepared to pass on this bill.

But the gentleman from Alabama, much as I appreciate him, is mortal, like the rest of us. He declared to us in rather stentorian and boastful tones that in the passage of this bill his party had fulfilled all the promises of its platform and contravened none of them. And yet if there is any promise in their platform that ought to be more binding than another it is that in which they assured the country, and following which their presidential candidate promised, that your legislation would not injure, much less destroy, any legitimate industry.

And yet it is a fact, no matter what we may think of the rates of the bill generally, that as regards the rates touching two great industries—those of sugar and of wool—they are unquestionably destructive. Whatever may occur to the mills and factories of the country generally, so far as the sugar industry of the Nation is concerned it is doomed by your legislation. And the great wool industry, valuable, helpful, and useful to every citizen under the flag, in peace a source of comfort, in war a sure defense, you have stricken down. Touching these industries, you have not kept either the pledges of your presidential candidate or the pledges of your party platform.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is also a little forgetful. During the course of his remarks he read to us, or, rather, inserted in the RECORD—and I have taken the trouble to get it from the clerks—a statement of the estimated receipts and expenditures under his legislation. The estimated receipts begin with customs, $249,000,000, and end with revenue from the sale of public lands, $5,000,000, totaling $1,026,000,000. He then estimated $1,008,000,000 as probable expenditures, leaving an estimated surplus of $18,000,000.

Now, I am surprised at that little oversight about the public lands, because the gentleman from Alabama was, like myself, a member of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands away back yonder in our early days of service here, when we helped to pass the national reclamation law, under the provisions of which no dollar from the sale of public lands has flowed into the National Treasury for the last 12 years. [Applause on the Republican side.] Unless you gentlemen propose to repeal that law and to cease this great work which the Republican Party inaugurated for the development of the West—unless this is the first notice of repeal—no dollar of receipts from public lands can become a part of the national income. Therefore, assuming that all the other figures of estimated income are approximately correct, you must take $5,000,000 from the $18,000,000 that you have estimated as your surplus in the first year under your legislation. And if your other estimates are no more accurate than this, if they are based upon so little knowledge or information or recollection of the law or of the past history of national revenue, then the probability is that we shall face a deficit under your legislation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

We have purposely largely refrained from dismal prophecy of the effect of your legislation. The time for prophecy has passed. We are about to enter upon an actual trial of your legislation. As its repealing clauses do not and can not repeal the natural laws of cause and effect, we can not believe that the country can, as a whole, be prosperous under this act. We do know that as to the sugar industry in the West. It is doomed by your legislation. It may struggle along where already established for a time, at least, but it can not grow, and thus the best hope of many western communities is blasted. As for the wool industry, the blow you give it is a staggering one. It may, and we devoutly hope it will, be possible to continue the industry under it, but no legitimate industry among a civilized people was ever more unfairly treated. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, when a Republican President presented to Congress a treaty which provided for free trade in farm products with Canada I voted against it, and now when a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress present a bill which provides for free trade in farm products with all the countries in the world I shall vote against it.

This bill as now before us presents the measure as it will be finally voted upon and enacted into law.

DUTY ON AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

I present herewith a table showing the reduction in the duty upon the important agricultural products produced in the State of Oklahoma. The left-hand column shows the rate of duty under existing law, the right-hand column the rate under the bill now about to be enacted into law.

The table is as follows:

AGRICULTURAL ARTICLES.
Under act of 1909.	Under H. R. 3321.
CATTLE.
Cattle, if less than 1 year old, $2 per head; all other cattle, if valued at not more than $14 per head, $3.75 per head; if valued at more than $14 per head, 27½ per cent ad valorem.	Free list.
SWINE.
$1.50 per head.	Free list.
HORSES AND MULES.
Horses and mules valued at $150 or less per head, $30 per head; if valued at over $150, 25 per cent ad valorem.	10 per cent ad valorem.
SHEEP.
Sheep 1 year old or over, $1.50 per head; less than 1 year old, 75 cents per head.	Free list.
POULTRY.
Poultry, live, 3 cents per pound; dead, 5 cents per pound.	Poultry, live, 1 cent per pound; dead, 2 cents per pound.
BROOM CORN.
$3 per ton.	Free list.
CORN.
15 cents per bushel.	Free list.

CORN MEAL.
40 cents per 100 pounds.	Free list.
OATS.
15 cents per bushel.	6 cents per bushel.
OATMEAL AND ROLLED OATS.
1 cent a pound ($1 per 100 pounds).	30 cents per 100 pounds.
OAT HULLS.
10 cents per 100 pounds.	8 cents per 100 pounds.
BUTTER AND SUBSTITUTES.
6 cents per pound.	2½ cents per pound.
RYE.
10 cents per bushel.	Free list.
MILK.
2 cents per gallon.	Free list.
EGGS.
5 cents per dozen.	Free list.
POTATOES.
25 cents per bushel.	Free list.
HAY.
$4 per ton.	$2 per ton.
APPLES, PEACHES, ETC.
25 cents per bushel.	10 cents per bushel.
PEANUTS.
Unshelled, one-half of 1 cent per pound.	Unshelled, three-eighths of 1 cent per pound.
Shelled, 1 cent per pound.	Shelled, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound.
BACON AND HAMS.
4 cents per pound.	Free list.
FRESH BEEF, PORK, ETC.
Fresh beef, veal, mutton, lamb, and pork, 1½ cents per pound.	Free list.
WOOL.
First class, 11 cents per pound.	Free list.
Second class, 12 cents per pound.
Third class, 4 cents per pound (when valued at less than 12 cents per pound).
WHEAT.
25 cents per bushel.	Free list.
WHEAT FLOUR.
25 per cent ad valorem.	Free list.
BISCUIT AND BREAD.
25 per cent ad valorem.	Free list.
MEATS.
Not specially provided for, 1½ cents per pound.	Free list.

MINERAL AND MANUFACTURED PRODUCTS.

I have also prepared a table showing the reductions of duty upon important mineral and manufactured products of Oklahoma.

The table is as follows:

MINERAL ARTICLES.
Under act 1909.	Under H. R. 3321.
PORTLAND CEMENT.
8 cents per 100 pounds.	Free list.
GYPSUM.
Crude, 30 cents per ton; ground or calcined, $1.75 per ton.	Crude, ground, or calcined, 10 per cent ad valorem.
BITUMINOUS COAL.
45 cents per ton.	Free list.
COMMON WINDOW GLASS.
1½ cents to 1½ cents per pound.	1 cent to seven-eighths of 1 cent per pound.
MAREBLE.
65 cents per cubic foot.	50 cents per cubic foot.
SALT.
11 cents per 100 pounds.	Free list.
ASPHALT.
Crude, $1.50 per ton; manufactured, $3 per ton.	Free list.
CLAYS OR EARTHS.
From $1 to $2 per ton.	From 50 cents to $1 per ton.
LEAD ORES.
1½ cents per pound.	¾ of 1 cent per pound.
GRANITE, LIMESTONE, ETC.
50 per cent ad valorem.	25 per cent ad valorem.
ZINC ORES.
If containing more than 10 per cent of zinc, ¾ to 1 cent per pound.	12½ per cent ad valorem.

The people of the State which I have the honor in part to represent are deeply and vitally interested in knowing what will be the effect of the new tariff policy about to be inaugurated upon the growth and development of the State.

I believe that the abandonment of the policy of protection and the adoption in lieu thereof of the so-called competitive tariff-for-revenue-only policy will be an impediment to the material growth of Oklahoma, an obstruction to its industrial development, a hindrance to its commercial and business expansion, and an incubus upon the productive forces of the State.

I have lived in Oklahoma since its birth. I know the people of the State. I am sure I do not misinterpret the spirit which animates them. I am certain I do not misjudge their aspirations for the future. They are an energetic, intelligent, progressive, and ambitious people. They are full of hope and expectations. They believe thoroughly in a "Greater Oklahoma."

They are desirous that every village, hamlet, town, and city in the State shall grow. They are in favor of expansion in agriculture, in manufacturing, in trade, transportation, and commerce, and in every other business interest in the State.

They would like to see a healthy, substantial, continuous growth in the population of the State. They are not satisfied that the population shall remain stationary at 1,655,155 inhabitants accorded the State in 1900. They know there is ample room for additional millions of people in the State; because if Oklahoma were as densely populated as Indiana it would have 5,000,000 inhabitants; if its density of population was equal to that of Ohio, it would have 8,000,000 population; and if it had as many inhabitants per square mile as Rhode Island, it would have 35,000,000 of people.

The people of Oklahoma would like to see the State grow in wealth. They would like to see capital flowing into the State from every section of the Union. They will gladly welcome from everywhere men with means and men with muscle to aid in the development of the material resources of the State, to participate in the work of enlarging and perfecting its institutions, and to share in the honor of building a Commonwealth that shall stand second to none in the Union.

Citizens of Oklahoma realize that people will not come to Oklahoma unless there is something for them to do, and that capital will not flow to Oklahoma unless there is in the State an opportunity for safe and profitable investment. They clearly understand that growth in population and wealth, that employment for capital and labor, must come through the enlargement of our industrial forces, and that the enlargement of our industrial forces must come mainly through the expansion of agriculture and manufacturing, the two great engines of production that pull the immense industrial train of this Republic up the steep, rugged, difficult incline of progress.

EXPANSION OF AGRICULTURE.

There is opportunity for large expansion of agriculture in Oklahoma, both through the enlargement of the area in cultivation and through an increase in the yield per acre. The area of land in cultivation might be doubled and still leave 10,000,000 acres of waste land. The State has 44,424,960 acres of land. Only 17,551,337 acres are improved. Twenty-eight million eight hundred and seventy-three thousand six hundred and twenty-three acres of land in Oklahoma are unimproved, uncultivated, and unproductive. To cultivate two acres of land where we are now cultivating only one would add a million people to our population and $250,000,000 to the annual wealth produced in the State. There are immense possibilities for the expansion of our agricultural interests by improvement in our methods and system of farming.

Belgium produces food for 490 persons for every square mile of her area. At this rate Oklahoma could feed 35,000,000, or one-third of all the people of the United States.

Japan has but 19,000 square miles of cultivated lands. From these lands she produces food for 45,000,000 people. Producing at this rate, Oklahoma, with 70,000 square miles of area, could grow food for 166,000,000 of people, sufficient for all the people of the United States and enough left over to feed all the inhabitants of England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland.

With all this splendid opportunity for the expansion of our agricultural interests, with all the advantages, benefits, and blessings that it would bring to our people, we are about to crystallize into law a tariff policy that will obstruct the agricultural progress of our State.

IMPORTATIONS INCREASED.

The reduction of the duty on many farm products below the point of protection and the placing of all other farm products on the free list will largely increase the importation of such products. These importations will come from Canada, Australia, Cuba, Mexico, South American Republics, and from every other country that has cheap lands, cheap labor, cheap living, or cheap men. The supply of farm products in the United States will be greatly augmented. These imported farm products will be on sale in all the great markets of the United States in competition with the farm products of Oklahoma and of all other States of the Union. These imported farm products will come in the main from countries where land is cheaper than it is generally in the United States, where the cost of production is less, where farmers receive less compensation for their services, where farmers and their families live on a low standard and occupy an inferior social position. All this must have a tendency to lower the price of lands in Oklahoma and elsewhere in the United States, to reduce the compensation which our farmers receive for labor upon the farm, and to place our farmers and their families in their manner of living, in the social position they occupy, upon a level with the poorest and most ignorant farmers of the world.

NO INCREASED DEMAND.

The supply of farm products in this country will be greatly enlarged, but there will be no increase in the demand for such products. The new tariff policy will not augment our population or create new uses for the products of our farms. Wages will not be increased and the purchasing power of the masses of our people will not be enlarged. There will be more farm products in this country, but less money to pay for them, for millions and millions of dollars earned in the United States will be sent abroad to pay for imported farm products—money which should have gone to our farmers and their families to contribute to their support, their comfort, their enjoyment, their happiness, and their prosperity.

LOSS OF MARKET.

The protective tariff preserves the markets of the United States for the farmers of the United States. The new tariff policy about to be inaugurated compels the farmers of the United States, without consideration, compensation, or remuneration, to share their markets with the farmers of all the world. By this transaction you take from the American farmers one of their most valuable assets. It is the markets of the United States that give value to land, profits to farms, and encouragement to agriculture. Destroy the farmers' market and you have ruined their business.

But men who believe in free trade in farm products point out to the farmers of the United States the world's market as an ideal place in which to sell their products. To sell in the world's market simply means more cost of transportation, more profits for middlemen, more dividends for corporations, more percentage for agents, distributors, and dealers, but always less money for the farmer. It occurs to me that if I were a farmer and my Congressman would tell me that Liverpool was a good enough market in which to sell my wheat, I would say to him, "Then Liverpool is a good enough place for you to get votes."

DECLINE OF PRICES.

With an increased supply, with no material increase in the demand, and with a diminished and restricted market, naturally, logically, and inevitably there will be a decline in the prices of farm products in the markets of the United States.

The problem of prices is as important as the problem of production. The profits of the farmer depend as much upon the prices he receives as upon the quantity of his products. The annual wealth produced by the farmers of Oklahoma is not measured in pounds and bushels but in dollars and cents. Any marked decline in the price of farm products in the United States would be a public calamity. No one can with any accuracy foretell how much decline there will be in the prices of farm products of the United States as a result of the new tariff policy. But before we enact any legislation that will tend to reduce the prices of farm products we should carefully estimate the possibilities of loss to our farmers. Take Oklahoma. Our annual farm products are valued at approximately $250,000,000. If the new tariff policy would cause a reduction in price of only 1 per cent, the annual loss to the farmers of Oklahoma would be $2,500,000; if prices declined 5 per cent, the annual loss to the farmers of Oklahoma would be $12,500,000; and if prices should decline 10 per cent, which is not improbable, the annual loss to the farmers of Oklahoma would be $25,000,000. If this annual loss should continue for four years in succession, as it now looks probable, it would entail a loss upon the farmers of Oklahoma of $100,000,000—one-fourth the amount that it has cost to build the Panama Canal.

A reduction of 10 per cent in the prices of farm products of the entire country would mean an annual loss to the farmers of the United States of $900,000,000. Should these low prices continue for a period of five years the farmers of the United States will have lost the incomprehensible sum of $4,500,000,000—a sum that is four times the total interest-bearing national debt and a sum larger than the total amount paid in pensions to the soldiers of this country and their widows and orphans since the Revolutionary War.

To contemplate the immense loss that is possible to the farmers of the United States by the proposed change in the tariff policy is simply appalling. For one I can not approve such a policy. I can not vote for this measure. I can not support a bill that is fraught with such immense possibilities of loss and injury to the farmers of Oklahoma. I know what the farmers of Oklahoma have gone through. I know the burdens they have borne. I know what sacrifices they and their families have made, and I can not support any policy that places their welfare in jeopardy.

FARMERS HELPLESS.

When prices are low the farmers have no means within their power to arbitrarily advance them. It is different in many other lines of business. When transportation rates are low the great interstate railway companies may secure an advance of rates to insure profits. When the prices of manufactured products are low the great industrial corporations, having large monopolistic power, may at their will increase prices to enable them to declare proper dividends. When business is dull the bankers who have in custody the money of the people may at their pleasure adjust interest rates to make their business profitable. When trade is slack the merchants may mark their prices up or down to meet the conditions of business. When wages are low, hours of labor long, and conditions of labor unsatisfactory, organized labor may, through mediation, conciliation, and arbitration, or, finally, by a strike, secure redress of grievances. How different with the farmer! When farm products are low, hours of labor long, or when labor conditions are unfavorable to health and comfort, they have no alternative except to sell at the market price, toil on 16 hours per day, contending with the elements, facing storm and drought, patiently bearing their burdens, until a better day shall come. Mr. Speaker, the cry of "back to the farm" will make little impression as long as the farmer under unfavorable conditions is bending his "back" to the farm.

Oklahoma should enlarge its production of wheat; but the importation of wheat from Canada, Argentina, and other countries will not encourage the farmers of Oklahoma to increase the acreage cultivated to wheat. The effect will be to drive Oklahoma farmers out of the wheat business.

The live-stock industry in Oklahoma should be greatly enlarged. The two magnificent packing plants recently built at Oklahoma at a cost of $6,000,000 have been asking our farmers for more cattle and hogs and sheep; but with free meats and free animals these packing plants will look to the great free ranges of Mexico and South America for animals to slaughter. The Oklahoma farmers, with high-priced lands and high-priced farm labor, can not produce animals as cheaply as they can be produced in Mexico and South America. Under such conditions our farmers will have no encouragement to enlarge the production of live stock.

A leading Democratic paper—the Daily Ardmoreite, published at Ardmore, Okla.—in an editorial recently declared that "$1,000,000 are going to waste in Carter County every year" because there were no sheep in the county to feed off of the waste land. We have millions of acres of rough waste land in the State upon which great flocks of sheep and goats might be grazing, and thereby add many millions of dollars to the annual wealth produced in the State.

But with wool and mutton on the free list Oklahoma farmers will not have any inducement to go into the sheep business. They understand that nearly a million farmers in the United States are now preparing to reduce their flocks to make way for the wool and mutton to come from Australia.

Sugar beets may be produced in some of the counties in north-west Oklahoma. I have hoped some day to see sugar-beet factories erected in that section, to add value to the land, give profits to our farmers, and to add millions of dollars to the annual wealth produced in northwestern Oklahoma. My hopes vanish with the prospect of free sugar.

Broom corn has been an important crop in many of the western counties of the State. But free broom corn, as provided in the tariff bill that has passed this House, and will no doubt pass the Senate, will not encourage the farmers of western Oklahoma to extend the production of broom corn. Certainly these pioneer farmers have had enough difficulties to contend with. Certainly they endured their share of hardships, and they and their families have made sufficient sacrifices, but this new tariff policy places upon them an additional burden of competing in the production of broom corn with the farmers of 15 foreign countries that imported broom corn into the United States in 1911.

The conclusion is therefore irresistible that free trade in farm products, which in principle will be adopted as a part of the new tariff policy, will not encourage the expansion of agriculture in Oklahoma, increase the annual wealth produced by our farmers, or in any way contribute to the welfare or prosperity of our farmers and their families.

On the contrary, it will repress agricultural extension in Oklahoma, reduce the prices of our farm products, curtail their profits, lessen the annual wealth produced on our farms, discourage our farmers, and give them less money to improve their farms and add to farm life the comforts, conveniences, and advantages which are necessary to make farm life attractive.

DEVELOPMENT OF MANUFACTURING.

I now turn from agriculture to manufacturing. What will be the effect of the new tariff policy upon the development of our manufacturing interests?

Oklahoma possesses all the natural advantages to enable it to become a great manufacturing State. She has 10,000 square miles of coal land, which are said to cover 79,000,000,000 tons of coal. She has 24,000 producing oil wells, adding every week more than a million of dollars to the wealth of the State. She has a natural-gas supply not equaled in any other State in the Union. In some localities immense water power may be developed. At the very minimum of cost power may be developed to turn countless wheels of thousands of mills, factories, and manufacturing establishments.

Hidden beneath the surface of the soil are vast deposits of lead, zinc, asphaltum, glass sand, cement rock, gypsum, granite, limestone, clays, shales, and other mineral awaiting the coming of men with means and men with intelligence, energy, and industry to transform this great storehouse of mineral wealth into bright, shining, golden dollars, to go out into circulation to bless and help the people of Oklahoma and to contribute to the strength and greatness and glory of this mighty Republic.

With these natural advantages in wealth-producing power manufacturing should be in equilibrium with agriculture. But manufacturing lags far behind. We have 200,000 farmers with only 18,034 persons employed in manufacturing. We have 1,100,000 people supported by agriculture with less than 100,000 supported by manufacturing. In 1910 our farmers produced over $200,000,000 in wealth, while our manufacturing establishments added to the wealth of the State but $19,529,000.

In 1910 North Carolina's 281 cotton mills added to the wealth of the State $23,992,000. We produce as much cotton as North Carolina and have cheaper fuel. In 1910 Massachusetts's 182 cotton mills added to the wealth of the State $81,305,000. Massachusetts sends thousands of miles for her cotton and transports her fuel from Pennsylvania and Canada. Oklahoma has one small cotton mill. The State will lose $40,000,000 annually until she has the mills to manufacture raw material. To defer for five years the building of these mills will be a loss to the State of $200,000,000. The new tariff will defer the building of our cotton mills. Low rates of duty will encourage importations from abroad, and the markets of the United States will be flooded with cotton goods manufactured in Europe. Our people will become patrons, customers, and supporters of foreign cotton mills.

Our lead, zinc, asphaltum, glass sand, cement rock, gypsum, granite, limestone, clays, shales, and other minerals—all found in abundance in the State—offer vast possibilities for the development, expansion, and enlargement of mining and manufacturing in Oklahoma.

But the new tariff bill makes sweeping reduction in the duty upon glass and cement and upon zinc, asphaltum, gypsum, and all the products of these minerals. Importations of these minerals from abroad will make less demand for the products of Oklahoma mines, reduce the price thereof, lessen the annual wealth obtained therefrom, and materially retard the development of our mineral resources. As a consequence our mineral wealth will lie dormant, while an ever-increasing stream of wealth goes abroad to develop the mineral resources of other countries.

Nowhere in the United States is there a more attractive field for the development of manufacturing industries than in Oklahoma. Natural advantages are great, local conditions are favorable, and the people, through their commercial clubs and other organizations, are ready to offer every reasonable encouragement and inducement to secure any substantial manufacturing establishment.

With all this in our favor, the National Government is about to enter upon a tariff policy that will deter men from investing capital in mills and factories in Oklahoma. Our natural advantages will count for nothing, and the efforts of our people will be in vain, while ships are daily landing in our harbors to unload great cargoes of foreign-made goods that will be distributed throughout the entire country, displayed in every shop window, and sold over every counter.

Capital will seek other lines of investment. Oklahoma's industrial progress will be delayed. Our natural resources will remain undeveloped. Our natural gas will continue to be wasted, our coal will be unmined, our gypsum, cement rock, limestone, glass sand, granite, asphalt, zinc, and lead will be unused. Our material development will be dwarfed, stunted, restricted, and circumscribed. In the long years of waiting that must follow our farms and city real estate will not advance in value, our business will not expand, our commerce will not enlarge, our villages, towns, and cities will not grow, and the people of the State will suffer incalculable loss through the unwise tariff policy pursued by the party in power.

The new tariff policy will not add an acre to the cultivated area of Oklahoma; it will not cause the erection of a single new mill, factory, or manufacturing establishment within the State; it will not build a single new railway, open a new mine or quarry, or establish a single important industry; it will not furnish a new market for or add to the price of a single product produced within the State; it will not give employment to a single additional man or in any way contribute to the material development of the State; it will not add to the wealth of the State, contribute to the happiness of the people, or aid them in the upbuilding of their institutions.

CONCLUSION.

On the 22d day of next April Oklahoma will celebrate its twenty-fifth birthday. In these 25 years of history we have founded and built a great Commonwealth. Under a protective policy our material growth has been without a parallel in American history. Our mines, forests, factories, and farms are producing annually approximately $300,000,000 in wealth. We have added to our possessions until the property of the State is worth more than a thousand millions of dollars. There is almost unlimited opportunity for development in the future. The prospect for future growth is exceedingly favorable. The outlook for the State is exceedingly encouraging and propitious. From a national viewpoint there is but one ominous cloud visible above the industrial horizon of Oklahoma, which threatens to arrest progress of the State and blight the hopes and anticipations of the people, and that is the change which the present administration proposes to make in the tariff policy of the National Government.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, no satisfactory or adequate discussion can be made of a measure of the magnitude of the bill under consideration in the brief time allotted me.

This great revenue bill comprises over 4,000 items, and upon many of them there must of necessity be differing views and conflicting opinions. I hope I am not immodest in observing that if my views could prevail I would amend or repeal some of these items, but I would not do so if thereby the passage of this bill were endangered. Taxation or rate of duty upon this or that item requires individual opinion to be subordinated to the opinions of the majority if any legislation is to be accomplished. Therefore, believing as I do that the bill upon the whole is meritorious, I shall cast my vote for its enactment.

Mr. Speaker, this measure is an epoch in the legislative and economic history of the Nation. It is, or rather it will soon be, a tremendous achievement, and this House must have satisfaction in realizing that the bill is now in form and substance the same bill voted upon some months ago in this House. Its fundamental plan is not distorted, its original purposes are not impaired or perverted. Then, too, this bill is a Democratic measure. In its deliberations no "deadly blight" of treason has "come o'er the councils of the brave" to "blast them in their hour of might." No party perfidy or party dishonor comes now to embarrass the faithful. No disappointed and betrayed President now withholds his signature of approval, but his eagerness to affix his sign manual to this redemption of Democratic promises will only be equalled by the satisfied spirit of those who fought the good fight with his great Democratic predecessor. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I believe this bill is not only reasonable, sound, conservative, and intelligent, but that it has been made, has been wrought out, by clean, moral processes. No sinister lobby, no unholy agent of special privilege, has had the least part or share in its making. How different are times and doings now from the times and doings of former days. Prof. Taussig, in speaking of the malign influences trailing over the Payne-Aldrich bill, says:

The whole situation was one too familiar in our tariff history: the details of legislation had been virtually arranged by persons having a direct pecuniary interest in the outcome and having also the closest relations with the legislators controlling the outcome.

As a concrete proof of this humiliating history permit me to remind the House that Mr. North, the secretary of the Wool Manufacturers' Association, was the confidential clerk of the Senate Finance Committee during the making and framing of that legislation, legislation we are now about to wipe from the statute book of the Nation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] So, Mr. Speaker, when we are so free from betrayals within, so free from the blandishments of greed, so exempt from malevolent environment, when we have so plainly heeded the call of the greatest good to the greatest number, we may well declare this to be a clean, moral measure, and we may well avouch it as the supreme evidence of the fidelity of our party to the interest of the people and of the power and efficiency of representative institutions.

The minority in this House have been copious and frequent in the debates upon this bill; but I would observe—and I would invite the attention of the Members—that these discussions have perhaps related more to the initial methods of legislative procedure whereby this bill was considered by the majority or to the absence of certain legislative adjuncts, such as the caucus and the Tariff Board, than to the merits of the legislation itself.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] seems to be unable to lift himself out of the orbit of caucus and caucus rule. I make no criticism of him upon this score. He has been fairly consistent. There have been others of the minority, however, equally drastic in their denunciations but utterly inconsistent in their practice. A distinguished Representative from my State, in years long gone by, John Randolph, of Roanoke, once caustically observed that he would give little heed to a lecture from Solomon upon the subject of incontinency, unless this wise man had first dissolved his polygamous relations [laughter], the moral being that in order for advice to be effective the lecturer himself must be free of the vice which he condemns. The minority long employed the caucus, and they only decry it now when out of power and no longer find it a serviceable extra legislative device. In the days of their majority the caucus was altogether righteous; in the days of our majority the caucus is altogether vile. Such sudden shifting of position, such palpable opportunism, demonstrates the insincerity of the lecturers.

But I would not now discuss the caucus method. It has its merits and its demerits, and in course of time appropriate modifications will doubtless be made. I thought the caucus wise in this particular measure. I did not so think as respects the currency question, and I voted against its binding authority on that subject. But we must recognize that the people more and more desire to see and know the processes of their Government. Perhaps we may have at no distant day a conference in place of a caucus, and perhaps we may go further and lift into public view the detail action of many of the committees of Congress, especially those committees dealing with the imposition of taxes and the appropriation of revenues, for thereby will the whole record of the legislator be disclosed. In governments of popular form the people increasingly demand publicity in the public business.

Again, Mr. Speaker, not only has the procedure known as caucus action fallen under the condemnation of the minority in this House, but severe denunciations have been made of the majority for failure to establish what is known as a tariff board, whose action and report must precede congressional action. Indeed, the dignity and importance of this board as an instrument to secure and submit for our consideration full and accurate information has loomed large in this debate. I am amazed that those now so vehemently clamoring for this board should not have done more four years ago to establish a real tariff board. In the responsible days of four years ago this virtuous instrumentality found its life and authority in some five lines in the Senate amendment to the Payne-Aldrich bill. In these few vague and flimsy words are enshrined the convictions of the minority when in majority upon what is now declared by them to be a subject of transcendent moment. The country knew then, as the country knows now, that the Tariff Board permitted by these five lines of vague authorization was intended not to facilitate but to delay tariff revision. And has not the lobby investigation shown beyond a doubt that the efficient creators of this Tariff Board intended it as a device to delay? Intended it as an instrument to conceal and not to reveal adequate and appropriate facts? Has not the Mulhall investigation at least established an affirmative reply to these questions?

Has the action of this much-heralded board rendered any special service to the country or to the Congress? Has this board been an austere seeker after truthful information as to the difference between the cost of production here and abroad—information, perhaps, which no set of men can ever ascertain and which this particular board was never expected to ascertain? Has the report of this board obtained and arranged its data with such precision and classification that the public or a Representative in the Congress could thereby be really helped in the consideration of tariff measures?

Take the woolen schedule for example. Will not the information or data submitted by this board upon this subject support with equal facility a high tariff, a low tariff, or no tariff at all? Does not the chairman of this board admit that it is not so much a matter of data, of evidence, as it is of judgment? And why not, when we recall that one of the most prominent members on this board has since been the secretary of the national executive committee of the Republican Party? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Could the robust partisanship of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] hope to have his thirst for scientific information upon the tariff quenched by the findings of such a board?

Again, Mr. Speaker, does the opposition evade the merits of this bill. They confuse the issue. The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] argues that this bill is inherently bad because it is largely due to the extraordinary and unconstitutional pressure of the President. What is this unconstitutional compulsion? Is it other than the public appearance of the President in the Speaker's rostrum and his open and public address, specifically authorized by the Constitution, delivered to the Congress assembled in joint session? [Applause on the Democratic side.] I must observe that public pressure works no injury to American institutions; it is secret and silent pressure which occasions anxiety and alarm. The exercise by the President of this plain constitutional prerogative has loosened upon him a flood of abuse. His action is called federalistic and kingly, gentlemen forgetting that this somewhat similar performance of the crown is almost the one democratic action of royalty. But there must be some coordination between the legislative and executive branches of our Government, and I submit that it is better to have this coordination in the open than in secret; better to have the Executive voice resounding through this Chamber than in charmed whispers around the banquet table.

But, Mr. Speaker, this malediction of the President for this feigned usurpation of Executive authority and consequent Executive duress has just been contradicted by the argument of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who has vehemently declared that the sole author and finisher of this bill is the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I leave to the House the conflicting statements of these eminent Republicans, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] without further comment.

This bill is also defective, according to the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], because it will not produce sufficient revenue. He asserts that the calculations of the committees of the House and Senate are only guesses. With the greatest respect for the gentleman, may I suggest that in view of the disposition made last fall of his guess, the Payne-Aldrich Act, the country will not now accept him as authority upon guessing. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But, seriously, gentlemen of the House, I would ask who can dogmatize about revenue, about income and outgo? Experience and reasonable approximations determine the one, and economy in expenditure the other, and I imagine the same Treasury experts made the guess for the Payne bill who now make it for the Underwood bill.

Another criticism made with wearisome refrain by the minority is that this bill is inconsistent and illogical. Mr. Speaker, is a revision of the tariff downward illogical? Are higher duties upon luxuries and lower duties upon the necessities of life illogical? Is a tax fixed upon the value of an article rather than upon the weight or measurement of an article illogical? Is a tax upon income—surplus wealth—rather than upon consumption illogical? Is a tax that diminishes the power of monopoly and widens the opportunity of competition illogical? We disdain your statutory symmetry at the expense of the people's oppression.

You can not temper our sufferings by your statutory syllogisms; you can not clothe our bodies by the necromancy of compensating duties or supply our wants by your system of differential rates. We would remove restrictions that limit economic opportunities; we would lift the burdens that weaken and cripple commercial initiative, commercial enterprise, and industrial ambition. Your Payne-Aldrich Act is statutory legerdemain, confusion confounded, wherein the expert of special privilege may farm out the powers of taxation for the benefit of the fat-frying masters. We maintain that to tax is to take; you maintain that to take is to bestow. Your logic is the cruel sophistry that the wealth of the few will by their grace finally trickle down into the pockets of the many; that prosperity is something donated by the few to the people rather than something created by the people. This, Mr. Speaker, is no new doctrine; it is the old, old logic of organized greed battling against individual freedom. So, gentlemen, while you play with words we will respond to the people's necessities.

But if you mean by symmetry and logic the arrangement and meaning of the text and language of the bill itself, we invite comparison of the Payne-Aldrich Act with the pending bill. We challenge parallel columns of the woolen schedules; we grope in darkness to discover the occult meaning of the Payne-Aldrich Act, and we walk in light in understanding the meaning of the corresponding clauses in the Underwood bill. What did the author of the Payne bill himself say when speaking of the amendments ingrafted by the Aldrich committee? I quote his language:

Some of these amendments I have studied diligently, and I am not able to say to-day whether they raise or lower the rates, and have not been able to determine yet with the aid of gentlemen who are experts on this subject.

Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to understand the logic of the minority. Their contention is based upon the old fallacy of post hoc, ergo propter hoc; that is, that something has existed and that some other thing subsequently exists, and therefore the subsequent thing is caused by the former thing. Upon this shadow rests the argument of the minority for the prosperity of the country.

To state it concretely, the contention is that a high tariff tax exists upon the statute book; that prosperity subsequently occurs; and, therefore, that the high tariff tax causes the prosperity. Of course, this conclusion disregards the same reasoning when applied to the unparalleled prosperity which followed the Walker tariff, almost the lowest of tariffs. But what are these insuperable inconsistencies, these insurmountable obstacles, to the valor of fanaticism and greed? I submit to the candor of the House that this argument has not even stood the test of experience, for we have had very high tariffs since the War between the States, and we have had at least three panics within that time. The so-called Wilson tariff was not the Wilson bill but the Senate substitute for that bill, which was a very high tariff. Then, too, that tariff did not precede the panic, but the panic did precede that tariff by nearly two years.

Mr. Speaker, this sort of argument disregards the vital causes of all our prosperity. The tariff has not created our soil, our forest, our mines, our rivers and water power, our climate, our manhood, and our political institutions. Nor has the tariff created our liberty, leagued with law and nourished by a system of written constitutions. No, Mr. Speaker, this is literally a new world, and the old man is here made a new man. Here natural and political advantages nowhere else so abound, and these transcendent advantages are energized by freedom of speech, freedom of press, freedom of religion, freedom of education, freedom of politics, and freedom of opportunity for man to work out his destiny and to be entitled to the proceeds of his talent and his toil. These are the forces, these are the influences, that have made American people a people peculiar unto themselves, and when you argue that taxation, which is a burden upon these energies and influences, is the cause of their strength and power you merely babble against the road of a mighty sea. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

[Mr. BARTLETT addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the gentleman from New York to consume some time.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I am sure we have all enjoyed the scholarly address of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE]. We are under obligations to him for his wealth of classical allusion, but he said one thing which I am not sure I understand. I understood him to say that the argument against this bill is based upon the old fallacy which he calls "post hoc ergo propter hoc." I so understood him. Well, I can not say whether it was "post hoc" or "propter hoc," but I have the idea that before you gentlemen and the country get through with this bill that the masses of the people of this country will have their property "in hock." [Applause on the Republican side.] If the gentleman's prophecy is as unfortunate as his lack of familiarity with the report of the Tariff Board, we can not depend upon it very much, because, of course, everybody knows that the report of the Tariff Board did not authorize what is provided in one section of this bill, namely, free wool; and, even if it were so authorized, it certainly would not be authorized by the declarations of the Democratic platform that were read a few minutes ago by my friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]; nor was it authorized by the statement of the President of the United States at Pittsburgh during the last campaign, when he said:

The Democratic Party does not propose free trade or anything approaching free trade. We favor the ultimate attainment of the principles we advocate by legislation that will not injure or destroy legitimate industry.

That is the Democratic proposition, and yet in the face of this statement a bill is brought in here that discriminates between two classes of the farmers of this country and destroys the industry and property of thousands. It has been said here with great eloquence to-day that the central figure on this important occasion is the able and distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and far be it from me to detract from any expression of commendation concerning his statesmanlike abilities, but I want to say it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the central figure is not the gentleman from Alabama, but it is rather the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], a distinguished member of the Ways and Means Committee, who accomplished something in this bill that was never exemplified before in any tariff law in the history of the country, namely, the separation of Angora goat hair and sheep's wool in a tariff schedule. [Applause on the Republican side.] I think the gentleman from Texas occupies the center of the stage.

By his activity in behalf of the great American Angora goat he certainly disproved the assertions of a goat raiser from Texas, a Mr. Robertson, who, at page 4052 of the hearings on this bill, in speaking of the representatives from the State of Texas, said:

They did not know that we were in existence. Some of them perhaps had never seen an Angora goat. They are among the farming class and cotton-raising class. Now, if I should cut off a lock of this Angora hair, some of them would think it was cotton. If I should put it in a boll, they would say, "This is beautiful cotton; it must be Egyptian cotton."

This uncomplimentary opinion is entirely unjustified in view of the activity of the eloquent and able member of the Ways and Means Committee from the State of Texas.

As I stated before, there never was a tariff bill in the history of the Republic until this one where the wool of the sheep and the hair of the Angora goat were separated in the tariff schedules. They were always placed under the same heading and always bore the same rate of duty. But when it became apparent that, carrying out the free-trade ideas of the administration, the Democratic majority would place wool on the free list it became desirable to have some arrangement to prevent that dire calamity of free trade from falling upon the Angora goat industry of Texas. Consequently, as can be seen on pages 96 and 100 of the conference print of H. R. 3321, the schedules are separated in the bill as it originally passed the House. As the bill passed the House wool was placed on the free list. Wool tops bore a rate of 15 per cent ad valorem; wool yarns bore 20 per cent ad valorem; cloth and wool fabrics, felts not woven, and so forth, were dutiable at 35 per cent ad valorem. Turning to the sections relative to the duties upon Angora goat hair and the products thereof, we find the following rates: "The hair of the Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals, and all hair on the skin of such animals, 20 per cent ad valorem." Tops made from the hair of the Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals bore a rate of 25 per cent ad valorem, as distinguished from 15 per cent levied on wool tops. Yarns made of the hair of the Angora goat were dutiable at 30 per cent ad valorem, whereas, as stated before, yarns made wholly or in chief value of wool were dutiable at only 20 per cent ad valorem. Cloth and all manufactures of every description made of the hair of the Angora goat were to be dutiable at 40 per cent, while woolen cloth was to be protected by a 35 per cent duty. These were the provisions of the bill as it passed the House.

Now, when the measure came to the other end of the Capitol, it is evident that that distinguished body was of the opinion that the wool industry and the goat industry should be treated in the same manner. Consequently it was provided by the amendment adopted in that body, as is shown on page 182 of the conference print of H. R. 3321, that wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals, not especially provided for in that section, should be on the free list. Wool tops, and likewise tops made from the hair of the Angora goat, were to be dutiable at 5 per cent ad valorem. Woolen yarns and yarns made from the hair of the Angora goat were to bear a rate of duty of 15 per cent ad valorem. Cloth, knit fabrics, and so forth, made from wool were dutiable at 35 per cent, and the same rate was borne if the cloth was made out of the hair of the Angora goat. In other words, it was the purpose of the distinguished body at the other end of the Capitol to treat sheep and Angora goats in exactly the same manner. However, when the bill came into conference, behold the change. As finally agreed upon in conference the rates were as follows: Wool, the product of the farms of Ohio, West Virginia, Wyoming, and the great Northwest, is placed on the free list, contrary to the promises of the Democratic platform and the explicit statement of the President in his speech at Pittsburgh. But while wool is thus placed on the free list, the hair of the Angora goat is unsinged by the flames of free trade, so that whereas wool comes into this country free of duty the hair of the Angora goat is protected at a rate of 15 per cent. This certainly is discrimination between the farmers of Ohio and the farmers of Texas. Wool tops, according to the conference report, are dutiable at 8 per cent, while tops made from the hair of the Angora goat bear a rate of 20 per cent ad valorem. Woolen yarns, according to the conference report, bear a rate of 18 per cent ad valorem, whereas yarns made from the hair of the Angora goat bear a rate of duty of 25 per cent ad valorem. Woolen cloths, knit fabrics, and so forth, are dutiable at 35 per cent ad valorem, whereas cloths and all manufactures of every description made by any process wholly or in chief value of the hair of the Angora goat are dutiable at 40 per cent. So that the goat is protected, while the sheep must look out for itself.

The point of the whole matter is that sheep are raised in the great Northwest, whereas the goat industry is centered almost exclusively in the Lone Star State. Consequently for the benefit of the southern farmers the high rates of duty were placed upon Angora goat hair and its products, whereas the wool produced by the sheep raisers of Ohio was put on the free list; but yet the farmer who wants to buy a suit of woolen clothes is compelled to buy in a protected market. Right here it should be said that when the interests of the farmers are injured the interests of the whole country suffer, for the farmers are the industrial foundation of the Republic.

It has been suggested in this debate that possibly manufacturers may be able to get on under this bill. In fact, some have gone so far as to prophesy that there will be an era of increased prosperity. I do not believe this prophecy, although I should be glad to believe it, because I am first an American and secondly a member of the political party to which I belong. We all want to see the country prosper. However, it is only fair to say that the plan of our friends the enemy is so to frame this bill as to make it fairly satisfactory to the manufacturers of the great northeastern section of the country. Then with the solid South it is hoped to control the political destinies of the country in the future. In other words, the great agricultural section of the Northwest is made "the goat."

Substantially everything that the section of the country from which I come produces is placed on the free list. Cattle, sheep, swine, and substantially everything in the form of live stock is put on the free list. So are wheat, potatoes, and wool. On many products the rates of duty are greatly reduced and ruinously so, as in the case of onions and many other vegetables. Practically everything that an Ohio farmer can sell off his farm, either by way of produce or live stock or hay or dairy products or fruit or anything else that he is in the habit of taking to market, will be sold in a market practically unprotected by the terms of this bill or be placed on the free list and subjected to the fiercest competition from cheaper foreign products. It is not at all surprising that some of the gentlemen on that side are seeking already to excuse their action to their constituents where that constituency is largely an agricultural one. Any observer of the course of this tariff legislation can but see clearly that the attempt is made to shift the burden to the farmers of the Northwest with the idea that the party now in control will be able to retain control of the solid South and secure control of a portion of the Northeast through the favors granted to manufacturers. The interests of the farmers and laborers of the great Northwest are ignored.

We hear a great deal about persons being allowed to buy in a free market and at the same time being required to sell in a free market. This is all very nice, but the difficulty about the matter is that this bill is not so drawn as to make those terms applicable to the farmer. Under its terms he will be compelled to sell every dollar's worth that he has in a free-trade market. But if he buys a suit of clothes he is met with a protective duty. And so on down the line with the various things he has to buy. This bill is an attempt to bunko the farmer and laborer, and, in my opinion, it will not be long before the great agricultural and producing classes will understand the purpose and effect of this legislation and will speak concerning it in no uncertain terms.

It was said here to-day that this legislation marks the beginning of a new era, or at any rate a different era. We have heard exploited here the theories of Cobden, Wayland, Walker, Adam Smith, and others of the school of free trade. We have been told that there ought not to be any restrictions whatever upon commerce, and that individuals should be as free to trade among nations as they are among different parts of the same country. It is very strange that these very theories, which have been shot to death by the logic of events and have been abandoned by substantially every other civilized country of the world, should at this late hour be embraced by those who are in control of the Government at the present time. In spite of the protestations to the contrary in the Democratic platform adopted at Baltimore and the speeches of President Wilson when he was a candidate, that the party did not contemplate free trade and did not propose to injure the industries of the country, it is now apparent that the public is face to face with an era of free trade. This bill is an illustration of the theories so advanced.

As I said of it in substance on a former occasion when this bill was under consideration, the pending bill rests on no scientific basis; it is not framed according to any well-defined logical principle; it discriminates against the American farmer and the American laborer; it puts a penalty on the building of industries in our own country and a premium on the building of industries in foreign countries; it furnishes additional employment for no American laborer; it makes a market for no American product; it will lower the prices which the producer receives; it will not permanently benefit the ultimate consumer. Importers and foreign trade journals are gleeful over the prospects of the passage of this bill; our own people are downcast and discouraged under the threat of impending free trade. Of course, Mr. Speaker, there are some features of this bill with which I agree.

I congratulate the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that he finally saw the light and adopted the substance of the amendment that I introduced when the bill was pending in the House, and for which I spoke, an amendment reducing the duty on Zante currants, an article of general consumption in every home. I am proud to note that my suggestion in that particular was followed to some extent. And then, speaking very seriously, I am in favor of a graduated income tax. I am more in favor of the income tax as provided in the bill as it came from the Senate than I was in favor of the income-tax provisions of the House bill. But there are so many things in this bill that are detrimental, disastrous, illogical, and unfair that I hope it will be voted down. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND].

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Mr. Speaker, I feel constrained on behalf of California to voice a final, although I realize a futile, protest against this bill, now about to become a law, the provisions of which so detrimentally affect every section of that State.

HOUSE BILL GROSSLY UNFAIR TO CALIFORNIA.

The bill that left this House on May 8 was so manifestly and grossly unfair to California, jeopardizing industries that our people had in many instances struggled a lifetime to establish and in which they had ventured all they possessed, that a fervent hope was cherished that the body at the other end of the Capitol might heed the plea of the Golden State for justice and fair treatment.

SENATE ADDS OBJECTIONABLE AMENDMENTS.

But those hopes proved to be illusions, which were quickly dispelled when the bill returned to the House. Ingeniously worded amendments had been inserted, aimed at California interests, which had, possibly through inadvertence, previously escaped the watchful eyes of the Democratic members of the House Ways and Means Committee, and these amendments rendered the measure far more objectionable than it was originally. [Applause on the Republican side.]

CALIFORNIANS FLOCK TO WASHINGTON TO REGISTER PROTESTS.

It has been a matter of general comment that since the convening of the present extra session of Congress scarcely a week has passed that the presence in Washington has not been noted of delegations from every section of California, forced to undergo the inconveniences of that long journey to register a personal and emphatic protest against the continued attacks upon the leading industries of that State and to appeal for fair treatment. Citrus-fruit growers, beet-sugar producers, representatives of the wool, olive, and olive-oil industries, wine makers, and grape growers, as well as the champions of many other California interests, were so keenly interested and thoroughly aroused as to feel impelled to travel 3,000 miles to protest against the glaring inequities contained in the then pending bill. Those who, behind the closed doors of the party caucus, put their stamp of approval upon the provisions of the Underwood bill so damaging to California no doubt placed these representative citizens in the category of "insidious lobbyists" because they had the temerity to speak for the industries in which they were so vitally interested.

DEMOCRATS AMONG THE PILGRIMS.

There have been many Democrats among the California pilgrims who left their orchards, farms, orange and lemon groves, vineyards, factories, and offices, who returned wiser than before they started and with contrite hearts, resolved to give vent to their pent-up feelings at the first opportunity by registering an emphatic protest when alone with their Maker and conscience in a California voting booth. [Applause on Republican side.]

ANALYSIS OF BILL FROM CALIFORNIA STANDPOINT.

The limited time at my disposal precludes me from giving more than a brief analysis of the bill from the California standpoint. Probably the citrus-fruit industry, in which the people of my State have invested over \$200,000,000, shipping 36,288 carloads of oranges and lemons out of the State during the season of 1911 and 1912, is dealt the most severe blow. On lemons the present rate of duty is $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound.

Under the new law the rate will be below half a cent per pound in packages of a capacity of less than 5 cubic feet and one-half cent per pound for larger packages or in bulk. A cubic foot of lemons weighs, on the average, $36\frac{1}{2}$ pounds, and the rate of 35 cents is approximately 10 cents below the one-half-cent rate on a $2\frac{1}{2}$ cubic foot package and 20 cents on a 5 cubic foot package, on which the rate is 70 cents.

HEAVY CUT IN LEMON DUTY SERIOUS.

This cut from $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents to one-half cent in bulk and lower in packages will prove most serious to the lemon industry. Reliable statistics show that there is a difference of fully \$1.50 in favor of the Italian grower in landing a box of lemons in New York. This includes growing, curing, packing, and freight charges. The difference in cost is largely due to the small wage in Italy and the low standard of living of the Italian peasant class. As an example, the cost of ordinary labor in California varies from \$1.75 to \$3 per day, while in Italy it ranges from 20 to 60 cents per day. In many of the Italian districts where lemons are raised one-third of the laborers employed are women and children, receiving from 20 to 25 cents per day.

TARIFF ACT OF 1909 GREAT STIMULUS TO INDUSTRY.

The tariff act of 1909 placing a duty upon lemons of $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound gave the industry a great stimulus, increasing the acreage $43\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, 9,478 additional acres being planted to trees. Over 31,478 acres are planted to lemons in California to-day. Probably 8,000 acres are not as yet in bearing.

In some quarters it is urged that the duty on lemons should be reduced in order to increase the revenues, on the theory that the importations would be greater. The actual facts are that the average annual revenue under the increased duty is approximately 37 per cent greater than the average annual revenue collected during the three years preceding the passage of the Payne bill. During the year 1912 there were imported 145,622,842 pounds of foreign lemons.

FOREIGN IMPORTERS WIN AS AGAINST CALIFORNIA.

The foreign importers have waged the successful campaign that will result in great injury to this leading California industry. The National Italian Democratic League, composed largely of New York Italian lemon importers, did not assist the present Democratic administration in vain. The fund raised by these same importers, the result of an assessment upon every box of imported lemons, was judiciously spent in a campaign of education. The members of this league, composed of foreign importers, can now afford to arrange another banquet at the Waldorf-Astoria, over which Mr. Giovanni Dominici, the lemon importer, can again preside; but instead of entertaining the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and the chairman of the national Democratic congressional committee, as they did at that famous dinner given after the House had once before voted to slash the duty on lemons, they should upon this suggested occasion have as their guests the entire Democratic membership of the House and Senate, although possibly the Democratic Congressmen from California might send their regrets.

IMPORTERS AND NOT CONSUMERS TO BE BENEFITED.

These foreign importers made their plea on behalf of the consumer, in whose name many iniquities have been perpetrated in this bill. To show just how much concern they have for the consumer let me cite a very recent and significant incident. It is generally known that last winter, owing to a killing frost in California, the lemon crop in our State was almost entirely destroyed. This gave the market largely to these "friends of the consumer," the foreign importers, who increased the price of lemons to $4.36 per box, an advance of $1.65 on each box. This is but a forerunner of what will follow. And if further evidence is necessary to completely disillusion any individual who may have been misled by the loudly proclaimed solicitude of the importer for the consumer, attention is directed to the situation in eastern Canada, where the market is supplied exclusively with Italian lemons, duty free, the consumer there paying the same price and in numerous instances more than charged for the fruit in the United States.

ORANGE INDUSTRY.

The Underwood Tariff Act cuts the duty on oranges from 1 cent per pound to one-half cent and lower in packages as in the case of lemons, which is over a 50 per cent reduction. Ten thousand farmers, with $150,000,000 invested, are engaged in orange growing in California, and 125,000 people depend upon this industry, directly and indirectly, for a living. The rate of 1 cent per pound was reasonable and under it the industry was thriving. While the superior quality of the fancy California navel commands a good market and will probably continue to compete with the foreign orange, the competition will come with the lower grade navels, seedlings, and other varieties constituting the bulk of the California orange crop. The difference in labor costs, as in the case of lemons, will count against the California orange.

COST OF PRODUCTION IN SPAIN AND CALIFORNIA.

In the Daily Consular and Trade Reports for January 23, 1912, and November 23, 1911, there was an official statement made by the Hon. Robert Frazer, American consul at Valencia, relative to the cost of producing oranges in Spain. According to these figures the difference per hundredweight between the costs in Europe and America, when compared with the carefully prepared statements of California and other American orange growers, was about $1.25 in favor of the foreign fruit. This did not include the cost of transportation, which gives the fruit from Spain an additional advantage of 50 cents per box.

FOREIGNERS AND IMPORTERS URGED REDUCTION OF DUTY ON CITRIOUS FRUITS.

The reduction of the duty on lemons and oranges was asked for by whom? Importers of foreign fruit and representatives of foreign governments. A reference to the hearings discloses that among those requesting these reductions were Mr. Lorenzo George Brice, representing the Bahama Islands, the Italian Chamber of Commerce of New York, the New York Fruit Exchange, the Fruit Buyers' Union of New York, the New Orleans Fruit Importing Co., and I must not neglect to mention the National Italian Democratic League.

The representative from the Bahama Islands—and I am reliably informed that this was the first instance in many years that representatives of foreign countries were permitted to appear before the Ways and Means Committee of the American Congress—stated that 15 years ago—which was evidently during Democratic rule—the Bahama Islands were practically the home of the citrus-fruit industry, particularly in regard to oranges and grapefruit, "but that under the present tariff rates," to quote the exact words of Mr. Brice, "we can not export oranges, of which we raise the finest in the world." As in many other instances, the voice of the foreigner was given weight as against that of the Californian, and the orange duty was cut in half.

CALIFORNIA GREATEST BEET-SUGAR PRODUCING STATE.

The reduction of the duty on sugar, with the provision for free sugar after the 1st of May, 1916—which legislation the Sugar Refining Trust was so persistent in advocating, as shown in the hearings, hoping, no doubt, to cripple their chief competition, the beet-sugar interests—strikes California particularly hard, because it is recognized as the principal beet-sugar producing State in the Union. In my congressional district the first beet-sugar factory was established in 1879 in the town of Alvarado, Alameda County. We now have 13 factories in the State, for there is a larger acreage adapted to the growing of sugar beets in California than found in any other State, the coast valleys particularly being adapted as to climate and soil conditions for the sugar beet. There are now 13 factories in the State. Twenty-five thousand men are employed. Twenty million dollars is invested in factories, land, and equipment. Last year over $14,000,000 was spent in the State due to this industry, and of this amount the farmers were paid $6,701,582 for beets and $3,900,000 was for labor. The crippling of this industry is no small matter to California.

FREE WOOL DETRIMENTAL TO CALIFORNIA.

When the Democratic Party once before placed wool on the free list no State suffered more than California, and many prosperous wool growers found ruin staring them in the face.

But some of the bravest took heart after the duty was restored and again ventured. Last year we produced in California 11,900,000 pounds of wool. It is estimated by the secretary of the California Woolgrowers' Association that $20,000,000 are invested in this industry in that State. Free wool will be a hard blow to those Californians in the mountain sections who have invested their all in this industry.

THE CUT IN RAISINS.

Raisins were cut from 2½ cents to 2 cents, and while even this small reduction would have had a deterrent effect upon the raisin industry, one of the largest branches of fruit growing in the State, the reduction in the duty on Zante currants to 1½ cents per pound—the old rate carried in the free-trade Wilson Tariff Act—is in reality a surreptitious cut in the whole raisin duty from 2½ cents per pound to 1½ cents. The name "Zante currant" is a misnomer. This "currant" is in reality a seedless raisin. It is not the product of a currant bush at all, but of a vine, and is really a grape and in its dried condition a raisin. Last year 33,054,109 pounds of Zante and other currants were imported, showing that under existing rates there was ample competition.

GREEK LEGATION TAKES A HAND AGAINST CALIFORNIA.

The House first left the rate on Zante currants as found in the act of 1909—2 cents a pound; but the Senate noted that another California industry had somehow been overlooked and reduced the duty to 1 cent. In conference it was first restored to the House or prevailing rate of 2 cents, and Californians rejoiced because of this small and unexpected favor from the Democratic powers. But, alas, their joy was short lived. The astounding statement was read in the daily Washington and New York papers of Sunday, September 21, that the Greek Legation had protested through the State Department, and that this foreign voice, as in the case of lemons, had again prevailed as against the people of California. Last year 155,300,000 pounds of raisins were produced in California.

BIG CUT IN DUTY ON OLIVES AND OLIVE OIL.

Mr. Antonio Zucco and Mr. C. A. Mariani, both eastern importers of foreign products, and the Italian Chamber of Commerce of New York urged the Ways and Means Committee, the public records show, to materially lower the duty on California olives and olive oil, and the unselfish devotion to the public weal of these importers was recognized by the Democratic members of the committee, whose apparent eagerness to slash every California item had seemingly developed into a habit, and the rates were cut. On olives in bottles, jars, and kegs containing less than 5 gallons each the reduction was from 25 cents to 15 cents. The reduction on olive oil in bulk was from 40 cents to 20 cents per gallon, and in bottles, jars, tins, or other packages having a capacity of less than 5 standard gallons of oil each from 50 cents to 30 cents per gallon.

IMPORTERS ONLY TO PROFIT BY REDUCTION.

As a result of this reduction of 20 cents per gallon on olive oil it is believed that importers and retailers will place in their pockets additional profits amounting to $800,000 annually (over 4,000,000 gallons being imported), for the reason that 90 per cent of the olive oil consumed in the United States is sold in bottles and small cans which contain 20 ounces of oil each. As the average selling price is 80 cents per can or bottle, the 20 cents per gallon reduction would amount to 3½ cents per bottle, and one must be gullible indeed to believe that the consumer will be the recipient of the few cents benefit. This California industry, in which there is to-day invested $7,500,000, with 18,000 acres of land utilized—an increase of 6,000 acres since 1909—must be sacrificed at the behest of these importers. The cost of harvesting and delivering in Europe is given at $7 per ton as against $20 in California. Our wages are more than double. The freight rate from Europe to New York is 7½ cents per gallon and from California 15 cents. Olive trees seldom bear well two years in succession, and a bumper harvest occurs only every sixth or seventh year. Cheap cottonseed oil is one of the chief competitors of pure olive oil.

MEXICAN IMPORTING CO. SECURE REDUCTION OF BEAN DUTY.

Beans are one of the most important vegetable crops of California. In 1900 the bean crop amounted to but 947,200 bags, which was increased to 2,013,000 bags in 1912. The annual bean crop in California is valued at nearly $7,000,000. Prior to 1909 there was little competition to the California bean on the Pacific coast, but in 1910 the Japanese bean made its appearance and from 1910 to 1911 the Asiatic importations doubled. Other importations are from Chile and Mexico, which discloses the incentive of the Mexican Importing Co., of Chicago, for urging the reduction of duty. Under the act of 1909 the duty on beans was 45 cents per bushel of 60 pounds. In the Underwood bill there is a reduction to 25 cents per bushel and from 2½ cents per pound for the prepared or preserved to 1 cent per pound.

WALNUTS AND ALMONDS REDUCED.

About three-fourths of the nuts produced in the United States are grown in my State. In 1910 we had 2,034,302 nut trees in bearing. The present bill cuts almonds and walnuts, shelled and unshelled, 1 cent per pound, leaving the duty on almonds 3 cents unshelled and 4 cents shelled, and walnuts unshelled 2 cents and shelled 4 cents. The importation of walnuts last year was nearly 33,000,000 pounds, showing that the present tariff is sufficiently competitive, the importations annually increasing. During the past 10 years, and under the existing tariff rate, the domestic production has doubled, the foreign importations are twice as large, the Government's revenue has increased correspondingly, and the price to the consumer has not been increased. In the almond industry in California there has been no change in tariff rates since 1897. Under the impetus of this rate, and with the confidence that it would be maintained, 678,522 new trees have been planted in California, that are not yet bearing.

DUTY ON HONEY CUT IN HALF.

California is one of the leading honey-producing States, the output in 1910 being 10,264,715 pounds as against 3,666,798 pounds in 1900. The duty on honey in this bill has been cut in half—from 20 cents to 10 cents per gallon.

CALIFORNIA LUMBER INDUSTRY.

The lumber industry in California gives employment to nearly 23,000 wage earners, and the annual value of the manufactured output is $45,000,000. While free lumber may not injure the California lumber and shingle industry as much as that of other Pacific Coast States, owing to their proximity to the British Columbia market and due to the further fact that over 45 per cent of the California output is redwood, not grown elsewhere, still the damaging effect of placing lumber on the free list will be reflected upon the California industry, which has not been particularly profitable during recent years, as far as the manufacturer is concerned. The reduction of duty on lumber in the Payne bill resulted in no apparent benefit to the consumer, the Canadian manufacturers raising their prices accordingly.

REDUCTION OF FIG DUTY AIDS WORLD MONOPOLY.

The Smyrna fig, until recent years, has had a monopoly both in the United States and throughout the world. After many years of experiments entailing the expenditure of vast sums of money California growers are at last producing a fig that is a real competitor of the foreign product. Since the addition of the one-half-cent duty, which this bill removes, the acreage in California has almost doubled. The California fig production is 10,000,000 pounds annually.

ATTACKS UPON WINE INDUSTRY TO CONTINUE.

While the Senate amendment seriously affecting the wine industry by imposing a tax of $1.10 per gallon on wine spirits and brandy used in fortifying sweet wines has been eliminated, we are officially informed that the fight has only been postponed. The Democratic junior Senator from Ohio, who occupies a commanding position as a member of the Senate Finance Committee, which is the tariff committee of that body, announces that he will attack the conference report, and if unsuccessful will continue the fight at the next session by introducing a separate bill. It would appear that the effort to destroy this California industry, in which is invested $200,000,000, is to be persisted in. The Senate amendment, coupled with the threat of continued attacks, has already worked almost irreparable injury to the California wine and grape-growing industries. Confidence has been impaired, the result being that new vineyards will not be planted and little money expended in improvements while the present party is in power.

CALIFORNIA'S EXPERIENCE SHOULD BE ILLUMINATING.

Mr. Speaker, I have enumerated the principal California industries that this bill will seriously injure. There are many others that directly and indirectly will feel the baneful effects of this saturnalia of Democratic tariff tinkering. For instance, vanilla beans are not grown in the United States, and have, consequently, for 40 years been on the free list. San Francisco merchants have built up a thriving business in importing this bean from Tahiti, about $1,500,000 worth annually, rehandling the product and exporting to Europe. Tahiti has in return purchased American goods. This bill imposes a duty of 30 cents per pound on vanilla beans and this trade will be lost to the United States. The cut on the duty on blasting caps below the competitive point is a hard blow to the California Cap Co., which has been a thriving manufacturing concern. But why continue to enumerate. No section of the State has escaped and scarcely an interest has been overlooked. California's experience during this extra session should be illuminating. I think it has been, and believe the lesson will be heeded in the future. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the great effort that has been made for so long is about to be crowned with success, namely, the repeal of an oppressive protective-tariff law, and substituting therefor a reasonable, conservative revenue measure. I want to say that the Ways and Means Committee is entitled to great credit, each and every member of it, for the work that has been done. I want to say that I think the chairman is entitled to the credit he is getting. I want him to have all he is entitled to, which is a great deal. But there is one man whose name does not appear conspicuously in the discussion on the report on the floor of the House in connection with this matter, who has rendered service equal to if not exceeding any member of the committee, whose modesty and diffidence is such that he never seeks to advertise himself, but in justice to the State he represents, in justice to the district that honors him and which he honors, and in justice to him for the great labor which he has bestowed upon a certain part of this legislation, I feel that he is entitled to special mention at this time. I think he ought to have been on the conference committee if the rules of the House had permitted it.

Before the constitutional amendment to make lawful the passage of an income-tax law this distinguished but modest gentleman had been giving the income-tax question most thorough study, so that the very moment the constitutional amendment passed I was in favor of putting that gentleman upon the Ways and Means Committee, and the Democratic caucus had the good judgment to do so.

And when on that committee he took special charge of that work, for which he was better equipped than any other man in the House, and the committee exercised the good judgment to defer to him, and he therefore took charge of it, both in the committee and on the floor of the House; and while he was not put on the conference committee, I understand there has been no material change in the income-tax provisions, and that he was consulted and his judgment yielded to in perfecting the last stages of this legislation.

I have the honor and the pleasure of saying that I feel that the House and the party and the country are under a debt of deep and lasting gratitude to the Hon. CORDELL HULL, of Tennessee. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KENNEDY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KENNEDY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I esteem it a great honor to have just a brief moment in which to speak on this important bill. The time is so short that I simply want to reply, with respect to one industry, to the statement that has been brought forward here by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], the leader of the minority of the Committee on Ways and Means. I hope that my youthfulness here in the House will not be deemed as impairing the correctness of what I say, or that my statement shall be treated as any disrespect to him.

The gentleman has referred to the cutlery industry. I defy the gentleman to point to a single cutlery industry in the State of New York that has prospered under the high tariff. I can show you cutlery industries in the State and town that I come from that are perishing, and some that have gone out of existence, under your high tariff. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

That trouble is with you. The trouble is with your party. The trouble is with the customhouse in New York. That is where the trouble lies. And when we undertake to say that concerns will prosper by a high tariff, it is a great mistake. I come from a beehive of industry, extending all through my State and all through the valley. Let me say this to you, gentlemen: There is not a factory closing down; there is scarcely a factory there which is not having an addition built to it, knowing that this bill is going to pass. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I invite your distinguished leaders, whatever State they may come from, to come with me and I will show this to them.

The distinguished leader on the Democratic side [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has been in my State. He has seen the industries there, how they have accumulated, and how they have prospered; and no matter who has been here before, and no matter who will ever come here again, I assure you it is the ingenuity, it is the invention, it is the progress, it is the opportunity, it is the American manhood, that creates all this force. It is not a high tariff. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back two minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to use the balance of his time.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the gentleman from Alabama has a great deal more time left than I have.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I intend to yield only for one speech.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I am not very particular about it. Mr. Speaker, I will now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] is recognized.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, much has been said in this discussion about the necessities of life being placed on the free list. That is true; but the necessities that have been placed on the free list by this bill are the necessities produced on the farm.

One of the necessities of life for the farmer in my district in the great Pacific Northwest is the jute grain bag. The farmers of my district, the members of the grange, and the farmers' union have petitioned this body and the Senate to put the jute grain bag upon the free list. One manufacturing firm in the city of Portland, in the State of Oregon, has protested against the free-listing of the jute grain bag, and this body and the Senate have listened to that single manufacturing firm and have refused to listen to the farmers and the granges in my district.

I call this matter to the attention of this body with, perhaps, a forlorn hope, but at least some hope, that this House may give some heed rather to the farmers of my State than to the manufacturer. The agricultural crops of the Northwest—our wheat, oats, barley, and potatoes—when harvested are, for the most part, put in these jute grain bags. Under this bill there is a duty of about one-half a cent per sack. Our 1912 Oregon crop was as follows:

	Bushels.
Wheat	21,092,274
Oats	14,744,046
Barley	4,439,374
Potatoes	8,751,685
Total	49,027,379

Counting about a little more than 2 bushels to the sack, this crop required somewhere from 18,000,000 to 25,000,000 sacks. This, of course, is only a rough estimate, but is sufficiently accurate to demonstrate that free sacks to the farmer, whose products are free listed, would afford him substantial relief.

I firmly believe that these sacks would have been free listed were it not for a letter written by Mr. Ames, of the Ames-Harris Co., manufacturers of jute grain sacks, of Portland, Oreg., published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a part of the remarks of Senator WILLIAMS on September 2. This letter, no doubt, had more influence with Congress and the conferees than the request of the grain grower. It is not yet too late to remedy this subject, and I earnestly implore those in charge of this bill that at least this one change be made in the interest of the grain grower of the Northwest, and then the majority body of this House may justly claim that this feature of the Underwood bill without question was enacted in the interest of the farmer. These sacks are not manufactured in this country in very appreciable numbers, even though they have been protected for some time under the present law; they come principally from Calcutta, and every cent of duty you levy is paid solely by the grain grower.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized for seven and one-half minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the Underwood tariff bill is approaching the hour when it shall become a law. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The producers in every country in the world except ours are applauding the Democratic Party. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Notwithstanding the lovable character and patriotism of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the author of this bill [applause], it is an un-American bill. [Applause on the Republican side.] It is more than that. It is anti-American. It untaxes every producer in the world except the American producer. It removes the tax on the foreigners that has protected the farmers, manufacturers, miners, and all producers in America and gives the foreigner practically free access to the American markets. Not only that. It is so unfriendly to American citizens that it untaxes their competitors who live in foreign lands and taxes the American if he prospers in competition with his foreign competitor. It puts a tax upon the prosperity of the American, whether he be manufacturer, farmer, miner, or business man, and it gives to the foreigner, no matter whether he comes from Europe, Asia, Central or South America, or the islands of the sea, opportunity to prosper in the best market in the world by permitting him to come here with his products, dispose of them and wax fat and be untouched by the taxgatherer of the United States. Oh, you know what the result of this will be. There is not a man here who does not go with fear and trembling to the hour when he shall be delivered and record his vote for this bill. The American people are waiting for another chance to vote. And they will not, as my colleague from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] has intimated, inquire how it was done, but they will inquire who did it, and they will know, and just as soon as they get a chance at you, you will answer for the votes that you are about to record for this bill.

The President of the United States told us here a few days ago, in university English, that this bill could not stand upon its own merits. He said to us and to the country that this bill would revolutionize business, and what he meant by revolutionizing business was, as the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. UNDERWOOD] said to-day, that it would level things down in our country to the level of the countries with whom this bill will compel us to compete. Business would be free under this bill. That will level our business and labor down. The people will have to adjust themselves to the low level. The President was urging you to pass another bill that would, as he believed, help the country survive the shock that business will receive as a result of this tariff revolution.

As plainly intimated by the President, this bill will give the business of this country such a shock that it is necessary to pass a law that will enable the President, with a partisan board, to inflate the currency to, if possible, keep the business of the country going and our labor employed. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You gentlemen have been telling the laborers of our land that you were their friends. In this bill you had an opportunity to protect them from the competition of child labor and underpaid labor employed in other countries. In this bill you have had the opportunity to protect them against labor that is employed longer than eight hours a day. You have not done either, but, on the contrary, you have thrown the American laborer into open competition with the cheapest-paid labor in the world—child labor, women's labor, employed 10, 12, and 14 hours a day in foreign countries. Yet you parade yourselves throughout the country as the friends of those who with their hands labor. This bill inaugurates the open shop for American labor. It closes the opportunities that labor has had in this country to organize and protect itself and to prosper.

You are substituting by this bill scholastic theory for successful practices. The President says he wants business to be free and prosperous, and is giving the country free trade and money inflation to bring on these conditions.

The farmers, laborers, and business men of the country will compare the results of your work in doing the President's bidding with the experience they have had under protection and sound money for the past 16 years. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FITZGERALD). The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has 26½ minutes remaining.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] the balance of the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speaker of the House, Mr. CLARK of Missouri, is recognized for 26½ minutes.

[Mr. CLARK of Missouri took the floor amid general applause, the Members rising to their feet.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this is the culmination to-day of one of the longest and hardest fights in American politics. I am nearly the only man in the House, except the present members of the Ways and Means Committee, who ever served on that committee. I most heartily congratulate Mr. Chairman UNDERWOOD and the members of his committee. [Applause.] When making my five-hour speech on the Payne bill I congratulated Chairman PAYNE on becoming a historic personage, which he is. I congratulate Mr. Chairman UNDERWOOD on the same fact. A man who fastens his name onto a general tariff bill has his place fixed in history, whether he rises higher or not. Only one man outside of this House ever had ingenuity enough to get his name fastened onto a tariff bill, and that was the Hon. Robert J. Walker, of Mississippi, Secretary of the Treasury, and he deserved to have his name fastened onto the bill which bears it.

I congratulate every member of the Democratic majority of the Ways and Means Committee on account of the intelligent, hard, successful work they have accomplished in this bill, because I have served on the committee and know more about the hard work than any other man who is not a member of it. I congratulate the Republicans of the committee on the plucky, though necessarily losing, fight they made. I even congratulate my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] on the enjoyment which he has extracted from this tariff bill from the very beginning of it. I think this is the first happy moment he has had since he got his own tariff bill passed. [Applause and laughter.]

It is a good time to refresh people's memories. The victory is ours, the fight is over, and we can face the country with serenity and hope. I will tell you how this revolution started; because that is what it is, a political revolution. In the spring of 1908 a little handful of us here started a tariff debate. Senator JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Judge De Armond, and some others of us took part in it. It was a very gloomy period for Democrats. They had been licked so often and so regularly that they had formed the habit of defeat. Charlie Landis used to tell a tale in the debates he had with me that illustrated the Democratic frame of mind. He said that a school mistress in Indiana called on all the boys who wanted to be President to hold up their hands, and they all held up their hands except one little chap. The teacher said, "Johnnie, don't you want to be President?" He said, "Yes; but I'm a Democrat." [Laughter.] That anecdote fairly illustrates the hopeless frame of mind of the Democrats in the spring of 1908, and they were not cheered up very much by what happened in the fall of 1908. Quite the contrary.

The Democrats are now not only victorious, but we have formed the habit of victory. Along in the spring of 1908 it happened that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and myself were having a rather heated debate here on the tariff. Sometimes we went after them by brigades, sometimes by regiments, sometimes by companies, sometimes by squads, sometimes in single combat, and sometimes from ambush. The gentleman from New York got very hot in the collar. The truth is he was getting the worst of it, if I do say it myself. [Laughter.] Finally he made this declaration—and it was the first one of the kind I ever heard or heard of a Republican making on the subject of the tariff. He said he violated no confidence in stating that if the Republicans carried the country they would revise the tariff. He did not say they would revise it up, because he was afraid to. He did not say they would revise it down, because he knew they never intended to. [Laughter.] I said then, and I say now, that that declaration was equivocal; it did not mean a thing on earth. What does revise mean? The word comes from two Latin words meaning to look over again, and it means to doctor up, to revamp, to change, to remodel.

When the Republicans reached Chicago that year they were afraid of this growing sentiment that we had been stirring up, and they put it in their platform that if they were continued power they would revise the tariff. They did not say up; they did not say down. I would not misrepresent them for the world. I would not misrepresent any man, for no man ever made anything by misrepresenting anybody. That enabled them to go to the country and play both ends against the middle, if you understand that phrase. [Laughter.] But it became too hot for them. They began to fear they would lose the election, and by preconcerted arrangement one fine morning in October of that year every Republican newspaper of any standing and every Republican orator of any renown declared that that platform declaration, which really originated with the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], meant a revision down.

The Globe-Democrat, the greatest Republican paper west of the Mississippi, said the next morning that the Republicans were the real tariff reformers, and that we Democrats were bogus reformers, and that the question of tariff revision had been put clear out of the issues in that campaign.

What happened? You swept the country by playing that—well, I shall not call it a trick, but by doing that, and you flattened us out as completely as ever a set of men were flattened out in an election since the world began. That promise to revise the tariff down got you in, and then you did not do it. Then the country gave you an awful trouncing in 1910 for not doing it, and a worse one in 1912. My good friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] still insists that his bill was the best ever enacted into law, just as every crow thinks her crowlet the blackest; but the voters of the land last November differed with him toto celo, and in a few days his pet measure will be dead as the men who lived before the flood; but he may assuage his grief for the taking off of his bantling by remembering that he will share the blessings which our tariff bill will bring to all persons living under our flag.

When St. Paul was nearing the close of his long and heroic career, he boasted, "I have fought the good fight; I have kept the faith," and we can repeat literally and truly that proud boast of the great apostle to the gentiles. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We have fought a good fight. When you think of the predicament that the Democrats were in after that election in 1908 and think of their splendid and commanding position this day, it seems as if a miracle had been wrought in the land. We have kept the faith. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], and all the rest of you, stand around and pick little flaws in the tariff bill. Your performance is close akin to the futile achievement of pointing out spots on the sun. It pleases the performers and in no way injures the great luminary. You say we are not agreed. How do you know? I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but, nevertheless, I venture to predict that there will be more Republican votes for our tariff bill than Democratic votes against it. I will tell you the truth about it. There are no two men on the face of the earth with brains in their heads who agree on every item in the tariff bill, except free traders, and they are opposed to the whole scheme. How do you secure a law? I will tell you what it takes to get a law placed on the statute books. It takes at least 268 men to pass a law, 218 in the House, 49 in the Senate, and 1 in the White House. They get together and talk it out.

My friend from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], of whom I think a great deal, addressed the House this afternoon. I knew him when he was wearing kilts, and his father was kind to me during the nine weeks that I lived in Kansas, and I take a pride in the gentleman's career. He said there will never be another tariff bill passed as long as grass grows or water runs which is on the plan upon which this one was gotten up. I would like very much to know, and I am going to get him out and cross-examine him until I find out, how he would ever get a tariff bill passed, containing forty-one hundred items, by 435 men representing 435 districts, each one differing somewhat in its interests from the others, unless they did get together. King Solomon saith, "In a multitude of counsel there is wisdom." I like to quote the great King, because he is one of my prime favorites in literature and in history. I do not care three straws whether you call it a caucus or a conference or what you call it. How are you ever going to get an agreement without getting together and talking about it? There is no man in this House who would have written this tariff bill word for word just as it is. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee himself would not have done it. I would not have done it. Nobody on that committee would have done it, and in order to get a bill at all everyone must yield a little; thereby we finally agree upon some proposition upon which we can all stand. On Brother MURDOCK's plan we could not pass a tariff bill betwixt now and the 4th of March, 1915. If we lived as long as Methuselah we might proceed in that leisurely manner, but we can not do so under our present limitation on the length of days. Now, the idea of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] about how this House ought to be run is that it ought to be run as a town meeting. I belonged to a debating society once at Kentucky University, run by a man who was afterwards in Congress, John D. White. The name of his society was the "Loquacs," and most assuredly it was properly named. It had two rules, one of which was that every man was to speak as long as he pleased. That is the idea of the gentleman from Kansas about a tariff bill. [Laughter.] That is his idea about how to run this House. There is not a man here who can honestly complain that he has been gouged out of any of his rights and privileges in the construction of this tariff bill. Every man had a chance to offer any amendment that he pleased and to make a speech about it, and there the thing stopped, because you did not have votes enough. That is the whole story. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If you mend your hold at the next election and get the votes you are all right; if not, you are all wrong. But my guess is that you will not be able to stir level-headed Americans to mutiny and rage by carping criticism—by picking flaws in a great masterpiece of remedial legislation which our tariff bill is. We do not pretend that it will cure all the ills that flesh is heir to, but we confidently assert that it will prove to be a magnificent benefaction to the people of the land.

There has been a good deal of talk first and last about President Wilson's action with reference to this bill. I congratulate him for the part that he has taken in this legislation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If I had been elected President I would have gotten a good tariff bill through this House sure as you are alive. He has simply discharged his duty in the open. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I have been reading a good many things while the House has been adjourning three days at a time and, lo and behold, what do I find? One man in a book that is very readable declared that the man who managed Congress most thoroughly and completely, who dominated it entirely, was the great Democratic saint, Thomas Jefferson. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He did not do it by the big stick, but he did it by the force of his intellect and his skill in handling men. Some people did it openly and some secretly. I have always believed and I believe now that the Walker tariff bill was the second best tariff bill ever passed. I think this Underwood bill is the best one. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I have always said and I say now that I believe if it had not been for the Civil War there never would have been another high tariff bill put upon the statute books of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] What happened? That was the lowest general tariff bill ever enacted into law in this Republic, and yet it so thoroughly satisfied the country, business so prospered under it that in 1856 neither one of the three great parties which set up presidential candidates even mentioned the tariff question in their platform. That is the only time that that ever happened in the United States. What else happened? It brought such a big surplus—that is, big for that day, small for this, put such a big surplus into the Treasury—that on the 2d day of March, 1857, Franklin Pierce, a Democrat, put his signature to a tariff bill modifying the Walker tariff bill by cutting the rates down, a tariff bill passed by a Republican House, at least it was a mongrel House, the Republicans did not have a majority, but the Democrats only had 82 out of 132—it was made up of Republicans, the remnants of the old Whig Party, and the remnants of the old Know-Nothing Party, but together they had an anti-Democratic majority and they elected Nathaniel P. Banks, of Massachusetts, Speaker. He was the first Republican Speaker. They passed that tariff bill after they had a good Democratic tariff bill for 11 years, and that is what will happen to this one, too.

It was passed by a Republican House, at least a non-Democratic House; passed by a non-Democratic Senate, and signed by a Democratic President of the United States. It was passed almost by the common consent of manufacturers, farmers, and every other class of people in the United States. Then, when the southerners went out of Congress Mr. Morrill got his first tariff bill passed. Some of you gentlemen belonging to the tribe of Cassandra have been making predictions of evil about this bill ever since Congress convened on the 4th day of April. The wish was father to the thought. You have not even the ghost of a show to recover your lost ground, unless a panic ensues, and you are sore and unhappy because there is not a sign anywhere that bad times are coming or that there is going to be a panic, but the business of the country has proceeded through this long-drawn-out debate as if there was no tariff question pending in this country.

One great thing that this bill will do, and I congratulate the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] on that most cordially, is that it will introduce into the taxing system of this country the proposition that we will tax what a man has instead of what he has to buy to live on. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You say you can not enforce that law. You can enforce it as well as you can enforce any other tax law. Men have been swearing off their taxes ever since the system of taxation was invented, and they will dodge it yet. Why should not the concentrated wealth of this country bear its just proportion of the public burden? [Applause on the Democratic side.] I will debate that proposition with any man living, with the absolute certainty of coming out on top.

I justify the exemptions in the bill. They say it is unfair. Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE, somewhere up in Massachusetts, or in a magazine article, said that it is a war on wealth. It is no such thing. No man who has any sense is opposed to wealth, provided it is secured by legitimate means. But $3,000 is a small amount, or not a large amount, for a single man, and $4,000 is not a large amount for a family, and the exemption in the income-tax law is based on the same principle that the exemptions in the various States are based upon. For instance, in Texas a man can not mortgage his homestead, and I wish to heaven that every State in the Union would enact that Texas law. [Applause.] But these exemptions are made, not for the benefit of the man that takes the exemption but for the benefit of society, for the benefit of the State, because wise men believe that it is better to maintain the family in the United States, which is the unit of civilization, than it is to cut their income down to such short rations that they will have to dissolve and one of them go here and another there.

I believe as firmly as that I am living that on a sealed ballot, so that nobody could ever find out how you gentlemen over on the Republican side would vote, nine-tenths of you would vote for that income-tax proposition in this bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I will tell you what else I believe. I believe if you had a plebiscite, as Louis Napoleon used to call it, or secret vote, 95 per cent of the people of the United States would vote for the income-tax proposition in this bill. Just as certain as you live that is coming to stay, and the people will magnify the name of HULL in the days to come. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If you gentlemen on the Republican side ever get into possession of the Government again, you will no more dare to repeal the income tax than you would dare to jump off the top of the Capitol. The people will not have it. Some folks seem to think it has never been tried. The English have tried it, and except for two years they have had the income tax ever since the Napoleonic wars, and they have worked it out with mathematical nicety. I do not believe there will ever be another high-tariff bill enacted into law in this Republic. The income-tax feature of this bill will prevent that forever and forever.

We stand to-day justified by our works. The old rule, "By their works ye shall know them," is wholesome. We are willing to be judged by it. For 16 years we wandered in the wilderness. We were demoralized and disheartened. Gaining one victory after another gives us courage, and I believe this day is the beginning of a quarter of a century of unbroken Democratic supremacy in this country. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And on that question the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Are the yeas and nays now on agreeing to the conference report or on ordering the previous question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On agreeing to the conference report. Under agreement, the previous question was considered as ordered at the conclusion of the debate.

Mr. MANAHAN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANAHAN. My inquiry is this: May the text of a bill to which both Houses have agreed be changed by the conference committee without the consent of both Houses?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can not.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is not the time for that.

Mr. MANAHAN. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that paragraph 288, wherein the conference committee has changed the text by changing the rate of duty, on which there was no difference of opinion between the House and the Senate, from 20 per cent to 10 per cent, violates the rule which provides that the text of a bill upon which both Houses have agreed can not be changed in conference without the consent of each House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's point of order comes too late. Under the rules and practice of the House the question must be raised at the conclusion of the reading of the conference report. The conference report having been read and other proceedings having intervened, it is now too late to raise the question raised by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MANAHAN]. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. Those in favor of the adoption of the conference report will signify the fact when their names are called by saying "aye"; those opposed by saying "no." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 255, nays 104, answered "present" 3, not voting 67, as follows:

YEAS—255.

Abercrombie	Booher	Callaway	Conry
Aiken	Borchers	Candler, Miss.	Covington
Alexander	Bowdler	Caraway	Cox
Allen	Brockson	Carew	Crisp
Ashbrook	Brodbeck	Carlin	Crosser
Aswell	Brown, N. Y.	Carr	Cullop
Bailey	Brown, W. Va.	Cary	Dale
Baker	Bruckner	Casey	Davenport
Baltz	Brumbaugh	Church	Decker
Barkley	Buchanan, Ill.	Clancy	Deltick
Barnhart	Buchanan, Tex.	Clark, Fla.	Dent
Bartlett	Bulky	Claypool	Dershem
Bathrick	Burgess	Clayton	Dickinson
Beakes	Burke, Wis.	Cline	Dies
Beall, Tex.	Burnett	Collier	Diffenderfer
Bell, Ga.	Byrnes, S. C.	Connelly, Kans.	Dixon
Blackmon	Bryns, Tenn.	Connolly, Iowa	Donovan

Dooling	Helvering	Montague	Smith, N. Y.
Doolittle	Hensley	Moon	Sparkman
Doremus	Hill	Morrison	Stafford
Doughton	Hobson	Moss, Ind.	Stanley
Driscoll	Holland	Murray, Mass.	Stedman
Eagan	Houston	Murray, Okla.	Stephens, Miss.
Eagle	Howard	O'Brien	Stephens, Nebr.
Elder	Hughes, Ga.	Oglesby	Stevens, N. H.
Estopinal	Hull	O'Hair	Stone
Faison	Humphreys, Miss.	Oldfield	Stout
Fergusson	Igoe	O'Leary	Stringer
Ferris	Jacoway	O'Shaunessy	Summers
Flelds	Johnson, Ky.	Padgett	Taggart
Fitzgerald	Johnson, S. C.	Page	Talbot, Md.
FitzHenry	Jones	Palmer	Talcott, N. Y.
Flood, Va.	Kelly, Pa.	Patten, N. Y.	Tavener
Floyd, Ark.	Kennedy, Conn.	Pepper	Taylor, Ala.
Foster	Kent	Peters, Mass.	Taylor, Ark.
Fowler	Kettner	Phelan	Taylor, N. Y.
Gallagher	Key, Ohio	Post	Ten Eyck
Gard	Kinhead, N. J.	Pou	Thacher
Garner	Kirkpatrick	Ragsdale	Thomas
Garrett, Tenn.	Kitchin	Rainey	Thompson, Okla.
Garrett, Tex.	Konop	Raker	Townsend
George	Lee, Ga.	Rauch	Tribble
Gerry	Lee, Pa.	Rayburn	Tuttle
Gillmore	Leshner	Reed	Underhill
Gittins	Lever	Reilly, Conn.	Underwood
Glass	Levy	Reilly, Wis.	Vaughan
Goeke	Lewis, Md.	Riordan	Walker
Goldfogle	Lieb	Rouse	Walsh
Gordon	Linthicum	Rubey	Watkins
Goulden	Lobeck	Rucker	Watson
Gray	Logue	Rupley	Weaver
Gregg	Loneragan	Russell	Webb
Griffin	McAndrews	Sabath	Whaley
Gudger	McClellan	Saunders	Whitacre
Hamill	McDermott	Scully	White
Hammond	McGillcuddy	Seldomridge	Williams
Hardwick	McKellar	Sharp	Wilson, Fla.
Hardy	MacDonald	Sherley	Wilson, N. Y.
Harrison	Maguire, Nebr.	Sherwood	Wingo
Hart	Mahan	Sims	Witherspoon
Hay	Maher	Sisson	Young, Tex.
Hayden	Manahan	Slayden	The Speaker
Heflin	Metz	Small
Helm	Mitchell	Smith, Md.

NAYS—104.

Ainey	Falconer	Kennedy, R. I.	Roberts, Mass.
Anderson	Farr	Kinkaid, Nebr.	Rogers
Anthony	Fordney	Knowland, J. R.	Scott
Austin	Frear	Kreider	Sells
Avis	French	Lafferty	Shreve
Barchfeld	Gillett	La Follette	Sinnott
Barton	Good	Langham	Slemp
Bell, Cal.	Greene, Mass.	Langley	Sloan
Britten	Greene, Vt.	Lazaro	Smith, Idaho
Broussard	Griest	Lewis, Pa.	Smith, Saml. W.
Browne, Wis.	Guernsey	Mapes	Steenson
Browning	Hamilton, Mich.	Mondell	Stephens, Cal.
Burke, Pa.	Hamilton, N. Y.	Moore	Sutherland
Butler	Haugen	Morgan, La.	Switzer
Calder	Hawley	Morgan, Okla.	Temple
Campbell	Hayes	Morin	Thomson, Ill.
Cooper	Hinds	Moss, W. Va.	Towner
Cramton	Hinebaugh	Mott	Treadway
Curry	Howell	Murdock	Vare
Danforth	Hulings	Nelson	Volstead
Davis	Humphrey, Wash.	Parker	Wallin
Dillon	Johnson, Utah	Patton, Pa.	Walters
Donohoe	Johnson, Wash.	Payne	Willis
Dunn	Kahn	Plumley	Winslow
Edmonds	Keister	Porter	Woodruff
Esch	Kennedy, Iowa	Powers	Woods

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—3.

Copley McCoy McGuire, Okla.

NOT VOTING—67.

Adair	Fess	Kiess, Pa.	Norton
Adamson	Finley	Kindel	Peters, Me.
Ansberry	Francis	Korby	Peterson
Bartholdt	Gardner	L'Engle	Platt
Borland	Godwin, N. C.	Lenroot	Prouty
Bremner	Goodwin, Ark.	Lindbergh	Quin
Bryan	Gorman	Lindquist	Richardson
Burke, S. Dak.	Graham, Ill.	Lloyd	Roberts, Nev.
Cantrill	Graham, Pa.	McKenzie	Rothermel
Carter	Green, Iowa	McLaughlin	Shackelford
Chandler, N. Y.	Hamlin	Madden	Smith, J. M. C.
Curley	Helgesen	Mann	Smith, Minn.
Dupre	Henry	Martin	Stephens, Tex.
Dyer	Hoxworth	Merritt	Stevens, Minn.
Edwards	Hughes, W. Va.	Miller	Taylor, Colo.
Evans	Keating	Neeley	Young, N. Dak.
Fairchild	Kelley, Mich.	Nolan, J. I.

So the conference report was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. ADAMSON (for) with Mr. McLAUGHLIN (against).

Mr. NEELEY (for) with Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania (against).

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas (for) with Mr. GARDNER (against).

Mr. BREMNER (for) with Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania (against).

Mr. FINLEY (for) with Mr. GREEN of Iowa (against).

Mr. QUIN (for) with Mr. SMITH of Minnesota (against).

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois (for) with Mr. PETERS of Maine (against).

Mr. CURLEY (for) with Mr. NORTON (against).

Mr. SHACKLEFORD (for) with Mr. LINDBERGH (against)—pair on nothing but tariff report.

Mr. HENRY (for) with Mr. LENROOT (against).

Mr. CANTRILL (for) with Mr. HELGESEN (against).

Mr. HAMLIN (for) with Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota (against).

Mr. J. I. NOLAN (for) with Mr. DUPRE (against).

Mr. KORBLY (for) with Mr. DYER (against).

Mr. LLOYD (for) with Mr. MANN (against).

Mr. GORMAN (for) with Mr. MCKENZIE (against).

Mr. ADAIR (for) with Mr. FAIRCHILD (against).

Mr. ROTHERMEL (for) with Mr. FESS (against).

Mr. ANSBERRY (for) with Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia (against).

Mr. PETERSON (for) with Mr. LINDQUIST (against).

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina (for) with Mr. MERRITT (against).

Mr. KEATING (for) with Mr. PLATT (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. EVANS with Mr. MILLER.

Mr. MCCOY with Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota.

Mr. CARTER with Mr. MCGUIRE of Oklahoma.

Mr. KINDEL with Mr. KELLEY of Michigan.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas with Mr. BURKE of South Dakota.

Mr. RICHARDSON with Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. EDWARDS with Mr. PROUTY.

Mr. FRANCIS with Mr. MADDEN.

Mr. HOXWORTH with Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado with Mr. J. M. C. SMITH.

For the remainder of this day:

Mr. BORLAND with Mr. BARTHOLDT.

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. STEVENS, recorded as voting?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded. He did not vote.

Mr. MCCOY. I am paired with him. I voted "aye." I withdraw that vote and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he voted in the affirmative.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The announcement of the result was received with applause on the Democratic side.

THE TARIFF—COTTON FUTURES.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there is still pending Senate amendment 609, known as the Clarke amendment. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment 609 and agree to the same with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Before the gentleman makes his parliamentary inquiry we will have the amendment read, and then the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECTION III.

PARAGRAPH 1. That on and after the first day of September, 1914, upon each sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell any cotton for future delivery, made in the future contract market at or on or in any cotton exchange, or board of trade, or other similar place, or by any person acting in substantial conformity to the rules and regulations governing such future transactions or market quotations of any such cotton exchange, board of trade, or other similar place, there is hereby levied a tax in the nature of an excise equal to one-tenth of 1 cent per pound on the quantity of cotton mentioned and described in any such contract; and that one-half of such tax shall be paid by the buyer and one-half thereof by the seller of the cotton involved in the transaction, by means of stamps affixed to the contracts of purchase and sale, or memorandums attached thereto, respectively, in compliance with rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Any sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell any cotton for future delivery, made in the future contract market at or on or in any cotton exchange, board of trade, or other similar place, or by any person acting in conformity to the rules and regulations governing such future transactions of any such cotton exchange, board of trade, or other similar place, in any foreign country where the order for such sale has been transmitted from the United States to such foreign country, and either the buyer or the seller described in such contract of sale is at the time of the execution thereof a resident of the United States, shall be deemed and considered in all respects a sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, for future delivery, of the cotton described therein within the meaning of this section. A corporation organized under the laws of any State or country shall be deemed for all purposes a person within the meaning of this section. All contracts for the sale as aforesaid of cotton for future delivery at the places and by the persons herein mentioned shall be in writing, plainly stating the terms of such contract, and indicating the parties thereto and signed by the party to be charged, by himself or his agent. The said tax shall be paid by means of stamps affixed to such written contract.

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered to make, prescribe, and publish all rules and regulations necessary to the enforcement of this section and to the collection of the tax thereby imposed. To further effect this purpose he is hereby authorized to require all persons coming within its provisions to keep such records and systems of accounting as will fully and correctly disclose the transactions in connection with which the said tax is authorized; and he may appoint such agents as he may deem necessary to conduct the inspection necessary to collect the tax herein authorized and otherwise to enforce the statute and all rules and regulations lawfully made in pursuance thereof as in his judgment may be required and to fix the compensation of such agents.

That any cotton exchange, board of trade, or other similar place, its officers and agents, or persons acting in substantial conformity with the rules and regulations or market quotations of any such cotton exchange, board of trade, or other similar place where contracts for the sale of cotton for future delivery are made in violation of this statute, and every person who is made liable for the tax thereby imposed who shall fail to pay, or shall evade or attempt to evade the payment of the tax levied by this section, or shall otherwise violate this statute, or any rule or regulation lawfully made by the Secretary of the Treasury in pursuance thereof, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine in any sum not less than $100 nor more than $20,000; and in case of natural persons or unincorporated associations of persons violating this act an additional punishment by imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than three years may be imposed at the discretion of the court.

In addition to the foregoing punishment there is hereby imposed a penalty of $2,000 on each separate sale made in violation of this statute, to be recovered in an action founded on this statute in the name of the United States as plaintiff, and when so recovered one-half of said amount shall be paid over to the person giving the information upon which such recovery is based.

That no person whose evidence is deemed material by the officer prosecuting on behalf of the United States shall withhold his testimony because of complicity by him in any violation of this statute, but any such person so required to give evidence as a witness shall be exempt from prosecution in any court of the United States for the particular offense in connection with the prosecution whereof such testimony was given.

That the payment of the tax levied under authority of this section shall not exempt any person from any penalty or punishment now or hereafter provided by the laws of any State for entering into contracts for the future delivery of cotton; nor shall the payment of taxes imposed by this section be held to prohibit any State or municipality from imposing a tax on the same transaction.

PAR. 2. Provided, however, That if any such contract mentioned in paragraph 1 of this section complies with all the conditions, rules, and regulations imposed by or made pursuant to this section, in writing, plainly stating the terms of such contract and indicating the parties thereto and signed by the party to be charged, by himself or his agent, specifies, or in a written memorandum attached thereto shows, the number of bales of cotton involved in the contract, the price per pound of middling cotton, hereinafter called the basis grade, at which the cotton is contracted to be bought or sold, the date of the purchase or sale, and the month in which the contract is to be fulfilled or settled, provides that the cotton therein mentioned or dealt with shall be within the grade limits fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture, to wit, within the limits of middling fair and good ordinary, inclusive, on the present existing Government standards, and no other grade or grades, and provides that in the settlement of such contract by the actual delivery of the cotton involved therein, where cotton other than the basis grade is delivered, the difference above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for such grades shall be determined as hereinafter provided, then and in that event and in every such case the tax levied by paragraph 1 of this section shall be reduced to 50 cents per 100 bales of cotton of 500 pounds each, mentioned and described in the contract and at that rate proportionately for greater or less quantities of cotton, and that one-half of such tax shall be paid by the buyer and one-half thereof by the seller of the cotton involved in the transaction, by means of stamps affixed to the contracts of purchase and sale or memorandums attached thereto, respectively, in compliance with rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

That for the purpose of this paragraph the differences above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for grades above or below the basis grade in the settlement of a contract for the future delivery of cotton by the actual delivery of the cotton involved therein shall be determined by the actual commercial differences in value thereof established by bona fide sales of spot cotton of the same grades, respectively, made in the course of actual trade, upon the sixth business day prior to the settlement of the contract, in the market where the future transaction involved takes place and is consummated; and in the event that there be no bona fide spot market in which spot sales are made from day to day at or in the place in which such future transaction takes place, then and in that case the said differences above or below the contract price shall be determined by taking the average of the aforesaid actual commercial differences in value in the spot markets at five places designated by the Secretary of Agriculture, as the said differences were established by the sales of spot cotton of the same grade, respectively, in such five markets upon the sixth business day prior to the settlement of the contract: Provided, That for the purposes of this paragraph such values in the said spot markets be based upon the standards for grades of cotton fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

That for the purpose of this paragraph the only markets which shall be considered bona fide spot markets shall be such as are designated by the Secretary of Agriculture.

That in determining, pursuant to the provisions of this paragraph, what markets are bona fide spot markets the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to consider only markets in which spot cotton is sold in such volume and under such conditions as customarily to reflect accurately the price of middling cotton and the differences between the prices or values of middling cotton and other grades of cotton for which standards shall have been established by the Secretary of Agriculture.

During the reading of the foregoing the following occurred:

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. It is necessary that Members should hear what is being read.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be permitted to read again from the beginning of the amendment, since, owing to the confusion, we did not hear the first portion of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the Clerk again read from the beginning of the amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, the gentleman from Illinois, and the gentleman from Kentucky object. The Clerk then concluded the reading of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas was about to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary inquiry merely went to the point of whether or not the reading of that amendment would shut out the motion to recede and concur?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement on the pending Senate amendment and concur in the same.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I give notice that I shall demand a division of that question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas moves to recede and concur, and the gentleman from Georgia gives notice that he will demand a division.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have the Chair rule as to which of these motions takes precedence.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] moves to recede from the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment No. 609 and concur in that amendment with the amendment that has just been read. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] moves that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks for a ruling as to which motion is preferential.

The whole subject has been somewhat complicated and beclouded by a misunderstanding which exists as to the practice of the House in slightly different parliamentary situations. When the House passes a bill and it goes over to the Senate and comes back with a Senate amendment, the regular course is for the Senate amendment to be considered in the House. Three motions are then in order—to disagree, to concur, or to concur with an amendment. It has always been held that a motion to concur in the Senate amendment takes precedence of a motion to disagree. This grows out of the fact that it is the business of the House to do business and not to retard business. The motion to concur tending to dispose of the matter in issue without further negotiations is held preferential on the ground that it expedites the business of the House. The anomaly of the whole matter, however, is in the universal practice of the House that a motion to concur with an amendment takes precedence of the simple motion to concur. The Chair is unable to understand how this practice has grown up, for if expediting the business of the House were the purpose, the contrary would be held. The practice, however, is well established, and if this were the situation to-day, the Chair would hold the motion to concur with an amendment preferential, but this is not the situation before us. The House has taken up this amendment together with all the other Senate amendments to the tariff bill and disagreed to them en bloc and sent the bill to conference. We now have a conference report settling all the other amendments and leaving only this amendment in disagreement between the two Houses. The practice of the House has always been, apparently, that when a state of disagreement has been reached between the two Houses, the motion to recede and concur takes precedence of the motion to recede and concur with an amendment. Sections 6219, 6220, 6221, and 6222 of Hinds' Precedents contain precedents to this effect.

Only one need be cited, as the decisions are apparently uniform. On August 10, 1894, the House was considering certain Senate amendments to a general appropriation bill, on which there was still disagreement between the two Houses. The question being on amendment No. 280, Mr. John A. Pickler, of South Dakota, moved that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment and agree thereto. Mr. Thomas C. McRae, of Arkansas, submitted a motion that the House recede from the amendment and agree to the same with an amendment. The Speaker pro tempore, the Hon. James G. Richardson, of Tennessee, held that inasmuch as the motion of Mr. Pickler tended to bring the Houses to a more immediate agreement than the motion of Mr. McRae, the motion of Mr. Pickler had precedence. This decision follows the logical rule in such matters and is directly in point. It is precisely the situation that is before us. The Chair therefore holds that the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] has precedence. The Chair will go a little further in explanation of the situation, inasmuch as he is informed that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] proposes to demand a division of the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas. A motion to recede and concur is divisible. If a division should be demanded, the motion to recede would first be put; if that were carried, the situation would be exactly the same as if the amendment had just been received from the Senate and no action ever taken upon it. The question would then recur upon the motion to concur; but here the anomalous rule referred to a moment ago would again interfere, and if any gentleman desired to offer a motion to concur with an amendment this would take precedence over the simple motion to concur. This exact situation was passed on by Mr. Speaker Cannon in 1907 in an exhaustive opinion contained in section 6209 of Hinds' Precedents. Mr. Speaker Cannon there reached the conclusion which the Chair has indicated, and that conclusion the present occupant of the Chair believes to be the correct one, and if the situation should arise will so hold.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division of the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I believe that I have control of the floor?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to see if we can agree on time for debate on the proposition. Although this is an important question, I know the House is very tired, and I would like to agree on as short a debate as practical. I would ask the gentleman if one hour of debate, to be equally divided between myself and whoever controls the other side, will be satisfactory?

Mr. HARDWICK. I think that will be enough, provided the gentlemen who are opposed to all propositions have ample time.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I think that will be sufficient time, provided those who are in favor of the Clarke amendment are given one-half of that time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman means half an hour?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, I can not agree to that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The opposition to these questions are those who are opposed to both propositions.

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly, and we desire half of the time.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, there seems to be a three-cornered proposition?

Mr. GARNER. That is the size of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will allow me, there are two separate propositions here. One set of gentlemen desire to oppose the motion to recede from the disagreeing vote on the Senate amendment. That is the first proposition. That motion is made by myself and by the gentleman from Arkansas. As I am opposed to that proposition, and, having control of the floor, I think I am entitled to one-half of the time on the proposition.

The SPEAKER. That is on the proposition to recede?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I think I am entitled to one-half of the time. When that proposition is settled, there is the issue of an amendment that I have proposed to the Clarke amendment. I do not think anyone will contest that I am entitled to control one-half of that time. That comes up as a separate proposition, and I would be entitled to control one-half of the time as to each. So that I think if gentlemen on this side can agree to the time they each want, I think I am entitled—

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman from Alabama has not stated this case correctly. There is before the House a Senate amendment to which the House has disagreed. One part of the House wishes to insist upon the disagreement of the House. The balance of the House wishes to concur with an amendment, some without change and others with, but they wish to agree to the amendment, and the gentleman is only entitled to one-half of the time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am only claiming one-half of the time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Those who are opposed to concurring in the amendment at all, either with change or without change, are entitled to one-half of the time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, possibly we can make this solution of the proposition: There are two propositions, and I understand there is a demand for a division of the vote—

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Three propositions.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent on the question of whether the House will recede from its disagreeing vote to the Senate amendment we shall have 30 minutes of debate, and at the end of that time that then we may have 30 minutes debate on the Clarke amendment and—

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, the gentleman assumes—he may be correct in so assuming—that his side is going to prevail, but if we decline to recede we will never reach that point.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course I recognize that. I will just ask, Mr. Speaker, that there may be 30 minutes' debate on the proposition of whether the House will recede from its disagreeing vote or not and at the end of that time the vote shall be taken on that question, and then there shall be—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from Alabama who is to control that time?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. One-half of the time to be controlled by myself and the other half on this first proposition by Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I suppose I would be entitled to control half of the time.

Mr. MURDOCK. What position does the gentleman occupy?

Mr. PAYNE. I am opposed to the whole proposition.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman is opposed to the whole proposition.

Mr. PAYNE. I am so rejoiced to see this declaration of independence on that side of the House and a chance for a scrap that I withdraw all claim to control the time on either proposition in order that some gentleman over there opposed to it may take control of the time.

Mr. WINGO. I was getting to that, Mr. Speaker. That is one substantial proposition before the House and that is the Clarke amendment. The question is whether or not we will on that amendment concur in it, or whether we will amend it—

The SPEAKER. No; the question is simply whether the House will recede.

Mr. WINGO. I was getting to that, Mr. Speaker. That is the substantial proposition, but the first proposition we have to consider is whether we will recede. Now, I think we should have more time for debate on that question. There is a great deal of demand, and I would suggest that the gentleman extend that time on the first proposition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On the question of whether we will recede or not, I think 30 minutes is enough.

The SPEAKER. The thing the Chair wants to find out is who is to control that 30 minutes?

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Georgia. He demanded a division and is opposed to the House receding.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. If we have 30 minutes' debate on the question of recession and the House refuses to recede, then will there be opportunity for debate between concurring in the Clarke amendment or concurring with an agreement?

Mr. MURDOCK. We will have opportunity to debate the proposition, then.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on the vote as to whether the House will recede from its disagreeing vote to the Senate amendment or not, the debate be limited to 30 minutes, one-half of the time to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], and then if that is decided so that the House does recede, we will then fix the time for debate on the other question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that there shall be 30 minutes' debate on the motion to recede and that he shall control half of the time and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] the other half. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary situation in reference to this matter is as follows:

The Senate adopted an amendment to the tariff bill known as the "Clarke amendment," relating to cotton futures. It went to the conference and the two Houses could not agree, and brought it back for the House to settle. Now, the matter pending before the House is a motion made by myself to recede from the disagreeing votes of the two Houses and to concur in the Clarke amendment with the amendment which has been read at the desk. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] moves to recede and concur in the Clarke amendment, which has precedence over the motion that I made at this time. Now, if the House desires to have no legislation on this question, it should vote against the motion to recede from the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, because if the House votes "no" on this question and refuses to recede, that is an equivalent to a motion to insist on the disagreement to the Senate amendment, and the bill will immediately go back to the Senate without any vote either on the proposition that I have proposed or on the Clarke amendment.

And the Senate can either recede from the Clarke amendment and pass the tariff bill or send the bill to conference. And, of course, although I am in favor of a substitute for the Clarke amendment, in favor of some legislation on this question now that it is before the House, if a majority of the House votes not to recede, which is equivalent to a motion to insist on its disagreement, then it goes back to conference, I would carry out the will of the House, although it might not be my will, and insist that this legislation should go out of the bill, because, acting as your conferee, it will be my duty, if I am appointed, to obey your orders.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman think that the splendid tariff bill for which he is largely responsible, should be marred by such hasty legislation on such an important question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I would have much preferred that this legislation should not have been placed on the tariff bill. There was other legislation placed on the tariff bill by the Senate that I opposed remaining there. A tariff bill is supposed to relate directly to the customs revenue. I kept out of the bill in the House all matters relating to the internal revenue, and endeavored to do so in the Senate, and the Senate receded from its amendments as to taxes relating to internal revenue, as that is a separate part of the legislative program of the Government. But this question is of such vital importance that I feel it should be acted upon. Now, I do not claim credit for this amendment—

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think he should modify his statement when he says if the House does not want any legislation of this kind they should vote "no"? Now I think I represent a majority of this House in saying we want legislation, but we do not want any one of these amendments. Does not the gentleman think he should modify his statement by saying "we do not want either one of these amendments," when he refers to those of us who do not agree with him?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Did we not pass a bill at the last session of Congress, the Bell-Scott bill, for which I voted, and did you not vote for it, and do you not think that showed we wanted this legislation? It is not fair to say Members do not want legislation because they refuse the makeshifts offered instead of the real legislation desired by Members.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If you do want this legislation, send this bill back to conference and we will try to work it out. If you do not want legislation, vote that you refuse to recede, and you will not get it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the conference committee report back to the House the Bell-Scott bill which we passed at the last session if so instructed?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Scott bill is not in conference, and the conferees have no jurisdiction to act on that bill. It must come from the Agriculture Committee.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I am unalterably opposed to gambling in any form. I am also opposed to legalizing gambling by assessing a tax on gambling. No one can deny the proposition that this amendment legalizes gambling in cotton futures by imposing a tax on future sales and thereby legalize the transaction. If men are allowed to gather in a room and there play and bet on cards, by the Georgia laws this is an illegal transaction, and the men would be liable to prosecution; but if the State of Georgia should charge 50 cents per game and pay this tax into the treasury, the State would legalize the game; so would the National Government.

I stand here to fight shoulder to shoulder with the friends of the farmer to destroy forever the cotton exchanges or the gambling on the cotton of the farmer. I voted last session for the Bell-Scott bill that would destroy the cotton exchanges, and I hope to see such a bill passed by this House and become a law, but I will not vote for a measure that legalizes gambling in cotton futures by taxing cotton futures and not only legalizing the transaction but declaring to the world our approval of cotton exchanges and bidding them Godspeed. I am opposed to the principle of taxing cotton. It is a dangerous precedent for the Southern farmer to tax his cotton in any form. In my opinion it will be a sad day for the South when the taxgatherer of the National Government lays his hand on cotton to collect tax for any purpose.

Mr. SHERLEY. On this bill, but only on this bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield just for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. If you want to get legislation without any equivocation, without any chance of a doubt, you recede from the position and agree to the Clarke amendment, and it is law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. That is the way to get legislation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask not to be interrupted any further. I have only 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks not to be interrupted until he closes his argument.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that in offering this amendment as an amendment to the Senate amendment, I do not claim the authorship of this matter. The first time that I ever heard of the proposition was when it was introduced in a bill by Senator SMITH, of South Carolina. In that bill he used the interstate-commerce powers of the Government to enforce his bill. This bill uses the taxing power.

As I understand the proposition, this bill was prepared by the Secretary of Agriculture, or under his direction, applying the taxing power to the features of the Smith bill that were pending some time ago. I came into possession of the bill that I have sent to the Clerk's desk, because when I went to conference the President of the United States handed me this paper that I had read at the Clerk's desk, and stated that he thought it was preferential, to be preferred, to the Clarke amendment, and asked me to offer it in conference. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, I prefer it to the Clarke amendment, because I believe if the Clarke amendment becomes a law it would destroy the cotton exchanges entirely. I believe that if the amendment I have sent to the Clerk's desk becomes a law it would regulate the cotton exchanges and wipe out the existing evils in them, but would not destroy the cotton exchanges.

Representing a constituency that grows cotton, it is natural that I should desire as broad a field and market for the disposal of their product as possible. If you wipe out entirely the cotton exchanges for the sale of cotton you limit the buyers of cotton to the manufacturers of cotton. The mill men will contend against the cotton producer for the crop. The condition will exist in short-staple cotton that exists to-day in long-staple cotton. Long-staple cotton is not sold on the cotton exchanges of the country, and the days come and go when long-staple cotton is a drug on the market, with no purchaser for it whatever, and then it may go to a very high price. But the producer of long-staple cotton in this country never knows when he has a market or what his market is. The producer of short-staple cotton, however, having cotton exchanges on which that can be sold, always has a market and always knows what his market price is.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not. I hope the gentleman will excuse me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, I believe that of the two systems it is better to wipe out the evil of a cotton exchange than to destroy one of the markets for the great cotton crop of the South. The evil consists in this: On the New York Cotton Exchange, and possibly some other cotton exchanges, they make a contract that is at the seller's option to deliver any kind of cotton that he wants. As a rule, when you make a future contract the buyer has the right to make you deliver. But under the contracts of the New York Cotton Exchange if you buy middling cotton the seller has the right to deliver to you any one of the 20 grades of cotton of the New York Cotton Exchange at an arbitrary difference in value. That arbitrary value is fixed in September of each year. It has nothing whatever to do with the value of the crop or the market conditions existing at the time of delivery; and when you buy this middling cotton and your time comes to call for delivery, he can deliver you the lowest grade, which, I believe, they call "punk," which is unfit for use in any spinning mill, and force you to take that instead of the cotton you bought. It is unmerchantable cotton.

Now, if you adopt this amendment that I propose, the buyer has the right to determine the delivery of the nine grades, as fixed by the Government, of spinnable cotton. It will no longer be a fraud, but it will be an actual fact, and the cotton exchange of the United States that is not prepared to actually deliver cotton must go out of existence.

In my judgment, if you adopt the Clarke amendment you drive the cotton exchanges out of existence. At least it is intended to do so. You destroy a market for part of the crop, or a market where the seller of the crop may find an immediate purchaser. On the other hand, if you adopt the amendment I propose, you will not destroy that market, but you will compel them to make a contract under the pains and penalties of taxation, that will require them to deliver the cotton that they agree to sell. It may be that they may cancel some of those contracts before delivery; but the man who goes on the cotton exchange and sells according to contract to deliver may never know whether the man at the other end of the contract will be willing to settle, or demand the cotton, and it will force him to sell cotton only according to the terms on which he believes he can deliver without losing money, instead of on the contract that exists to-day, under which he can pretend to sell, but deliver nothing.

Now, this is a serious question for the cotton grower of the South. You continue the present system by voting no in this instance, and insisting on your disagreement to the Senate amendment, and what do you do? You enable any man who wants to buy cotton for his mill in the South to go on the New York Cotton Exchange and sell that same grade of cotton. If he is buying strict middling in the South he can sell strict middling on the cotton exchange, to depress the price in the South, whilst he buys at the other end of the line. There is no doubt about the fact that his selling it on the cotton exchange does depress the price. Any gentleman from any one of these Southern States can testify that when he has gone to the store in the little town or the store at the crossroads, he has seen a farmer come in with his cotton and ask the price, and he has seen the merchant pull from his files a yellow strip of paper and has heard him say that the quotations on the cotton exchange are so and so.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] is recognized.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be notified when I have consumed six minutes of my time.

I want to say, gentlemen of the House, that I represent on this floor one of the greatest cotton districts in the South, a district that I suppose produces a hundred bales to every one produced in the district of my good friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I represent on this floor in part a great cotton-producing State, second only to the imperial Commonwealth of Texas in the production of cotton. I believe I speak for the unanimous delegation of the great State of Georgia when I say that at this time and in this way we want none of this hasty, ill-considered and ill-advised legislation. [Applause.] We are receiving protests from our people, not simply from the merchants and the banks, but from the cotton people as well, the men who make this product in the sweat of their faces. They tell us, "For God's sake let this question alone, at least until we can pick our cotton and sell it."

For four years the Democrats of this House, and the Republicans as well, for it is not a partisan question, have stood for a bill that would prevent gambling in cotton futures by outlawing it, by making it a crime, if it was a gambling proposition. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], as well as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], handed us in lieu of that a proposition to license gambling, to levy a tax on it. Is that right? Is that what we promised our people? Did we not say we would prevent it? Did we not say we would stop it? Did we not say we would outlaw it? Did we say we would get Government revenue out of it? Did we say, "We will put something into the Treasury by licensing these gambling transactions"?

Our position is that we ought not to accept either one of these amendments; that the great cotton exchange has its proper, necessary, legitimate functions, functions that are indispensable to the prosperity and well being of the southern cotton planter. But we say that there is interwoven with these legitimate functions certain illegitimate transactions that ought not to be taxed but ought to be prohibited by law absolutely and finally and forever. [Applause.]

Now, gentlemen on this side, I want to say a word to you. We have stood like adamant for years, protesting against this sort of use of the taxing power. I heard my friend from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] say this morning that taxing people never made them rich, great, prosperous, or powerful.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; not now. He said that a tax was not intended to be a blessing; that a tax was intended merely to support the Government. I agree with my friend from Virginia. We are not here to levy taxes to build up industries or to tear down gambling, either. Gambling in futures and gambling in stocks are both wrong, but I say we do not want to tax them; we do not want to license them; we do not want to get revenue out of them. We want to prohibit them.

We have stood on that for years. We have passed in two consecutive Congresses two bills that will accomplish that purpose, and we say that there is no reason now to abandon our position; there is no reason now to take this gold brick, and I say that, of course, with all due respect to my friends on the other side. I say frankly that if we are to have either one of these amendments, I prefer the amendment presented here by my good friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], because I think it will do less harm. It has less teeth in it than the other. I see my good friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER] smiles. That is right—"less teeth," my friend from Texas observes. I will tell my friend that if he passes any legislation by which the cotton exchanges are completely shut up and their legitimate functions are destroyed and honest buyers can not hedge against purchases they are making in the interior markets of the South day by day, and he goes home and faces the cotton planters of his State at the next election, he will pray to the mountains that they fall upon him and hide him from the wrath of the people he has injured.

I say this, Mr. Speaker, do not let us compromise with this evil. Do not compromise with the rights of our people. Let us not misuse the taxing power. Has our party not protested for years against the 10 per cent tax on State banks, and has it not said that that was not the way to kill an evil? Have we not all protested, or many of us, against the tax on oleomargarine? Do we believe that we ought to unduly accomplish any such purpose as this in any such way as this? I say, no. Let us hold fast to what is right. My people are begging me not to play football with their great interests, not to allow this legislation to be pressed while they are picking and marketing their cotton, to take it up at some other time, when the market is not active and when they are not in the process of immediately disposing of their crop and consequently a prey to the fluctuations of the market. The safest thing to do is to let this whole thing alone. Just as my friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] told you to begin with, I will tell you to conclude with, this is something that has no earthly business in a tariff bill. He knows it and I know it. It has no business there according to the principles of Democracy, and it has no business there according to the principles of common sense. It has no business there according to the canons of morality, and I say the safest thing is to let it severely alone. At the next session we can pass the necessary legislation to prohibit purely gambling transactions. It is safer and wiser to adopt that course.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I have not the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has nine minutes remaining.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I hope not to consume so much time. I want simply to say that I have become entirely sick and tired of this constant attempt in the House, in the way of legislation, to control the price of cotton. That has been a constant effort for years, and various schemes have been brought in here to control that sort of thing, and it is always to control it toward an upward price. There is no manufacturer of cotton goods in my district, and I am not at all interested for my constituents in that way, but I can not help feeling a sort of sympathy for the general Democratic idea that we have here that the price of commodities ought to go down and not up. [Applause and laughter.]

I am surprised at you gentlemen and at your attitude, trying here to make a fictitious price for cotton—to raise the price in order to benefit your constituents—while imposing a tax, which the increased price would be, upon all the people of the United States who clothe themselves with cotton goods.

I am surprised that you will pass laws depriving the Attorney General's office of a fund to prosecute anybody who is a farmer or who is a member of the labor union for committing some acts which on the part of any other citizen of the United States would be a crime. Yet some gentlemen in a western State—some grangers—recently met and resolved that the minimum price for cotton should be 15 cents a pound, and they resolved that they would not sell a pound for any less than that; and they are trying to make that the universal price in the United States.

I am opposed to that sort of legislation. It may suit the majority of this House. If it does, go on and pass it. Of course, there is no reason why you should be consistent, because no one expects that you will be.

Mr. BROWN of New York rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to his colleague?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, how much time did the gentleman from New York yield back?

Mr. PAYNE. I am going to vote against both of these propositions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York yields back three minutes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, owing to the limited time allotted to me it will be impossible for me to present my views upon this subject, but I wish to say, sir, that as a cotton grower, as a Representative of a great cotton district in the second cotton State of this Union, I am opposed to gambling in cotton, and I believe that that is the view of a vast majority of the people who are the cotton raisers in the great State of Georgia. I am opposed to both of these amendments. I view these amendments as licenses granted by this great Government for gambling in cotton—

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I will.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does not the gentleman think that the Clarke amendment will prevent gambling in cotton?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I do not; if you make it $25 a bale, I will vote for it.

Mr. CARAWAY. It is, at least, a step in the right direction.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I do not think so. I think if we are in earnest in desiring to check this gambling in cotton, we should come out in the open and pass a law that will check it, a law that will stop it. I much prefer to deal with the cotton spinner than the cotton gambler. I wish to say this: That the farmers of this great country are better organized to-day than they have ever been before. There are to-day over 3,000,000 of farmers in the great farmers' union, and they are thinking more, they are reading more, they are studying more than they have ever done before, and these farmers intend to organize themselves and to protect themselves against these 450 or 500 men in Wall Street—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT].

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, I spent a large part of my early business life in close contact with the Board of Trade of Chicago. I saw the game there, and I saw how it was played. I know the evils of gambling, and I know the parasitic element of gambling. I believe this parasitic element should be eliminated, but I do not believe that we can disassociate the ordinary exchanges of this country from the parasitic gambling element in any such heedless or quick way as this. I would not poison the dog to destroy the fleas. The legitimate business of the country is now intertwined and mixed up with gambling. We ought steadily and carefully work to find ways of eliminating the gambling element and at the same time to preserve the open competitive market.

The history of the oil industry shows that as soon as the open exchanges were stopped the trust got control of the market; and I know of my own knowledge that if we had not had an open market on the board of trade in Chicago that Messrs. A, B, and C, and the other people who owned the elevators and secured rebates from the railroads, would have treated the farmers to much worse prices than they secured by the operations under the open-market system; and so I believe that while we ought to eliminate the gambling features from the handling of farm products of all kinds—cotton, corn, grain, and everything else—we ought to go at it carefully and with all the facts in view.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I also represent a district which grows cotton, and in view of the vote which I expect to cast upon the question now before us I have asked for a minute to explain my position. I do not wish to be hypocritically criticized on account of my vote. I favor legislation which will destroy gambling in agricultural products, but I do not believe that the propositions which we now have before us are the ones which should be adopted.

I raise not so much cotton, probably, in my district as other gentlemen, but at least enough that my constituents will take knowledge of what I do and how I vote on the propositions.

We should go at it in a different way. We should root out the evil in a stronger fashion than is here attempted to be done. We can not do it in the way that it is attempted to be done here. I simply wanted to make these remarks, so that nobody may say that in the light of the vote which I expect to cast on this proposition I am against legislation destroying gambling in agricultural products. I am afraid the proposition before us will place a burden of taxation upon the grower of cotton, and, more than that, legalize the gambling which we desire to end. Let us have a real measure which will destroy the gamblers and benefit the farmers.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, in the brief time allotted for the discussion of this measure, it is not possible to enter into the merits of either proposition; and even if time were at the disposal of the House, the temper of many of the Members is such that it would be impossible calmly and deliberately to consider the character of the legislation proposed.

This legislation, Mr. Speaker, will seriously affect a crop worth this year one thousand million dollars, upon which the prosperity of the fair Southland depends. Without consideration, without opportunity for discussion, without any attempt to explain in detail and seriously how any of the provisions of either one of these propositions will affect the prosperity of those producing this crop, it is proposed in this hasty manner to enact this legislation. It does not belong upon this tariff bill. It should not be there. The Democratic Party, with a great majority in the House, and with a sufficient majority in the Senate, to enact legislation in a deliberate and proper manner which would eliminate whatever abuses may pertain to the exchanges of the country, should not attempt to legislate upon so important a matter in the dark. As I am opposed to both propositions, I shall vote "no" on the motion to recede from the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment. And then I believe, as all other Members must be certain, that the Senate will speedily recede from this amendment and permit the speedy enactment of the tariff law which the country has so long been expecting. I hope those Members who believe that legislation of this important character should not be rushed to conclusion, but that full opportunity should be given to consider it freely and safeguard all legitimate interests, will vote "no" upon the motion to recede and end at this time this unwise and ill-advised attempt to regulate interests so vast, so important, and so vital to the prosperity of all the people of the country. [Applause.]

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 155, noes 126.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FERRIS. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FERRIS. A number of us here are voting under misapprehension. For instance, I am voting "aye" for one purpose and another is voting "aye" for another purpose.

The SPEAKER. If the ayes carry it, it simply means that they recede from their disagreement to this Senate cotton amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. What is the parliamentary status if the ayes succeed?

The SPEAKER. It puts it in the same situation it would have been in if the House had never disagreed. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. A vote "nay" means a vote against the Clarke amendment, does it not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has explained it once. If the "yeas" carry it, then the matter is exactly where it was when we started, when the bill was brought in here with the Senate amendment. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 203, nays 137, answered "present" 1, not voting 87, as follows:

YEAS—203.

Abercrombie	Dies	Hull	Reed
Allen	Dillon	Jacoway	Reilly, Wis.
Anderson	Dixon	Johnson, Ky.	Rogers
Anthony	Donohoe	Jones	Rouse
Aswell	Donovan	Kelly, Pa.	Rubey
Avis	Doolittle	Kennedy, Iowa	Rucker
Baker	Eagan	Kindel	Rupley
Barkley	Eagle	Kinkaid, Nebr.	Saunders
Barnhart	Elder	Kitchin	Scully
Barton	Estopinal	Kreider	Seldomridge
Beall, Tex.	Faison	Lafferty	Sharp
Blackmon	Falconer	La Follette	Sims
Borchers	Farr	Langham	Sinnott
Bowdler	Fergusson	Langley	Sisson
Brockson	Ferris	Lazarus	Smith, N. Y.
Brodbeck	Fields	Lee, Pa.	Smith, Tex.
Broussard	FitzHenry	Leshner	Sparkman
Brown, W. Va.	Flood, Va.	Lever	Stafford
Browne, Wis.	Floyd, Ark.	Lewis, Md.	Stanley
Brumbaugh	Foster	Logue	Stedman
Buchanan, Ill.	Fowler	Lonergan	Stephens, Miss.
Buchanan, Tex.	Gard	McKellar	Stephens, Nebr.
Bulkeley	Garner	MacDonald	Stone
Burgess	Garrett, Tenn.	Maguire, Nebr.	Stringer
Burnett	Garrett, Tex.	Mahan	Summers
Butler	Gerry	Manahan	Sutherland
Byrns, Tenn.	Gilmore	Mapes	Switzer
Callaway	Glass	Mitchell	Tavener
Campbell	Goeke	Moon	Taylor, Ala.
Candler, Miss.	Good	Morgan, La.	Taylor, Ark.
Caraway	Gray	Morgan, Okla.	Taylor, Colo.
Carlin	Greene, Vt.	Moss, Ind.	Taylor, N. Y.
Carr	Gregg	Moss, W. Va.	Ten Eyck
Casey	Griest	Murdoch	Thacher
Church	Gudger	Murray, Okla.	Thomas
Clancy	Hamill	O'Hair	Thompson, Okla.
Claypool	Hammond	Oldfield	Underwood
Clayton	Hardy	O'Shaunessy	Vaughan
Collier	Harrison	Padgett	Walsh
Connelly, Kans.	Hart	Page	Walters
Connolly, Iowa	Haugen	Palmer	Watkins
Cooper	Hay	Plumley	Weaver
Copley	Heflin	Porter	Webb
Covington	Helm	Post	Williams
Cox	Helvering	Pou	Willis
Cramton	Hensley	Powers	Wingo
Crosser	Hill	Ragsdale	Witherspoon
Davenport	Hinebaugh	Rainey	Woodruff
Decker	Hobson	Raker	Woods
Dershem	Houston	Rauch	Young, Tex.
Dickinson	Hulings	Rayburn

NAYS—137.

Alken	Fitzgerald	Kirkpatrick	Sherwood
Alney	Fordney	Knowland, J. R.	Shreve
Alexander	Frear	Konop	Slayden
Ashbrook	French	Lee, Ga.	Slomp
Austin	Gallagher	Levy	Small
Bailey	George	Linthicum	Smith, Idaho
Baltz	Gillett	Lobeck	Smith, Saml. W.
Barchfeld	Gittins	McAndrews	Steenerson
Bartlett	Goldfogle	McClellan	Stephens, Cal.
Beakes	Gordon	McCoy	Stevens, N. H.
Bell, Ga.	Goulden	McDermott	Stout
Booher	Greene, Mass.	McGillcuddy	Taggart
Britten	Griffin	Maher	Talcott, N. Y.
Brown, N. Y.	Guernsey	Metz	Temple
Browning	Hamilton, Mich.	Mondell	Thomson, Ill.
Bruckner	Hamilton, N. Y.	Montague	Townner
Burke, Pa.	Hardwick	Moore	Townsend
Byrnes, S. C.	Hawley	Morin	Treadway
Calder	Hayden	Mott	Tribble
Carew	Hayes	Murray, Mass.	Tuttle
Conry	Hinds	O'Brien	Underhill
Crisp	Holland	Oglesby	Vare
Cullop	Howard	O'Leary	Volstead
Curry	Howell	Parker	Walker
Dale	Hughes, Ga.	Patten, N. Y.	Wallin
Davis	Humphreys, Miss.	Patton, Pa.	Watson
Deltrick	Igoe	Payne	Whaley
Dent	Johnson, S. C.	Peters, Mass.	Whitacre
Difenderfer	Johnson, Utah	Phelan	White
Doelling	Johnson, Wash.	Reilly, Conn.	Wilson, Fla.
Doughton	Keister	Riordan	Wilson, N. Y.
Driscoll	Kennedy, R. I.	Roberts, Mass.	Winslow
Dunn	Kent	Russell
Edmonds	Key, Ohio	Sells
Esch	Kinkead, N. J.	Sherley

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1.

Cary

NOT VOTING—87.

Adair	Cline	Gorman	Kiess, Pa.
Adamson	Curley	Graham, Ill.	Korbly
Anshberry	Danforth	Graham, Pa.	L'Engle
Bartholdt	Doremus	Green, Iowa	Lenroot
Bathrick	Dupré	Hamlin	Lewis, Pa.
Bell, Cal.	Dyer	Helgesen	Lieb
Borland	Edwards	Henry	Lindbergh
Bremner	Evans	Hoxworth	Lindquist
Bryan	Fairchild	Hughes, W. Va.	Lloyd
Burke, S. Dak.	Fess	Humphrey, Wash.	McGuire, Okla.
Burke, Wis.	Finley	Kahn	McKenzie
Cantrill	Francis	Keating	McLaughlin
Carter	Gardner	Kelley, Mich.	Madden
Chandler, N. Y.	Godwin, N. C.	Kennedy, Conn.	Mann
Clark, Fla.	Goodwin, Ark.	Kettner	Martin

Merritt
Miller
Morrison
Neeley
Nelson
Nolan, J. I.
Norton

Pepper
Peters, Me.
Peterson
Platt
Prouty
Quinn
Richardson

Roberts, Nev.
Rothermel
Sabath
Scott
Shackleford
Sloan
Smith, J. M. C.

Smith, Md.
Smith, Minn.
Stephens, Tex.
Stevens, Minn.
Talbot, Md.
Young, N. Dak.

So the motion to recede from the disagreement to the Senate amendment numbered 609 was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. PEPPER with Mr. SLOAN.

Mr. DUPRE (for) with Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota (against);

Balance of the day:

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina with Mr. KAHN.

Until further notice:

Mr. LLOYD with Mr. MANN.

Mr. KORBLY with Mr. DYER.

Mr. CANTRILL with Mr. HELGESEN.

Mr. HAMLIN with Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD with Mr. LINDBERGH.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois with Mr. PETERS of Maine.

Mr. CURLEY with Mr. NORTON.

Mr. QUINN with Mr. SMITH of Minnesota.

Mr. BREMNER with Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania.

Mr. NEELEY with Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania.

Mr. ADAMSON with Mr. McLAUGHLIN.

Mr. MORRISON with Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin with Mr. CARY.

Mr. KEATING with Mr. PLATT.

Mr. ROTHERMEL with Mr. FESS.

Mr. HENRY with Mr. LEWIS of Pennsylvania.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland with Mr. MERRITT.

Mr. ANSBERRY with Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia.

Mr. PETERSON with Mr. LINDQUIST.

Mr. GORMAN with Mr. MCKENZIE.

Mr. ADAIR with Mr. FAIRCHILD.

After vote and until further notice:

Mr. KETTNER with Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. BRODBECK. Mr. Speaker, I inadvertently answered when the name of the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BATHRICK, was called. I was in the rear of the room, and could not hear the names distinctly.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK] vote at all?

Mr. BRODBECK. I do not know.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRODBECK] recorded in the way he wants to be recorded? Did he vote when his own name was called?

Mr. BRODBECK. I did.

The SPEAKER. How did the gentleman vote?

Mr. BRODBECK. I voted "aye."

The SPEAKER. Is that the way the gentleman wants to be recorded?

Mr. BRODBECK. Yes. I only wanted to state that I inadvertently voted also when the name of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK] was called.

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the room listening when his name was called?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. I was not. I was in the adjoining room.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The motion to recede is carried.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion to concur, with the amendment which has been read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to concur, with the amendment which the Clerk read some time ago.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEFLIN. If this motion prevails which the gentleman from Alabama now makes, there will be no opportunity to vote on the Clarke amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; there will be no opportunity at this time. Of course, I do not know what the Senate may do. The Senate may send it back to the House again, insisting on its amendment.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOBSON. Is not the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] the preferential motion?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. MURDOCK. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. The purpose of the conference between the two Houses is to bring them together; therefore a motion which seeks to get the two Houses together the more readily ought to have the preference. Now, does not the motion to concur take precedence over the motion to concur with an amendment?

The SPEAKER. I do not know how they ever got the practice. I know what the practice has been for a long time. The gentleman's question is not really a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The rule is that when an amendment is in disagreement, whatever will bring the two Houses together most quickly is preferential.

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the House has just receded from its disagreement. This amendment is not now in disagreement and it is before the House for action, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has an amendment to the pending Senate amendment.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. But if the House adopts the Clarke amendment it becomes a law?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Why should not that be preferential?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The question now before the House is the Senate amendment, and the House is entitled first to perfect that amendment before the other question is taken.

The SPEAKER. There is no question about what the practice of the House is. There are three propositions mixed up in this. The first one is the motion to recede and concur. That is the motion made by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], and it takes precedence over the motion to recede and concur with an amendment. The second proposition is that if any gentleman demanded a separate vote, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] did, he could have it. Then, if that carries, the third proposition is that, after receding, the motion to concur with an amendment takes precedence over the motion to concur, and the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is the preferential motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this motion [cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]—I ask unanimous consent that debate on this motion be limited to 30 minutes, one-half to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that debate on this proposition be limited to 30 minutes, half the time to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, a parliamentary inquiry. It is not necessary for me to renew my motion to concur, is it? That is pending?

The SPEAKER. That is still pending.

Mr. WINGO. I wish to state to the gentleman from Alabama that I have requests for a great deal more time than he has indicated, and I should like at least 20 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will agree that the gentleman from Arkansas may have 20 minutes, and that I may have 10 minutes. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama modifies his unanimous-consent request by asking that the debate shall be confined to 30 minutes, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] to have 20 minutes and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to have 10 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. At the end of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. At the end of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas if he can give me some time? This is a more important proposition than the other.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I can give the gentleman from Kansas four minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is powerful slight.

Mr. WINGO. It is as good as I can do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard upon this proposition. I do not think there is any such great hurry here for a few moments. I would like to be heard upon it.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman reserving the right to object?

Mr. HULINGS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. HULINGS. Five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit that to the gentlemen who are to control the time. Is there objection?

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, I have reserved the right to object to say that I would like to have five minutes' time.

Mr. WINGO. I can not yield the gentleman from Pennsylvania any time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have already given away two-thirds of the time, but I will do this to expedite the matter: I will ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may have 5 minutes, the gentleman from Arkansas 20 minutes, and that I may have 10 minutes, and that at the end of that time all debate shall be closed and the previous question considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama modifies his request for unanimous consent, and asks that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS] may have 5 minutes, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] 20 minutes, and that he himself have 10 minutes, and that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. If the Underwood motion to concur with an amendment is voted down, then is a motion to concur with the Clarke amendment in order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. WINGO. That amendment is pending. In response to my parliamentary inquiry a moment ago the Chair stated that it was not necessary for me to repeat that motion.

The SPEAKER. It is not necessary to repeat it, because it is now pending. The only difference is that the Underwood motion is preferential. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will not consume my time now, but will allow the other gentlemen to use their time. There may be but one concluding speech.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

[Mr. GARNER addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. If no other gentleman wishes to speak, the Chair will put the question.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS] use his time now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, the important legislation which is sought to be attached as a rider to the tariff bill might, in my opinion, be more appropriately discussed as an independent measure. But inasmuch as the Clarke amendment made in the Senate to the House bill, to which the conferees on the part of the House seem unable to agree; and inasmuch as it is the intention for the House to instruct its conferees further so that there may be a possible agreement, I crave the indulgence of the House that I may offer some observations upon the subject.

No man on this floor need be told of the great injury that is done to the country by stock gambling. In the great exchanges the transactions run into thousands of millions every year. Of this a very small part is legitimate business, comprising a valuable and important function of trade, but 95 per cent of it is gambling pure and simple, a curse to honest business, demoralizing the conscience of the people, tending to sloth and indolence, and beggaring its victims by the thousands.

Its operators—smooth, well fed—rarely play the game themselves. They roll the ball, they deal the cards, and collect the rake-off which the suckers bring to them. I dare say 99 per cent of all the transactions, whether it be in stocks, grain, or cotton, are sales of nothing to be delivered and purchases of nothing in existence; mere settlements of wagers on the future price of the chosen commodity, which are held by all courts as gambling contracts not enforceable at law.

The right to "deal the cards," to "roll the ball" is so valuable that seats in these exchanges are valued at twenty, thirty, fifty, and ninety thousand dollars, and the guild—the exchange—making its own laws enforces the contracts of its members on penalty of losing their seats.

Besides these great exchanges, they have their feeders in every city and almost every town. Wherever you go you will find an office and its board of quotations, some of them executing their orders in regular exchanges and some of them merely bucketing their orders.

There are probably few men on this floor who do not know of men who were industrious, prosperous citizens, who now spend their time hanging about such places, mere loafers and wrecks from playing the market.

The police raid gambling joints, the United States Government spent years of effort to suppress lotteries, but lotteries, poker, roulette, faro, and all other gambling, so far as moral degeneracy of character, bankruptcy, and shiftlessness are concerned, sink into insignificance compared with evil results of stock gambling. [Applause.]

The power of the Government to legislate on this subject resides in its power to tax.

Recognizing that speculation is a legitimate element in many kinds of business, that it is entirely proper and legitimate for a man to contract to deliver in the future a thing that may not yet exist, the proposition is to require the delivery of the thing sold, by taxing all sales not followed by delivery, and thus prohibiting bucketing, wash sales, and mere wagers on the fluctuation of the market.

The Clarke amendment seeks to enforce such prohibition by a tax on futures on cotton, to be rebated upon the delivery of the goods.

It is conceded that the only warrant Congress has to enact such legislation is as a revenue measure, yet it seems to me that a revenue measure that by no possibility can produce revenue except by a violation of the prohibition is not a revenue measure at all, but a penal statute.

And with all due deference to the distinguished lawyers who have considered the subject, and have doubtless canvassed the validity of the measure, it is with much hesitation that I suggest that the measure is not a revenue measure, is not designed to produce revenue, and is therefore unconstitutional.

The suggestion offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] I believe is very good, as far as it goes, but if I may be allowed to suggest, there is now a bill in committee which has been carefully prepared, which deals with this question purely as a revenue measure, which relates not only to cotton but to grain, stocks, and all other commodities which are made the vehicle of gambling operations, and which incidentally but effectually will prohibit gambling in stock exchanges as well as in its feeders and the bucket shops scattered all over the country.

This bill is known as H. R. 7360, and was introduced by me, and if I were permitted would offer it as an amendment or substitute for the measure proposed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. But by the rules provided this can not be done, and no Member of the House, whether favorable or not, under the peculiar rules invoked, may even offer his suggestions to the House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to read for the edification of some of my Democratic brethren that part of the Democratic platform of last year relating to gambling in farm products:

We believe in encouraging the development of a modern system of agriculture and a systematic effort to improve the conditions of trade in farm products so as to benefit both the consumers and producers. And as an efficient means to this end we favor the enactment by Congress of legislation that will suppress the pernicious practice of gambling in agricultural products by organized exchanges or others.

If we are to keep the faith and redeem the pledges in that platform we must pass what is known as the Clarke amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Not now. I regret that I can not. I have but a few minutes to discuss the question.

Many of us from the South have believed, and do now believe, that the practice of gambling in cotton futures on the stock exchanges is detrimental to the general welfare of the people and to the interest of the cotton producers of the country. The system worked within the cotton exchanges, and I speak more particularly of the New York exchange, wherein a few individuals delegate unto themselves the right and power to raise and lower the price of cotton is so well known that I shall not impose upon the patience of the House with any description of the secretive and pernicious workings, or its evil and destructive effects. Suffice it to say, that the game is always played to the advantage of the men on the inside and to the ill effects of the men who "by the sweat of their brow" make the fleecy staple, and under every rule of justice should be entitled to have the price fixed by the law of supply and demand.

To my mind no man can justify his position in legalizing an unlawful act.

Now let us analyze the two amendments that are presented for our consideration. The Underwood proposition, or the Smith-Lever amendment, is a modification of the Clarke amendment. The wording of the two amendments, excepting the proviso in the Clarke amendment and the proviso in the Underwood amendment are substantially the same. Both amendments start out by stating that—

Upon the sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, any cotton for future delivery, made in the future-contract market at or in any cotton exchange, etc., there is hereby levied a tax in the nature of an excise equal to one-tenth of 1 per cent per pound on the quantity of cotton mentioned and described in such contract.

The Clarke amendment following these words then says:

Provided, That in all cases where the quantity and kind of cotton mentioned and described in such contract is actually delivered, in compliance and in good faith therewith, by the seller to the buyer therein respectively named, the tax levied by this section shall be refunded to the party paying the same, etc.

The Underwood proposition strikes out this proviso and inserts one that is ambiguous and, in my opinion, meaningless, so far as compelling the actual delivery of the cotton bought on the exchanges under future contracts. It provides that in the making of these future contracts, as embodied in section 1, if the contract contains certain stipulations, then the tax shall be reduced to 50 cents per 100 bales. Now, the stipulations that must be embraced in the future contracts are, terms of the contract, parties to same, signature of the parties, number of bales of cotton involved in the contract, price per pound of middling cotton, date of purchase, the month in which the contract is to be fulfilled or settled, that the cotton mentioned shall be within the grade limits fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and that in the settlement of such contracts by the actual delivery of the cotton involved therein, where cotton other than the basis grade is delivered, the difference above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for such grades shall be determined by the actual commercial difference in value thereof established by bona fide sales of spot cotton of same grades, respectively, made in actual trade upon the sixth business day prior to the settlement of the contract, etc.

The only allusion to the delivery of cotton under the Underwood amendment is found in the proviso that if the contract provides that in the settlement of such contract by the actual delivery of the cotton involved therein, where the cotton other than the basis grade is delivered, the difference above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for such grades shall be determined by the actual commercial differences in value as established by bona fide sales of spot cotton of the same grades on the sixth business day prior to the settlement of the contract, etc.

I submit that the only reasonable construction of the Underwood amendment, so far as it concerns the delivery of the cotton, is that if the contract embodies and stipulates certain things, among others, namely, that in the settlement of such contract by the actual delivery of the cotton, where cotton other than the basis grade is delivered, the difference in the contract shall be determined by the actual commercial differences in value or established by bona fide sales of spot cotton of the same grades upon the sixth business day prior to the settlement of the contract, etc., then the tax shall be 50 cents per hundred bales. There is no provision that it shall be delivered.

The Clarke amendment specifically states that the tax is refunded if the delivery of the cotton under the contract is made. The main difference therefore in the two amendments is that one, the Clarke amendment, in clear, unequivocal terms imposes a tax of 50 cents a bale on all cotton future contracts and refunds it in the event the cotton is actually delivered. Under the Underwood proposition, if the contract for cotton futures is so written that it stipulates certain things, the tax will be only 50 cents per 100 bales; and if the cotton is not delivered according to the grades named in the contract, the small tax of 50 cents per 100 bales must be paid and the marginal difference in the price of the grade. Now, if the seller of the cotton does not desire or refuses to deliver the cotton and will pay the marginal difference in the price, I submit that under the wording of the Underwood amendment, if the stipulations contained in the bill are embraced in the contract, no delivery can be compelled, and only the tax of 50 cents per 100 bales can be levied.

The proposition therefore resolves itself into the question of whether or not you propose by your vote to-day to accept an amendment, that has already passed the Senate and needs only our approval, that will destroy the speculative features of the cotton exchange, or whether you propose by your vote to reject the tender that the Senate offers you and vote for a measure that not only legalizes gambling in cotton futures by taxing it 50 cents per 100 bales, but you impose at the same time a tax on legitimate contracts.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I am sorry; I have not the time.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I have only a few minutes; I can not.

This is not the first time, Mr. Speaker, that this question has been presented to this House in the present form. In the Fifty-third Congress Mr. Hatch, of Missouri, introduced a similar bill that proposed to eliminate the gambling features of the cotton exchange by taxation. It was more drastic than the Clarke amendment, and when it came up for consideration on the floor of this House, and afterwards in the Senate, the same constitutional arguments were made by the opponents of this legislation as have been made in opposition to the pending amendments. But, notwithstanding these arguments, that bill passed the House, and afterwards the Senate, by substantial majorities; and, in looking over the list of Members of the Fifty-third Congress who voted for this bill, I find the name of the distinguished Speaker of this House [Mr. CLARK], Senator WILLIAMS, and ex-Senator Money, of my State, and the present Secretary of State, Mr. Bryan, all of whom were then Members of this body. Over in the other end of the Capitol, that great constitutional lawyer and Mississippian, Senator George, not only voted for it but championed it on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, those who oppose this measure because they say it is undemocratic to tax an industry or business out of existence and that the only function of the power of taxation by the Federal Government is to raise revenue for the economical administration of the Government, can not find shelter for that statement under Democratic principles and Democratic platforms. The Democratic Party, it is true, does not believe in destroying a legitimate industry or legitimate business by the strong arm of taxation, but it will sanction and approve—because it believes in equal rights to all and special privilege to none—the use of the taxing power of the Government to destroy an illegitimate business—a business built upon a scheme that allows a gang of gamblers to tie the hands and close the mouths of the innocent cotton producers of this country and compels them to accept a price for their cotton without regard to justice and the law of supply and demand.

But that was not the only bill that has passed this House proposing to eliminate gambling in cotton futures. In the Sixty-first Congress the Scott bill passed. In the Sixty-second Congress the Beall bill passed. Both of these measures would have destroyed the speculative features of the cotton exchange. Many of you whose voices are now raised against this measure voted for these bills. They failed to pass the Senate, and the cause of their failure was laid at the feet of the Senate. But to-day we have an opportunity the like of which may never come to us again. The Senate has passed the Clarke amendment. All that it needs to become a law is that we pass it to-day. If we adopt the Underwood bill, it will have to go back to the Senate for ratification. The probable consequence will be that no legislation against gambling in cotton futures will be enacted. I appeal to those of you who are opposed to the corrupt and illegal practice of gambling in cotton futures not to parley further at the risk of getting no legislation at this session on this subject, but to accept the Clarke amendment at this most opportune time. To-day by your vote you either answer the demands of the stock gambler or the crying appeals of the cotton producer. Which will you heed? I hope the latter. [Applause.]

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, this is the appointed hour. If gentlemen of the House are against gambling in cotton futures, the thing to do here is to vote down the Underwood amendment and then vote up the Wingo motion to concur in the Clarke amendment.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. I can not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. ASWELL. Why do you not make it apply to corn? Why do you confine it to cotton?

Mr. MURDOCK. I decline to yield, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas declines to yield. These interruptions will not be taken out of the gentleman's time. The gentleman is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MURDOCK. When we come face to face with a gigantic evil in this country, as cotton gambling is, why do we back and fill? Why should we hesitate? Why should we once more add to the long history of futile efforts to supply a remedy for an admitted evil? Why dodge and evade? Why not face this issue at this hour and go on through with this proposition to definite remedial action? I say to the gentlemen from the South and the West—

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. No; I will not yield. I decline to yield to the gentleman. I desire to use all my four minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas declines to yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. I ask the Speaker to protect me in my time.

The SPEAKER. When a gentleman has the floor he is entitled to it.

Mr. MURDOCK. I say particularly to the gentlemen from the South and the West that 20 years ago—

Mr. ASWELL. Why did not Roosevelt do it?

Mr. MURDOCK. When both the farmers of the South and West 20 years ago were laboring under a common distress, deeply in debt, poorly paid for their products, when they were impeaching customs in society which oppressed them, with a certainty and clarity of vision, keener because of their hardships, the men of the West and the South brought pressure to bear upon this body and the Senate which forced legislation upon this line, and Mr. Hatch, after years of study and of labor, introduced a bill which is in effect the Clarke bill.

What happened then? I want the Members from the South and the West, regardless of party, to remember what happened. The Hatch bill passed the House by 40 majority, and it went to the Senate, was fully discussed there, and passed the United States Senate by a majority of 10. When it came back to the House what happened? The thing that happens over and over again when Congress is on the point of doing something remedial, something specific, something that will reach and relieve the sore spot. By some contrivance, some design, some neglect, with the excuse that there was not enough time to further consider it, the Hatch bill died in the House. And this after it had passed both branches of Congress.

Years passed, and there came another bill into this House, from the Republican side this time. It was carefully prepared and finally fully discussed, and this House passed another bill to prohibit gambling in cotton futures. This was three years ago. The bill went to the Senate, and the Senate let it die.

This year Senator CLARKE of Arkansas, who has studied this question for years, put a provision in the tariff bill which will reach gambling in cotton futures. It will wipe out the iniquitous custom. The Underwood proposition will not wipe it out. The Underwood proposition legalizes and legitimizes gambling in futures.

What is the situation? Let me contrast two groups in society. Let me say to my southern and western friends that the New York Cotton Exchange does not deal in spot cotton. It deals only in futures. It gambles wholly. Its membership is limited to 450 men, mostly kid-glove gentlemen of wealth and leisure. Cotton is the chief production of 11 States in this Union. There is a billion dollars' worth of cotton produced almost every year. It is produced by men who work from 12 to 14 and 16 hours a day. Every expert who has gone into this subject says that dealing in cotton futures depresses the price of spot cotton. Why should you tie up to the leisurely crew down in the cotton exchange in New York and turn against the men in your district who work 14 hours a day to produce the cotton. [Applause.] Here is your chance, gentlemen. This evening, if you vote for the Underwood proposition, you will have no future chance at this session, or probably in this Congress, at gambling in cotton futures. If you vote down the Underwood proposition and let us get at the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas to concur in Senator Clarke's amendment, we will here and now put a stop to cotton-future gambling forever. [Applause.]

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON].

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, gambling in cotton is an unmitigated evil. It is a constant means of depressing the legitimate price of cotton and is demoralizing in business. It has cost and is costing the southern people and the people of the United States untold millions. For generations the farmers have been unanimous in their demand for its suppression. No demonstration of this need is clearer than the recent depression of the price of cotton by the gamblers with each step of the advancement of the Clarke amendment. Twice these gamblers struck down the price $3 a bale for the very purpose of fooling the farmers and getting them to telegraph their Senators and Representatives to oppose the measure they had been demanding for 20 years. Now, we can get this amendment. It becomes law upon the voting down of the Underwood amendment to license and voting up the Clarke amendment to suppress. [Applause.]

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from Alabama desires to yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will say that we have the right to conclude, and there will be but one speech on this side. I will yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] when the gentleman from Arkansas has used his time.

Mr. WINGO. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want every man in this House who can read the English language and understand it, and who has any respect for the plain English of a Democratic platform, to listen to just one expression in the Baltimore platform on this subject:

We favor the enactment by Congress of legislation that will suppress the pernicious practice of gambling in agricultural products by organized exchanges or others.

Legislation by whom? By Congress. What is this body? Is not this Congress? Then this is directed to you, my friends. Are you going to dodge? "To suppress." Is that to regulate? I am in favor of "regulating" by suppression, by destruction. Every measure that you have voted for on this subject in this House has been a measure of destruction. There was a proposition here to tax cotton futures 5 cents a pound, or $25 a bale, over 20 years ago in the Hatch bill. Congress voted for it. Was not that destruction? Was not that using the taxing power to destroy and not to get revenue? There is a bare possibility that a little revenue will come in under this Clarke amendment; but the purpose of it is destruction. The demand of the platform is destruction. When you are going to destroy a thing, the only wise way to do is to consider the best means of destruction. This cotton-gambling serpent lies here before you. Will you cut its head off with Senator Clarke's broadsword, or will you clip its tail with the Underwood substitute? [Applause.] I say that with all due respect to my friend, because at heart he is not in favor of this. He may deny that statement, because he must as the leader of the House; but this ought to be called a subterfuge, because it does not destroy as pledged by our platform. It encourages gambling by legalizing and protecting it.

But you say, "Oh, we Democrats must not use the taxing power for any other purpose than to raise revenue." I want to prove to you right here how insincere you are. In 1863, in a Republican Congress in which there was not even a southern man who was a Democrat, the issues of State banks were destroyed by taxation. A few days ago we passed a currency bill, and not a Democrat in this House opened his mouth in favor of repealing that pernicious, destructive, State bank Republican taxation measure. [Applause.]

Some of you say, Why not destroy in some other way than by taxation? The Burleson bill, as he himself explained, was to destroy these dealings in cotton futures. The Scott bill was to destroy these dealings. The Beall bill was to destroy. The Clarke amendment is to destroy them by making them so unprofitable that no one will deal in them. The Underwood bill is to perpetuate the practice, to legalize the practice of buying that which you do not want and will not accept and pay for, and selling that which you have not and do not intend to acquire. That is all there is to it. We may just as well look at this thing in the face. Here is your opportunity. You can kill the snake by cutting off its head, or instead of that you can prolong its life by simply cutting off its tail. Democrats with courage, where do you stand?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, if you wish to legalize and put the stamp of legislative approval upon the rules under which the gamblers now deal in cotton on the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, you will vote for the Underwood amendment, because that amendment is nothing more than the present existing rules of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange. If, upon the other hand, you want to put these cotton gamblers out of business and close their gambling houses, you will vote against the Underwood amendment and vote to concur in the Clarke amendment.

Mr. Speaker, what is the difference between the Clarke amendment and the Underwood amendment? Let us examine the two together and see. By reading the Underwood amendment, which I hold in my hand, you will find that the first five or six paragraphs are nothing more than the provisions of the Clarke amendment, except that in copying the Clarke amendment they leave out that proviso of the Clarke amendment which would unquestionably force actual delivery of cotton and prohibit all gambling contracts. After cutting that out of the Clarke amendment the Underwood amendment then, by its last four or five paragraphs, provides in the nature of a proviso a provision which legalizes the gambling contracts, provided that they stipulate one of nine grades of cotton, which nine grades include the great bulk of the cotton crop of the South. In other words, the Underwood amendment strikes from the Clarke amendment its most vital provision, that which requires an actual delivery of the cotton, and adds to the Clarke amendment a provision which completely nullifies and destroys the Clarke amendment, thereby expressly legalizing and stipulating the terms of these gambling contracts which are sought to be outlawed by the Clarke amendment. The gentleman from Alabama admits that the Clarke amendment would suppress gambling in cotton futures, and furthermore admits that his amendment would simply regulate. The cotton farmers of the South have demanded and the last Democratic platform expressly pledged us to suppress these gambling transactions and not regulate them, as the Underwood amendment claims it will do. The Underwood amendment simply says to these gamblers, "You play your game according to certain rules, gambling only in nine grades of cotton, which comprise the great bulk of the cotton crop of the South, and you are exempt." In other words, the Underwood amendment legalizes the very practices that the Democratic Party pledged the cotton growers of the South it would suppress. I challenge any man on this floor to point to a single line in the Underwood amendment which contains a provision that does anything toward enforcing an actual delivery. It does no more than provide the rules and regulations by which they can settle their gambling contracts. I want you to notice carefully one of the provisions of the Underwood amendment. Let us suppose that settlement day is at hand on one of these gambling contracts. The Underwood amendment provides that these gambling contracts must be settled on the basis of the value of the grade of cotton in question, established by bona fide sales of spot cotton of the same grade in the market where the gambling contract was made. But let us suppose that the gambling contract was entered into on the New York Cotton Exchange and that there had been no bona fide sales of spot cotton on that exchange for six days preceding the settlement of the gambling contract. How, then, do the gamblers settle their differences? The Underwood amendment provides:

And in the event that there be no bona fide spot market in which spot sales are made from day to day at or in the place in which such future transaction takes place, then and in that case the said differences above or below the contract price shall be determined by taking the average of the aforesaid actual commercial differences in value in the spot markets at five places designated by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Commerce, as the said differences were established by the sales of spot cotton of the same grade, respectively, in such five markets upon the sixth business day prior to the settlement of the contract: Provided, That for the purposes of this paragraph such values in the said spot markets be based upon the standards for grades of cotton fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

In other words, when these gamblers come to settle their differences, if there have not been any actual cotton sales to establish the bona fide value of the grades called for in the contract and on which such settlement is sought, then in that event the Secretary of Agriculture, under the provisions of the Underwood amendment, virtually becomes the official umpire to settle the differences between these gamblers.

Mr. Speaker, if gentlemen who in the last Congress voted for the Bell bill, which was the old Scott bill, intended thereby to suppress gambling in cotton futures, and if we wish to carry out the pledge that we made to the southern cotton growers by the last Democratic platform, when we pledged the party to suppress gambling in cotton futures, then you can not vote for the Underwood amendment, because the Underwood amendment, instead of suppressing, will, in my judgment, legalize the vicious practices which are so detrimental to the cotton farmers of the South. But certain gentlemen say that they prefer the Scott bill to the Clarke amendment. Mr. Speaker, I have here a copy of the Scott bill which I had prepared to offer as a substitute for both of the pending amendments, and should have done so had I not been advised that such an amendment was not germane and could not be offered under the present parliamentary status. And while some of us may prefer the provisions of the Scott bill to the Clarke amendment, I do not think we should lose an opportunity to strike a blow at this great evil, which is doing so much injury to the cotton farmers of the South, simply because we can not get the particular law that we individually wish.

At the present moment we must choose between the Clarke amendment and the Underwood amendment. It is admitted that the Clarke amendment will suppress gambling in cotton futures, and that being true, there is no other alternative than to accept it. But, gentlemen, if you do not approve of the Clarke amendment, if you want to suppress gambling in cotton futures by some other method, such as the Scott bill, then I can not see how you can vote for the Underwood amendment, which is diametrically opposed to both the provisions of the Scott bill and the Clarke amendment. If you refuse to accept the Clarke amendment, simply because you prefer some other method, then you miss an opportunity to strike down gambling in cotton futures, as gentlemen well know that the present is the only opportunity that we will have at this session to strike a blow at this great evil.

Under leave of extension, which has been granted, I wish to notice the argument that is made in defense of gambling in cotton futures. It is contended by those who oppose this legislation driving the cotton exchanges out of business that they are necessary for the purpose of affording the cotton farmer a stable market for his cotton. In other words, this argument is that in order to have a steady market for actual cotton you must maintain a gamblers' market. You do not have a gamblers' market for wool, and yet the woolgrowers have a market steadier than the cotton market. As a matter of fact, the gamblers want a fluctuating market because a steady market is an unprofitable one to the gambler. It has been admitted by every man on the floor to-day who opposes the Clarke amendment that gambling in cotton futures depresses the price of cotton, and keeps the cotton market lower than it would be if this gambling were suppressed. This very admission completely answers the contention of those who say that the gamblers are necessary to a steady market. As a matter of fact, bona fide cotton exchanges, where cotton could be actually sold and delivered and stable market quotations had, are prevented from springing up by these gambling evils. I have frequently seen the cotton buyers on the streets in my home town refuse to bid on cotton until after the gambling exchange in New York had opened.

The reason for this is that these cotton buyers are instructed by their employers to pay for actual cotton a price that is a certain number of points below the price fixed by the gamblers on the New York Cotton Exchange. In other words, these 450 gamblers sitting in the New York Cotton Exchange fix the price of the cotton sold in every little town in the South. They rig the market and run it up or down just as one side or the other gets control of the market. If the bulls are in control, the market goes up, and when the bears are in control the market goes down, and, unfortunately for the cotton farmer, the bears are generally in control until after the crop passes out of the farmers' hands, and then the bulls get control of the market and prices go up.

But the question is asked, If you abolish these gambling exchanges, by what will the prices of the farmers' cotton be controlled? I answer that it will be controlled in the same manner that the price of wool and all of the other staple products are controlled. Now, the gamblers on the New York Cotton Exchange fix the price of the farmers' cotton, and the farmer is denied the right to say anything about what the price of his cotton shall be. But if you wipe out these gambling transactions and take the farmers' cotton out of competition with these fictitious gambling transactions, the cotton farmer will have a voice like the woolgrower has in the fixing of the price of wool, and he will have a voice like the hay grower has in the fixing of the price of hay. There is no hay and wool exchange to fix the price of wool and hay. Then why should the cotton farmers of the South be compelled to submit to the evils of the Cotton Exchange to fix the price of their product? All that the cotton farmers of the South ask is an open market, where real cotton is bought and sold and real cotton is delivered.

It has been well said that there is no crop raised involving more labor and toil than the cotton crop. The people who produce it truly earn their bread in the sweat of their brow. There is no crop raised about which there is so much uncertainty as there is about the cotton crop. From the time the seed goes into the ground until it is gathered and sold it is compassed about by uncertainty and danger. If the spring is dry, the seed does not germinate; if it is wet, it rots; if it is cold, the plant is stunted; if it rains too much in summer, the insects destroy it; if it is too dry, it does not produce; if storms come in the fall, it is wasted. Every insect that crawls or flies feeds upon it.

It does seem that the farmer who has to contend against all these conditions imposed by nature, against the elements, against all these creeping, crawling, and flying pests, when he has overcome and subdued them all and has gathered the product of his toil that is to clothe the world, it does seem that he should not be turned over to the mercies of the New York Cotton Exchange.

What interest do these gamblers have in cotton or the men who produce it? They do not plant it; why should they be permitted to fix its price? They do not toil in its production; why should they control the product of other men's toil. They are only interested in so manipulating the price as to secure the farmer's cotton at the lowest possible price. They care nothing for the farmer; they only seek to enrich themselves. Why permit an institution to exist whose only mission is to enrich its membership at the expense of others? What defense can be made of an organization to which no producer can go to sell his cotton and to which no consumer of cotton can go to buy it?

The farmers of the South come now to Congress and ask for help; they ask for protection against those who would gamble on their toil. The question is, To whom will Congress lend its ear? Will it hear the cry of the millions in the cotton fields; the cry of the old, whose backs are bent with toil; the cry of the little children who labor beneath the heat of the summer's sun, and in the cold of the winter, to plant this crop, to cultivate this crop, and to gather this crop; or will they listen to the wail of these self-confessed gamblers of the New York and New Orleans cotton exchanges?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I believe that all time has expired except the time that I control.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to say this in reference to the argument that is made by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Wingo], that he overlooks the fact that the substitute bill offered by myself requires a delivery of cotton, and that the method of settlement is that when they do not deliver one grade it fixes the basis on which they shall deliver another grade, but they are all Government grades, and some grade of actual spinning cotton must be delivered under this bill.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman point out the line and page where it requires actual delivery?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will read the bill—

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will point it out I will vote for his amendment. I have studied the bill carefully and I can not find it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, no question of greater importance to the South, the Nation, and the world has come before this extra session of Congress, or will come before it, than is that involved in the proposition upon which we are about to vote.

Cotton is an international product practically monopolized by the United States. About two-thirds of our annual crop are shipped to foreign markets and bring back to us sufficient foreign gold to keep the balance of trade in our favor. The least movement up or down in its price is felt distinctly in the capital of every civilized nation of the world. The method of its distribution has existed since the Civil War and is a most delicately adjusted and sensitive piece of machinery, easily thrown out of gear.

In what we are about to do we are confronting a critical situation, not created by us, but nevertheless existing, and, Mr. Speaker, it behooves us to act with courage and, at the same time, remembering the enormous possibilities for harm of a mistake, with caution and extreme prudence. This is no time for radicalism, nor is it the place for perfervid oratory. The wise course is that dictated by conservatism and a due regard for the frailties of human nature. We may afford to be mistaken with respect to some minor item in this tariff bill, but there can be no apology for any error into which we may fall about this proposition, for we are acting with full knowledge of the tremendousness of the issue involved and of the consequences of a mistaken action. Cotton is selling to-day in the local markets of the South for 14 cents per pound, or $70 per bale, and that gentleman is foolhardy who would recklessly tamper with the machinery by which the crop is being moved, unless he is certain beyond any shadow of doubt as to the effect of his action upon the price of this crop. No excuse will be sufficient to break the wrath of the farmer against him to whom may be traced responsibility for any "slump" in the price of cotton. The farmer expects us to meet our duty in the premises, but he will hold us to a strict accountability for any extreme measure which may result in harm to him. We are his representatives, and he demands the exercise of common sense upon our part.

The matter of the regulation of the cotton exchanges with a view of eliminating purely gambling transactions in contracts for the future delivery of cotton has been before Congress in some form or other for years. During my service two such bills have passed the House, but seemingly received little attention at the hand of the Senate; but unfortunately, I think, the Senate has added to this tariff bill what has become known as the Clarke amendment, having for its purpose the destruction of the cotton exchanges. The tariff bill is not the place for such legislation. It has not been considered by the proper committees of either House, but, be that as it may, the Senate has seen fit in its wisdom to place the responsibility upon the House, and I am sure we are not going to run away from it.

The debate has developed three very distinct lines of thought. One group of Members, satisfied with existing conditions in the conduct and methods of the exchanges, regards any legislation of any kind as unwise. This group includes those who in years gone by, in season and out, have been the constant defenders of the cotton exchanges and their methods. Added to these are those who sincerely, fearful of the consequences of any interference with the cotton exchanges at this time and under these circumstances, regard any legislation as inexpedient and probably dangerous.

Another group, believing the evils of the cotton exchanges to be inherent in and inseparable from their existence, would destroy them root and branch in order to accomplish the destruction of the methods about which complaint is made. Their plan is extermination; they would burn the barn to kill the rats.

A third group of Members, differing from those who can see nothing bad in the conduct of the cotton exchanges, and equally so from those who can see nothing good in them, would assume a conservative attitude in the solution of this complex problem. This group realizes that there are features connected with the conduct and operation of these exchanges which in themselves are uncommercial, uneconomic, and positively harmful and vicious. The refusal of certain of these exchanges to adopt the standard of grades fixed by the Government is inexcusable and indefensible and furnishes one of the chief sources of the most bitter criticism of their methods. Their insistence upon a continuance of the system of fixed differences in the settlement of contracts is likewise without excuse or reason. But notwithstanding this it is believed that these practices can be reached and eradicated without the necessity of destroying the exchanges through a proper exercise of the power given by the Constitution to regulate them through some system of governmental control and scrutiny. The cotton exchanges undoubtedly, properly controlled and, if necessary, supervised, can be made to perform most useful functions in the prompt distribution of the cotton crop and in giving at short intervals an accurate picture of the cotton trade. This third group of Members would correct by law the abuses of the exchanges and force them to serve the purposes of their creation.

I stand with this group because, in the first place, the opportunity is presented to-day for legislation, and I want to legislate. I have been seeking to do so ever since I became a Member of this body, and now that I have the chance I shall not miss taking advantage of it. Inaction at this time and under these circumstances is equivalent to an acquiescence in all the present practices and methods of the cotton exchanges. I am not satisfied with their methods. Years of study and investigation have convinced me that at least some of them have perverted their legitimate functions into a system of operation, through an unfair and indefensible contract, distinctly, positively, unequivocally hurtful to the cotton trade, and especially to the man who in the sweat of his brow produces the raw material. I am not willing by my vote to allow a continuance of these practices if I can help it, and if I thought for a moment that the exchanges could not be made by law to serve the cotton trade fairly and legitimately I would gladly join with those in an effort to exterminate them, for their existence would be justifiable no longer. To those who hesitate to act at this time out of a sincere fear that any action may disturb existing high prices of cotton, let me recall to your minds those other days, not so far gone, when, without rhyme or reason, and in accordance with no law of supply and demand, you have seen the price of this product hammered down, down, down until the loss to your people ran into the millions of dollars. Let me warn you that the opportunity is here to prevent a recurrence of such a situation. Either you must legislate now or take chances with the future. I prefer to deal with the present; I know something of it. The future is hidden from me. I have therefore voted to open up this question in the hope that we may legislate wisely for this great industry and the millions of human beings so intimately concerned in it.

I stand with the third group because my years of study and the best thought of students upon the question convince me that the practices of the cotton exchanges complained of by both producer and spinner can be eliminated without recourse to such radical, dangerous, and doubtful methods as are proposed by the Clarke amendment. This amendment may have in it no element of danger; it may be as a loaded dynamite. Who can tell what its effect may be upon the price of cotton at this time? Who can guarantee the farmer that such a violent disturbance of the machinery by which his crop is moved, and the advocates of this amendment admit their purpose to destroy the exchanges, will not result in a sudden reduction in the price of their cotton? I repeat, who is prophet enough among you to foretell what will happen?

Mr. Speaker, I am going to take no chances. I know what 1 cent a pound in the price of cotton means to the wealth and happiness of the people I have the honor to represent. I shall do now as I have always done, pursue what I regard as the conservative and safe course. I am satisfied in my own mind that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], commonly known as the Smith-Lever amendment, will bring about a gradual but certain reform in the methods of the cotton exchanges, and this reform will be in the direction demanded by the farmer and the manufacturer, the two elements most vitally concerned in the legislation. I want legislation, and want it now, but I want it in the shape of regulation and not by violent and sudden destruction.

Gentlemen who have preceded me have complained that this substitute for the Clarke amendment has not been well considered. This I deny. The fact is the proposition has been worked out most carefully by those who have given years of study to the operations of the cotton exchanges. The history of this substitute may throw some light upon it and have some weight with the membership of the House.

The amendment was drawn at my suggestion, if you will pardon the personal reference, by experts of the Departments of Agriculture and Commerce along lines of thought submitted to them by me. The general idea of the amendment follows closely the thought contained in a bill introduced into the United States Senate and favorably acted upon several times by its Committee on Agriculture, by the junior Senator from South Carolina, Senator SMITH, who has given not one day, not one year, but 20 years of thought to this problem. It is also drawn in direct line with the recommendations of the Herbert Knox Smith report, which came after a most exhaustive investigation of the cotton exchanges by the Bureau of Corporations several years ago under the direct authorization of this House. The practical difference in the plans is found in the different powers of the Constitution relied upon, Senator SMITH finding his in the commerce clause, and I, on account of the parliamentary situation, finding mine in its taxing power. In essential thought and purpose they are identical. The first draft of the bill, as handed me by the experts, was submitted by me to Postmaster General Burleson, for years a distinguished Member of this body and an admitted authority upon matters touching exchanges. As agreed upon by us, the amendment was put into the hands of the President of the United States, who after careful consideration of it and a thorough agreement with the objects sought to be attained by it placed it with his approval into the hands of Majority Leader UNDERWOOD. The House conferees accepted it, but it did not meet the approval of the Senate conferees, and hence it is being offered to-day as a substitute for the Senate proposition.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to my friend from Georgia I would like very much to do so, but I have only a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. LEVER. The platform declaration of the party has been read in your hearing and emphasized by those who favor the Clarke amendment as against the substitute. The statement that we are not living up to the party platform will hardly be taken seriously when it is remembered that our proposition, and not theirs, bears the indorsement of the first Democratic President the country has had in nearly 20 years. Are you gentlemen willing to say, do you believe, that Woodrow Wilson by his acquiescence in—yes, his affirmative assent to—this proposition is willing to give the country to understand that within less than eight months after the beginning of his administration he is going to violate one of the fundamental planks of the platform upon which he was elected? Is it reasonable? Can you think it seriously? Is it not the weapon of heated and excited debate?

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman please tell us when the President sent us a message on this question?

Mr. LEVER. I must decline to yield to my friend; my time is very little.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. LEVER. I wish I could.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield to anybody.

Mr. LEVER. The Democratic platform does commit the party to an effort to suppress gambling in farm products in organized exchanges in the country. My record shows my willingness to go as far as any in this direction. I was one of the five members of the subcommittee of the Agriculture Committee which drew and helped put through this House on two occasions what is known as the Scott bill. I believe that gambling upon certain of our great exchanges is costing the southern farmers millions of dollars every year. No man can defend a continuance of it, and I am supporting this substitute because I believe it will accomplish the purpose of the platform declaration, and at the same time result in no such confusion in the method of the distribution of the cotton crop as must inevitably work inestimable injury to the cotton farmer.

I want to warn you gentlemen who are supporting with such vigor the Clarke amendment that you are doing one of two things—either you are trying to carry out the declared wishes of the author of the amendment to destroy absolutely the cotton exchanges or you are unwittingly placing a burden of taxation of 50 cents a bale of cotton upon every farmer of the South. Neither horn of the dilemma can afford you a very comfortable seat if what I believe will happen should take place.

Let us assume that you are correct in your contention that this tax will destroy the cotton exchanges. What must be the consequence to the producer of cotton? Anyone who knows anything whatever about the economics of this proposition will agree with me when I assert, as emphatically as I know how, that the moment you make it impossible for the small cotton merchant in every hamlet and town in the South to hedge his purchases of spot cotton from day to day through the exchanges you have succeeded by that very act in concentrating the marketing power for cotton in the hands of the big spot dealer, the big spinner, and the big gambler. Cotton will be bought and sold. Thousands of small merchants with little capital are taking care of their local markets and furnishing a ready sale for it under existing conditions. If they are not given the advantage of the system of hedging, their capital will be entirely insufficient to continue their business. This must result inevitably in the cotton markets becoming completely monopolized by the big spot dealer and big spinner, and instead of having some little competition in the local markets of the country, as is now the case, there would cease to be any at all. The spot dealer and spinner would quickly join hands, and with their brains and capital easily fix the price of cotton to the farmer. The unorganized cotton producer in a contest against such an organization as would be formed for fixing the price of cotton would be as helpless as militia in battle against well-drilled, well-trained regulars. And in this connection, gentlemen, I want you to bear in mind, for it is important, that your big spot dealer and your big spinner by every law of reasoning wants to buy his cotton as cheaply as possible. The small merchant is satisfied with a small commission for his work, but it is the law of human nature that we want to buy as cheaply as we can and sell for as much as we can. The millman is not a philanthropist; he is not in business for his health; the cheaper he is able to buy his cotton the more profit he may expect from the finished product. For one, I am not willing to put the farmers of the South at the tender mercy of any such combination as I know must arise if the cotton exchanges are entirely destroyed.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the Clarke amendment will, as gentlemen think, destroy the cotton exchanges. It will result, in the judgment of the best informed men upon the subject, only in concentrating into the hands of the big spot dealer, the big spinner, and the big gambler the very instrumentalities which are now used to manipulate the market and to gamble in the product. This proposition is almost self-evident, for anyone familiar with the subject at all well understands how easy it will be for these big dealers to pay the tax of 50 cents a bale and recoup it by immediately transferring it to the farmer by cutting the price to him of his cotton per bale to that extent. Your amendment therefore not only concentrates the gambling features and evil practices of the cotton exchanges into the hands of a few very powerful, resourceful, and rich dealers, but it may, I think it will, place a tax of 50 cents a bale upon every bale of cotton produced in this country, which on a crop of 14,000,000 bales would aggregate a tax of $7,000,000 upon the cotton producers of the South. Do not forget, gentlemen, that every cotton contract carries in it provision for the deduction of all overhead charges from the price paid the farmer in the local market until it reaches its destination at the mill. So much is taken off for tare, so much for insurance, so much for transportation, and this 50 cents a bale proposed in this amendment will be taken off likewise, and who bears the burden? If you gentlemen wish to accomplish your purpose you can do it by making your tax so high as to be prohibitive to all classes, and thus shut up the exchanges, but I demand that you who say you want to destroy the exchanges shall furnish a weapon with which it certainly can be done and not such a proposition as you offer, which may or may not effect your purpose; and if it does not, must result, as certainly as night follows day, in placing a heavy and unjustifiable tax upon the already overburdened farmer. You either concentrate both legitimate and gambling transactions in cotton, both in spots and futures, into the hands of a few dealers, and at the same time fix a charge of 50 cents per bale of cotton upon its producers, or you destroy the exchanges and, as I have said, put the cotton producer at the mercy of the greatest combination of capital and brain the world has ever seen. I am not certain what would happen if your amendment should carry. I do not think you are, but I do know that I am not ready to run the risk of taxing the farmers of my district through any ill-advised legislation, nor am I willing to tie them, hands and feet, to be delivered over bodily to those whose business it is to buy cotton as cheaply as they can get it. My uncertainty as to what the effect of your amendment would be, and my unwillingness to take any chance of injuring the people I represent, induce me to propose the substitute about to be voted upon. I am fully persuaded that by proper regulation we can force the cotton exchanges to render a useful service to the cotton trade and yet reduce to the very minimum all opportunity for gambling and manipulation; and the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] offers the plan by which this can be done.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] declines to yield.

Mr. LEVER. Briefly, and I wish I had full time, the Underwood amendment provides for the rigid regulation of the operations of the cotton exchanges. It would outlaw any contract for the future delivery of cotton, unless such contract provided that when delivery is made it shall be of such grades of cotton only as have been standardized by the Government. Nine such grades have been standardized, and each represents a good, merchantable, spinnable, usable cotton, always in demand by the mills of the world. The New York Cotton Exchange under its contract gives to the seller the option of delivering any one, or some of each, of 23 different grades. Market manipulation has been shown to be due to the nature of this contract. The mills of the country, who use the exchanges for hedging against their contracts for future delivery of cloth, can not use some of the lower grades of cotton now deliverable upon the New York contract, and the fear that such cotton may be delivered to them has given rise to the tendency upon their part to under-value, as a matter of protection, the basis grade. The result is that the price of the entire range of grades is lowered, and from this the farmer suffers most. The seller will naturally deliver that which is in least demand. The Underwood amendment seeks to destroy manipulations in the market by forbidding specialties to be delivered upon contract, forcing delivery to be made only within the Government standards of grades of usable cotton.

Again, if you buy a contract upon the New York Cotton Exchange, and when the day for the delivery of the cotton comes, you find that you do not wish the cotton, can not use it advantageously, you may make settlement in margins, but your settlement would be upon a basis of a difference in price between the basis grade which you bought and the grade which is tendered you, fixed probably six months ago, and without any regard whatever to the actual difference in the commercial value of the two grades. Twice a year, in fact only once, the revision committee of the New York Cotton Exchange decides and arbitrarily fixes what shall be the difference in prices of the various grades of cotton deliverable upon their contract. At the moment their calculations may be entirely accurate, but no set of men can prophesy six months in advance what will be the difference in value according to the law of supply and demand, for instance, between basis middling and good ordinary cotton. Any attempt to do this is the merest guesswork. The result of this has been a constant fluctuation of the parity between spot cotton and future contracts, and from this fact arises much of the manipulation in the future markets. The substitute would force settlement upon a basis of the actual commercial difference in the value of the grades deliverable upon contract, and this difference is to be determined by the difference in the value of these grades as shown by the sales of actual spot cotton in spot markets. We believe this regulation, coupled with the adoption of the Government standards of grades, will go far toward eliminating illegitimate transactions upon the exchanges.

These regulations, with the power contained in the substitute to compel a complete record of all transactions upon the exchanges to be kept, thus giving complete publicity to their operations, will, in my humble judgment, force the exchanges to render a great service to the cotton trade and drive out from them the vicious practices against which producer and spinner alike protest. The plan we support proposes the conservative course of regulation as against the dangerous and doubtful remedy suggested by the Clarke amendment. We would poison the rat and not burn the barn; we would destroy the evil and make useful the good. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The vote is on concurring in the Clarke amendment with the Underwood amendment to the Clarke amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 147, yeas 122.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 171, nays 161, answered "present" 3, not voting 93, as follows:

YEAS—171.

Abercrombie	Eagan	Kettner	Rauch
Aiken	Eagle	Key, Ohio	Reilly, Conn.
Alney	Elder	Kinkaid, N. J.	Rouse
Alexander	Estopinal	Kitchin	Rubey
Allen	Faison	Lazarro	Russell
Ashbrook	Fergusson	Lee, Ga.	Sabath
Aswell	Fields	Lever	Saunders
Barkley	Fitzgerald	Levy	Scully
Barnhart	Flood, Va.	Lewis, Md.	Seldomridge
Beakes	Foster	Lieb	Sharp
Booher	Gallagher	Linthicum	Sherley
Borchers	Gard	Lobeck	Sherwood
Brockson	George	Logue	Slayden
Broussard	Gerry	Loneragan	Small
Brown, N. Y.	Gilmore	McAndrews	Sparkman
Bruckner	Gittins	McClellan	Stanley
Buchanan, Ill.	Glass	McCoy	Stedman
Buchanan, Tex.	Goeke	McDermott	Stevens, Nebr.
Bulkeley	Goldfogle	McGillicuddy	Stevens, N. H.
Burgess	Gordon	McKellar	Stone
Burke, Pa.	Goulden	Maguire, Nebr.	Stout
Burnett	Griffin	Mahan	Stringer
Byrnes, S. C.	Gudger	Maher	Summers
Byrns, Tenn.	Hamill	Metz	Taggart
Callaway	Hammond	Mitchell	Talcott, N. Y.
Carlin	Hardwick	Montague	Taylor, Ala.
Church	Hart	Moon	Taylor, N. Y.
Clancy	Hawley	Morgan, La.	Ten Eyck
Collier	Hay	Morgan, Okla.	Thacher
Covington	Hayden	Morrison	Thomas
Crisp	Heflin	Murray, Mass.	Townsend
Cullop	Helvering	O'Brien	Tuttle
Dale	Hensley	O'Leary	Underhill
Davis	Hill	O'Shaunessy	Underwood
Decker	Holland	Padgett	Walsh
Deitrick	Houston	Page	Watkins
Dickinson	Howell	Palmer	Watson
Dies	Humphreys, Miss.	Peters, Mass.	Weaver
Dixon	Igoe	Phelan	Webb
Donovan	Johnson, Ky.	Pou	Whaley
Dooling	Johnson, S. C.	Ragsdale	Williams
Doughton	Jones	Rainey	Young, Tex.
Driscoll	Kennedy, Conn.	Raker

NAYS—161.

Anderson	Esch	Kennedy, R. I.	Shreve
Anthony	Falconer	Kent	Sims
Austin	Farr	Kindel	Sinnott
Avis	Ferris	Kinkaid, Nebr.	Sisson
Bailey	FitzHenry	Kirkpatrick	Slomp
Baltz	Floyd, Ark.	Knowland, J. R.	Sloan
Barchfeld	Fordney	Konop	Smith, Idaho
Bartlett	Fowler	Kreider	Smith, Saml. W.
Barton	Frear	Lafferty	Smith, Tex.
Beall, Tex.	French	La Follette	Stafford
Bell, Cal.	Garner	Langham	Steenerson
Bell, Ga.	Garrett, Tenn.	Langley	Stephens, Cal.
Blackmon	Garrett, Tex.	Lee, Pa.	Stephens, Miss.
Britten	Gillett	Leshner	Sutherland
Brodbeck	Good	MacDonald	Switzer
Brown, W. Va.	Gray	Manahan	Tavener
Browne, Wis.	Greene, Mass.	Mapes	Taylor, Ark.
Browning	Greene, Vt.	Mondell	Taylor, Colo.
Brumbaugh	Gregg	Moore	Temple
Butler	Griest	Morin	Thompson, Okla.
Candler, Miss.	Guernsey	Moss, W. Va.	Thomson, Ill.
Caraway	Hamilton, Mich.	Murdock	Towner
Carew	Hardy	Murray, Okla.	Treadway
Casey	Harrison	Nelson	Tribble
Claypool	Haugen	Oglesby	Vare
Clayton	Hayes	O'Hair	Vaughan
Connolly, Kans.	Helm	Oldfield	Volstead
Connolly, Iowa	Hinds	Payne	Walker
Conry	Hinebaugh	Pepper	Walters
Cooper	Hobson	Plumley	Whitacre
Copley	Howard	Porter	White
Cramton	Hughes, Ga.	Powers	Willis
Crosser	Hulings	Rayburn	Wilson, Fla.
Curry	Hull	Reed	Wingo
Davenport	Humphrey, Wash.	Reilly, Wis.	Winslow
Dent	Jacoway	Riordan	Witherspoon
Dershem	Johnson, Utah	Roberts, Mass.	Woodruff
Defenderfer	Johnson, Wash.	Rogers	Woods
Dillon	Keister	Rucker
Donohoe	Kelly, Pa.	Rupley
Doolittle	Kennedy, Iowa	Sells

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—3.

Cary

Rothermel

Smith, N. Y.

NOT VOTING—93.

Adair	Dunn	Keating	Patten, N. Y.
Adamson	Dupré	Kelley, Mich.	Patton, Pa.
Ansberry	Dyer	Kiess, Pa.	Peters, Me.
Baker	Edmonds	Korbly	Peterson
Bartholdt	Edwards	L'Engle	Platt
Bathrick	Evans	Lenroot	Post
Borland	Fairchild	Lewis, Pa.	Prouty
Bowdle	Fess	Lindbergh	Quin
Bremner	Finley	Lindquist	Richardson
Bryan	Francis	Lloyd	Roberts, Nev.
Burke, S. Dak.	Gardner	McGuire, Okla.	Scott
Burke, Wis.	Godwin, N. C.	McKenzie	Shackleford
Calder	Goodwin, Ark.	McLaughlin	Smith, J. M. C.
Campbell	Gorman	Madden	Smith, Md.
Cantrill	Graham, Ill.	Mann	Smith, Minn.
Carr	Graham, Pa.	Martin	Stephens, Tex.
Carter	Green, Iowa	Merritt	Stevens, Minn.
Chandler, N. Y.	Hamilton, N. Y.	Miller	Talbott, Md.
Clark, Fla.	Hamlin	Moss, Ind.	Wallin
Cline	Helgesen	Mott	Wilson, N. Y.
Cox	Henry	Neeley	Young, N. Dak.
Curley	Hoxworth	Nolan, J. I.
Danforth	Hughes, W. Va.	Norton
Doremus	Kahn	Parker

So the motion to concur with an amendment was agreed to. The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. CALDER (against Clarke amendment and Underwood substitute) with Mr. SMITH of New York (for).

Mr. DUPRÉ (against Clarke amendment; for substitute) with Mr. NORTON (for).

Balance of day:

Mr. BATHRICK with Mr. CAMPBELL.

Until further notice:

Mr. WILSON of New York with Mr. WALLIN.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland with Mr. PATTON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. PARKER with Mr. POST.

Mr. PATTEN of New York with Mr. MOTT.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana with Mr. KELLEY of Michigan.

Mr. CLARK of Florida with Mr. HAMILTON of New York.

Mr. CARR with Mr. EDMONDS.

Mr. BOWDLE with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. BAKER with Mr. DANFORTH.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "no." I desire to change my vote.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

Mr. HULINGS. I answered "present" under a misapprehension.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. HULINGS, and he voted in the negative.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. WINGO rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Arkansas rise?

Mr. WINGO. I want to ask for a recapitulation. In view of the fact that before the vote was announced a number of Members stated they had voted and were not recorded and had themselves recorded, I ask for a recapitulation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] asks for a recapitulation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to prevent any gentleman from seeing that his name is properly recorded, but it is late now, and—

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, it is late, and I will withdraw my request.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote on the conference report and the vote that has just been taken on this amendment, and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL THURSDAY.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn until Thursday next. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

KNOXVILLE EXPOSITION.

The SPEAKER. Some time ago the Chair appointed Mr. KENT, of California, on the Knoxville committee, and he declined. Then the Chair appointed Mr. COPLEY, of Illinois, and he declined. The Chair now appoints Mr. LANGLEY, of Kentucky.

ASSISTANT FOREMAN OF THE FOLDING ROOM.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] presents a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 263 (H. Rept. 89).

Resolved, That S. D. Taylor be chosen to act as assistant foreman of the folding room, at $3.85 per day, in lieu of the person named in resolution adopted February 6, 1900.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, is this presented as a privileged resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is. It is a resolution coming from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. PAYNE. But it does not relate to the accounts. It proposes to drop out one man and put in another.

The SPEAKER. It does not put out anybody.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from New York will permit, I will state that the late assistant foreman is dead.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1 strike out "S. D. Taylor be chosen to act as" and insert "the Doorkeeper of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint an."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARTLETT rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to know whether this is a simple House resolution, or what it is?

The SPEAKER. It is a House resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman who died was one of the Republican appointees, and that this is an effort to put a Democrat in his place.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. This does not create a new office, I will say to the gentleman, but it provides for filling a vacancy which could not be filled unless this resolution was passed. In 1900 a resolution was passed providing that a man by the name of Coultrey be appointed.

Mr. PAYNE. I understood that was one of the minority places established by a resolution at the beginning of the session. Now, it seems to me it is hardly fair—

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. That man is now dead.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will state to the gentleman that a number of years ago four men were appointed by resolution to perform certain duties connected with the House—Mr. Joel Grayson and Mr. Coultrey in the folding room, Mr. Jennison on the door, and Mr. Coombs. Three of them were Republicans and one was a Democrat. They had no relation to what we usually call minority employees.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that each one of these men is named in an appropriation bill? I know it is so in regard to Mr. Grayson and Mr. Jennison.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. And it is so in regard to this man who died.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is absolutely correct, and the appropriation was made for his salary, but he died. Now, this is a resolution to fill that place for which the appropriation has been made, Mr. Coultrey being dead. Mr. Coultrey, as a matter of fact, was a Republican. He was not what we call a minority employee—one of those who are given at every session of Congress to the minority—but there were four places filled by resolution. Three of them were Republicans and one was a Democrat. One of the Republicans is dead, two of them are still on the roll, and one Democrat is still on the roll. This is simply to make it possible to put some man in the place formerly filled by Mr. Coultrey, but it does not name anybody.

Mr. PAYNE. But these men were named in appropriation bills that were reported in the past Congress, which was Democratic.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Absolutely.

Mr. PAYNE. As a concession to the minority.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It was simply carrying the same men who had been on there for many years.

Mr. PAYNE. They were named in the appropriation bills.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I know. They were put on in 1900.

Mr. PAYNE. This was one of the minority places.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; it was not a minority place at all.

Mr. FOSTER. In a conversation with the minority leader it was understood that this was not a minority place at all.

Mr. PAYNE. At what time was this conversation?

Mr. FOSTER. Last summer. Let me say to the gentleman—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] has the floor. Does he yield to anybody?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] if he will yield?

Mr. FOSTER. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that this man was to give up his position six months before he died; but in the meantime he became sick, and on that account he was not taken off the roll. There were six months that he performed no service whatever, but was kept on the roll, and finally died while on the roll.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Was the title of his place assistant foreman of the folding room?

Mr. FOSTER. He was assistant foreman of the folding room.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Was not that office abolished by the resolution of the Palmer committee in the Sixty-second Congress?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Oh, no.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am under the impression that it was.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman that it is quite apparent to me that this matter ought to go over until Thursday, so that we can examine into it a little; and while I do not like to make the point of no quorum—

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment before he makes the point?

These four places were created by a Republican Congress and three of them were taken by Republicans and one by the Democrats; that is, the Republicans gave the Democrats one and they took three. The proposition of the Democrats now is that the Republicans take two and the Democrats take two. I hope the gentleman will not think that is unfair.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I think the resolution would better go over until Thursday, and I may conclude then that it is fair.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to suggest that this is a place that can not be filled until the resolution is adopted, and I understand the services of a man in this place are very much needed and have been for some time.

Mr. PAYNE. I presume he would be glad to take it. I think it would not hurt to have the matter go over until Thursday.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman from Texas say to that?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection, because the patronage committee has assigned this place to me. A Democrat is filling it temporarily, and I desire to leave for home to-morrow, if I can. I would not want to stay over here until Thursday. The Doorkeeper tells me that he would like to have this man put in as early as possible.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; just as we are breaking up it seems to be essential to have a man there. I insist that it go over until Thursday. I do not want to keep gentlemen here by making the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York make the point of no quorum?

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman from Texas allow the resolution to go over until Thursday?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I suppose, if there is no quorum present and the gentleman makes the point, we will have to let it go over until Thursday, but I regret very much that the gentleman objects to proceeding with the resolution at this time.

Mr. PAYNE. If it goes over, I may make no point, of course.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to suggest to the gentleman from New York that it is hardly possible that we will have a quorum here on Thursday, and we may take a recess for a month, and this man would be out and the place left unfilled.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen seem to be so urgent about this patronage matter that I am inclined not to make any further objection. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I have endeavored to learn this fact from several gentlemen, but have been unable to do so. I want to know if this resolution does not create a place which was abolished by the Palmer resolution?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. It does not.

Mr. TOWNSEND. A man named Rupel was attached to that folding room as assistant foreman, and he was reduced to the grade of laborer by the Palmer resolution. There has been no assistant foreman in the meantime. Does not this resolution create an office that was abolished, and thereby the salary of this man Rupel?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. No; the resolution authorizes the filling of a place created by a resolution passed in 1900, and it was filled by a man named Counry, who was mentioned in the resolution, and who recently died.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is it not a fact that Rupel occupied this place until the Palmer resolution demoted him?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. No; that is not true. Mr. Counry has occupied the place and is the only man who ever did occupy it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. As a matter of fact, if it did create a new place for the Democrats under this administration, does not the gentleman think that we are getting few enough of them to justify this?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I will state to the gentleman we had a hearing on this matter and that it was clearly shown that this place ought to be filled.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.), in accordance with the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until Thursday, October 2, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. RUCKER, from the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8428) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States, limiting the amount of campaign expenses, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 88), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6990) granting an increase of pension to Milton Ross; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 3788) granting an increase of pension to Olaf Volkerts; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 4007) granting a pension to Adam Roth; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 7827) granting an increase of pension to Theodore Elchlepp; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 6551) granting a pension to John Prater; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 6552) granting a pension to Thomas W. Botkin; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 7830) granting a pension to Emma Fox; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 2020) granting a pension to Norman Devol; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 2820) granting an increase of pension to Alexander R. Blazer; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MAHAN: A bill (H. R. 8657) to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 8658) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection of a Federal building at Hazard, Ky.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. FERGUSSON: A bill (H. R. 8659) granting to various States public lands for the construction, repairing, and maintenance of public roads; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. KALANIANAOLE: A bill (H. R. 8660) to amend sections 4 and 17 of an act entitled "An act granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii," approved August 1, 1912; to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. McKELLAR: A bill (H. R. 8661) to establish and maintain military training schools in the several States of the Union and in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DEITRICK: A bill (H. R. 8662) to prevent the use of the stopwatch or other time-measuring device on Government work, and the payment of premium or bonus to Government employees, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington: A bill (H. R. 8663) repealing the law providing for the exchange of public lands for lands within the forest reserves; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. PADGETT: A bill (H. R. 8664) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Tennessee; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8665) establishing the Franklin National Military Park; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8666) authorizing the Secretary of War to have erected at Hohenwald, Tenn., a monument in honor of Meriwether Lewis; to the Committee on the Library.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8667) to promote the efficiency of the Naval Militia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. FAISON: A bill (H. R. 8668) for the study and for electrical tests and experimentation for agricultural fertilizing purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8669) providing for electrical study, tests, and experimentation for agricultural fertilizing purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HAYDEN: A bill (H. R. 8670) providing for second homestead and desert-land entries; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. MAHAN: A bill (H. R. 8671) authorizing a survey of Patchogue River, Westbrook, Middlesex County, Conn., with a view to its improvement; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. FESS: A bill (H. R. 8672) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate condemned cannon and balls; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CLAYTON: A bill (H. R. 8673) providing for compensation of clerks of United States district courts, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GOOD: A bill (H. R. 8683) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to relinquish the rights of the United States in and to a part of a certain alley in the city of Marshalltown, Iowa; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. RAUCH: A bill (H. R. 8702) to authorize the county of Miami, Ind., to construct a bridge across the Wabash River in Miami County, Ind.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LAFFERTY: A bill (H. R. 8703) to expedite final determination of suit filed by the Attorney General pursuant to joint resolution of April 30, 1908, in relation to certain land grants in Oregon; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. THOMSON of Illinois: Resolution (H. Res. 269) directing the Attorney General to inform the House of Representatives what action, if any, has been taken to stop the construction of oil wells and the extraction of petroleum from certain lands granted to the Southern Pacific Railroad Co.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GLASS: Resolution (H. Res. 270) authorizing an investigation of banking and rural credit conditions; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 8674) granting a pension to Rachel A. Dougherty; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8675) granting an increase of pension to Chester Heiner, alias Justus Hahner; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BREMNER: A bill (H. R. 8676) for the relief of Tobias Philpot; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BROWNING: A bill (H. R. 8677) granting an increase of pension to William A. Dobbins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CONNOLLY of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 8678) granting a pension to W. F. Eaton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8679) granting a pension to Catherine Patterson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8680) granting a pension to Carrie Stevens; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DERSHEM: A bill (H. R. 8681) granting a pension to Martin Weary; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8682) granting a pension to Jennie Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRIEST: A bill (H. R. 8684) granting an increase of pension to Adam Allwein; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GUDGER: A bill (H. R. 8685) for the relief of S. L. Teague; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HENSLEY: A bill (H. R. 8686) granting a pension to Jane Johnson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULINGS: A bill (H. R. 8687) granting an increase of pension to Euphemia J. Green; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8688) granting an honorable discharge to Lucien P. Rogers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JACOWAY: A bill (H. R. 8689) granting a pension to Sam Ragsdale; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 8690) granting a pension to Thomas F. Arnett; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8691) granting a pension to James Chaffin; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma: A bill (H. R. 8692) granting a pension to Margaret A. Wallace; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8693) granting a pension to Louis Schrader; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: A bill (H. R. 8694) granting an increase of pension to Mary Ann Herrick; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PADGETT: A bill (H. R. 8695) granting a pension to R. T. Crews; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8696) for the relief of Nathaniel F. Cheairs; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8697) for the relief of the estates of Bolling Gordon and Richard Gordon; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 8698) granting an increase of pension to William M. Preston; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAVENNER: A bill (H. R. 8699) granting an increase of pension to William H. Stephenson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS: A bill (H. R. 8700) granting a pension to Joseph Dobson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WINSLOW: A bill (H. R. 8701) for the relief of Clement Lamoureux; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FREAR: A bill (H. R. 8704) granting an increase of pension to Ralph Beaumont; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GILMORE: A bill (H. R. 8705) for the relief of Elizabeth M. Flynn; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REILLY of Connecticut: A bill (H. R. 8706) granting an increase of pension to Maria J. Burnham; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. COOPER: Memorial of the Board of Trade of La Crosse, Wis., favoring acquisition of proper buildings for United States ambassadors and consuls; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HAYES: Petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., favoring aids to navigation in Alaskan waters; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., favoring an increase in the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HINDS: Memorial of the board of governors of the Portland Club, of Portland, Me., protesting against changing the portrait of William McKinley for that of Thomas Jefferson on postal cards; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petitions of the merchants of Brunswick, Bridgton, Westbrook, Springvale, Sanford, Gorham, Biddeford, Cornish, and Saco, Me., favoring legislation to compel dealers by mail to bear a part of local taxes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. JACOWAY: Proof to accompany H. R. 8689, granting a pension to Sam Ragsdale; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KEISTER: Petition of 428 employees of the Pittsburgh Works of the American Sheet & Tin Plate Co., of New Kensington, Pa., protesting against a dissolution of the United States Steel Corporation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MOORE: Memorial of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade, protesting against S. 2741, a bill to prevent the employment of armed men for the protection of manufacturing plants, etc.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: Petition of citizens of Newport, R. I., favoring the passage of legislation to establish Narragansett Bay as a naval base on the Atlantic coast; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts: Petition of the Boston Fruit and Produce Exchange, Boston, Mass., favoring the passage of the 1-cent letter-postage rate; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, October 1, 1913.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Monday last, when, on request of Mr. SIMMONS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 609 to the bill (H. R. 3321), to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, and agrees to the same with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 99) to fix the times and places of holding district courts for the district of Arizona, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2254) to amend chapter 1, section 18, of the Judicial Code.

The message further announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 132) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make an exhibit at the Sixth National Corn Exposition, to be held at Dallas, Tex., during the month of February, 1914, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 2727. An act to create an additional land district in the State of Nevada; and

H. R. 7377. An act extending to the port of Perth Amboy, N. J., the privileges of section 7 of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

COURTS IN ARIZONA.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the bill concerning courts in Arizona just received from the House with an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 99) to fix the times and places of holding district court for the district of Arizona, which was to strike out all after line 4, page 1, down to and including "December," in line 11, and to insert:

SEC. 2. That terms of the district court shall be held in Tucson on the first Mondays in May and November; at Phoenix on the first Mondays in April and October; at Prescott on the first Mondays in March and September; and at Globe on the first Mondays in June and December.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THE TARIFF.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the Senate, to the bill (H. R. 3321) entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes."

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the conference report lie on the table until to-morrow, when on behalf of the conferees on the part of the Senate I will file a report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BURTON. May I understand what the request is?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request is that the message from the House of Representatives lie on the table until to-morrow.

Mr. BURTON. That is the conference report?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that action will be taken. The Chair lays before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 609 to the bill H. R. 3321, entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," and agree to the same with an amendment as follows—

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the message may lie upon the table until to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JONES. I have received telegrams from the Building Owners and Managers' Association of Seattle, signed by F. T. Bradley, secretary; from Herman Chapin, of Seattle; from Thomas Burke, of Seattle; and from R. F. Hanke, secretary, representing the Spokane Business Property Association, in the State of Washington, remonstrating against the adoption of that part of the income-tax clause in the pending tariff bill relating to a tax on rentals. I move that the telegrams lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I present a telegram from the directors of the Seattle National Bank, of Washington, favoring the so-called Smith-Lever amendment to the pending tariff bill, relating to cotton futures. I move that the telegram lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I present a telegram from Louis A. Schroeder, president, and C. E. Maeser, executive board Wisconsin Division, American Wire Weavers' Protective Association, of Appleton, Wis., remonstrating against the proposed reduction on woven wire cloth below 30 per cent in the pending tariff bill. I move that the telegram lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I send to the desk two telegrams, which I ask may be read for the information of the Senate.

There being no objection, the telegrams were read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

APPLETON, WIS., September 30, 1913.

WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

We are advised woven wire cloth schedule has been canceled by House and duty placed at 15 per cent. We protest vigorously against reduction to below 30 per cent. We have produced figures to show that difference in wages in United States and abroad entitle us to at least 30 per cent protection. Fifteen per cent ruinous to Fourdrinier wire-cloth industry.

LOUIS A. SCHROEDER, President,
C. E. MAESER,
Executive Board Wisconsin Division,
American Wire Weavers' Protective Association.

DETROIT, MICH., September 30, 1913.

HON. WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Please use best endeavor to have withdrawn from the income-tax bill the unfair and ambiguous clause relative to payment of income tax by tenants, trustees, or agents, pages 138-142.

HOMER WARREN & Co.

Mr. OLIVER. I present a memorial of 1,800 employees of the Shenango Works, American Sheet & Tin Plate Co., of New Castle, Pa., protesting against certain legislation. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD without the signatures and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD without the signatures, as follows:

SHENANGO WORKS, AMERICAN SHEET & TIN PLATE CO.,
New Castle, Pa.

We who hereby subscribe our signatures are employees of the Shenango works of the American Sheet & Tin Plate Co., a subsidiary company of the United States Steel Corporation.

Viewing with great concern the legal suit instituted at the instigation of your honorable body to dissolve the United States Steel Corporation, we prayerfully protest, and urge your deepest consideration for the well-being of fully 1,800 employees of this plant alone. We honestly and sincerely beg that our company, the United States Steel Corporation, be not dissolved.

Our company is sparing neither time nor expense to make working conditions more bearable to its employees, and we are among the highest paid workmen—skilled or unskilled—in the country. Scores of our men are looking forward to, and some even now are enjoying, the benefits of the old-age pension fund which is being operated to the great relief of those dependent upon same. Many of us took advantage of the privilege of the stockholding and profit-sharing plan, which has enabled a goodly number of our workmen to buy and own their own homes. Rest houses and excellent drinking water have been placed in different parts of our mill. First aid to the injured through our mill hospital and financial relief are institutions that brought a wonderful blessing to our unfortunate men injured. Everything is being done to make conditions sanitary throughout the mill, and we feel constrained to beg your honorable body to "let well enough alone," as we feel sure that the dissolution of the United States Steel Corporation will work untold hardship and inconvenience upon its employees, with no material advantage to any great part of the great Commonwealth.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In connection with the telegram put into the RECORD as to the woven-wire-cloth schedule, I ask that the telegram which I send to the desk from constituents of mine in Connecticut may be read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The telegram was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

NEW HAVEN, CONN., September 30, 1913.

Senator BRANDEGEE, Washington, D. C.:

Wire-cloth schedule reduced to 15 per cent. Can not exist on less than 30 per cent. Protest vigorously.

H. & T. MCCLUSKEY & SON.

Mr. WEEKS. I present two telegrams, one from the American Wire Weavers' Association, of Holyoke, Mass., and the other from the Buchanan & Bolt Wire Co., of Holyoke, Mass., which I ask may be read.

There being no objection, the telegrams were read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

HOLYOKE, MASS., September 30, 1913.

Senator WEEKS, Washington, D. C.:

Have information that House has cut rate on woven-wire cloth to 15 per cent. If so, great injustice to American workman. Hope you will vigorously oppose such action.

A. A. BROOKS,
American Wire Weavers' Association, Holyoke, Mass.

HOLYOKE, MASS., October 1, 1913.

Senator JOHN W. WEEKS,

Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Thirty per cent on brass-wire cloth is great hardship to manufacturers in this country, and 15 per cent means ruin. Make vigorous protest against reduction.

BUCHANAN & BOLT WIRE CO.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the Merchants' Exchange of Oakland, Cal., praying for an increased Navy and for the organization of a naval reserve, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PITTMAN presented a petition of the Commercial Club of Pioche, Nev., praying for the construction of four new battleships, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Commercial Club of Pioche, Nev., praying for the organization of a naval reserve, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BELOIT, KANS.

Mr. SWANSON. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 7596) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Beloit, Kans. I direct the attention of the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] to the report.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask unanimous consent for the passage of the bill at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Beloit, Kans., $8,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to meet the additional cost of construction of the building by the substitution of stone for trimmings instead of terra cotta and wood as specified in the existing contract.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT AUGUSTA, GA.

Mr. SWANSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7875) to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Augusta, Ga., to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill. It is important that early action should be taken upon it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that the limit of cost of the public building at Augusta, Ga., provided for under act of June 25, 1910, shall be increased from $250,000 to $325,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL CONSERVATION EXPOSITION, KNOXVILLE, TENN.

Mr. LEE. On behalf of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably from that committee, with amendments, Senate resolution 175, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 2, to strike out the word "seven" before the word "members" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eleven," and to add at the end of the resolution the words: "That the actual traveling and hotel expenses of the committee be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate," so as to make the resolution read:

Whereas the National Conservation Exposition is to be held at Knoxville, Tenn., from September 1, 1913, to October 31, 1913, inclusive; and

Whereas this exposition has for its purpose the emphasizing of the necessity for conservation of all natural resources of the country and the study of the best methods of forwarding this movement; and

Whereas the officers of the said National Conservation Exposition have requested the honor of the presence of Members of the Senate of the United States at some time during said exposition, to be designated by the Senate: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the Senate be empowered to appoint a committee of 11 Members, which will accept this invitation on the part of the Senate and visit said exposition at some time to be agreed upon between the members of said committee and the president of the exposition.

That the actual traveling and hotel expenses of the committee be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 3157) for the relief of August Gleitz (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3158) for the relief of George W. Stottler; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 3159) granting an increase of pension to William H. Ruckle (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 3160) for the relief of Passed Asst. Surg. Micajah Boland, United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 3161) to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JACKSON:

A bill (S. 3162) granting an increase of pension to Eliza K. Carpenter; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 3163) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Ebenezer Wainwright; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 3164) granting a pension to Elizabeth Page (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WEEKS (for Mr. LODGE):

A bill (S. 3165) granting a pension to James Percival; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan:

A bill (S. 3166) to provide a site and erect a public building at Hancock, Mich.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. NEWLANDS:

A bill (S. 3167) granting an increase of pension to Mary H. Kennedy; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 3168) granting a pension to Laura L. Junkin;

A bill (S. 3169) granting a pension to Ethalinda Stewart; and

A bill (S. 3170) granting an increase of pension to Henry Stevenson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 3171) granting a pension to Laura Tisdale (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3172) granting an increase of pension to Sarah B. Lamb (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3173) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Birge (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRADLEY:

A bill (S. 3174) granting an increase of pension to James Littleton (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON BILLS OF EXCHANGE (S. DOC. NO. 162).

Mr. O'GORMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 187), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for use of the American delegation to the International Conference on Bills of Exchange held at The Hague during 1912, 500 copies of their report, which report was recently transmitted to Congress by the President.

FORTIFICATION OF SWEET WINES.

Mr. POMERENE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 188), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to send to the Senate a statement containing the names and addresses of the manufacturers of sweet wine who use wine spirits or grape brandy in the fortification of sweet wines, together with the number of gallons of wine spirits or grape brandy used by each of said manufacturers in said process of fortification for each of the five preceding fiscal years. Also, a statement showing the amount of revenue received by the Government during each of said years from said wine spirits or grape brandy.

UNION AGENCY AND COMMISSION TO FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. GORE. I offer a resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 189) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed, if not incompatible with the public service, to transmit to the Senate copies of all the pay rolls, showing all the officers and employees of the Union Agency and the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes and their compensations; also a statement showing which of such officers and employees are under the civil service and those not under the civil service, and further showing whether those under the civil service were placed there by statute or by special order, setting out said order.

Mr. BACON. I wish to suggest that in directing a report from the head of a department it is not usual to insert a condition as to its being compatible with the public interest. That is always done in the case of a request to the President, but it is never done in the case of a direction given to the head of a department. Of course the Senate can do so if it wishes. If it is a matter of doubt, and it wishes to leave it to the discretion of the head of the department, there is no impropriety in it; but if it is information which the Senate thinks it ought to have, it never couples the direction which is given the head of a department with a condition of that kind.

Mr. GORE. I will suggest the omission of the phrase, then. I have no desire to establish a precedent.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the resolution by striking out the words "if not incompatible with the public service."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

PROPOSED PATENT LAW REVISION (S. DOC. NO. 200).

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I send to the desk an article by Gilbert H. Montague, of the New York bar, on the proposed patent law revision, taken from the Harvard Law Review. I ask that it may be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADDRESS BY HON. WILLIAM KENT (S. DOC. NO. 202).

Mr. OWEN. I ask to have printed as a public document an address on democracy and efficiency, delivered by Hon. WILLIAM KENT at Harvard University, March 29, 1912.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE GERMAN FARMER AND COOPERATION (S. DOC. NO. 201).

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a document a report by Mr. F. J. H. von Engelken, who was a member of the American commission that spent some months last spring and summer investigating rural conditions, agricultural finance, and cooperations in Germany. I have an estimate of the expense. It is not very large. I think the report is a very valuable contribution to that subject. Mr. von Engelken is a native of Germany and a farmer in Florida. He is both a German and English scholar, and his views I think are very pertinent and important. I ask that the report be printed as a document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Florida will be complied with and the report will be printed as a public document.

NATIONAL BANKING ACT—1911 (S. DOC. NO. 197).

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senate adopted an order to reprint Senate Document No. 733, Sixtieth Congress, being the national-bank act. I move to reconsider the vote by which that order was adopted.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that 1,000 copies of the national-bank act of 1911 be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

There being no objection, the order was agreed to, and it was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That 1,000 copies of the national-bank act as amended and other laws relating to national banks, 1911, be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 132) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make an exhibit at the Sixth National Corn Exposition, to be held at Dallas, Tex., during the month of February, 1914, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

NATIONAL CONSERVATION EXPOSITION, KNOXVILLE, TENN.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to a resolution (No. 175) which passed the Senate a few moments ago. I was unable to understand the terms of the resolution at the time it was passed. It is a resolution authorizing the President of the Senate to appoint 11 Members of the Senate to attend the exposition at Knoxville, Tenn. The concluding sentence of the resolution is:

That the actual traveling and hotel expenses of the committee be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

I am of the opinion that that would establish a new precedent—paying the expenses of those who go on junketing trips of that kind. I have no objection to the appointment of a committee to visit the exposition, but I do object—and I want to enter that protest before the matter is finally concluded—to establishing this precedent of paying the expenses of Members of Congress upon trips of that nature. It is purely a junketing trip, and such expenses ought not to be paid out of the public funds.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho move to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to?

Mr. BORAH. I move that the vote whereby the resolution was adopted be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Idaho to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was adopted.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Idaho who it was that reported the resolution? Was it a Senator upon this side of the Chamber?

Mr. BORAH. I did not observe.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the resolution was reported by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] for the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator from Tennessee, who reported the resolution, is not now on the floor, I ask the Senator from Idaho to defer his motion until he arrives.

Mr. BORAH. Certainly. I now enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed, and will let that motion stand.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Tennessee will be here in a moment, it is reported.

Mr. BORAH. I understand the Senator from Tennessee is now on the floor.

Mr. SHIELDS. The senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] reported the resolution and is in charge of it. I ask that the matter be delayed until his return.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to concur in everything that has been said by the Senator from Idaho [Mr.

BORAH] in regard to the impropriety of paying out of the public funds the expenses of these junketing trips.

Mr. LEA entered the Chamber.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I see the Senator from Tennessee is now present. I will state that during his absence I called attention to Senate resolution 175, providing for a distinguished group of Senators to attend the Knoxville exposition, all of which I am in favor of, if they see fit to attend; but I objected to the last clause of the resolution, which provides that the traveling and hotel expenses of the committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate. The traveling expenses might be reasonably certain, but the hotel expenses would be a very indefinite proposition. I ask for a reconsideration of the vote by which the resolution was adopted, in order that I may move to strike out the last two lines of the resolution. I do not at all object to the commission, if Senators find time and have the desire to go, but I earnestly object to another precedent in these altogether too numerous trips at the public expense.

Mr. LEA. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Idaho will not insist upon that motion. The House of Representatives has accepted the invitation, it has appointed a committee of 13 Members, and it was our hope that the Senate would do likewise. This is a very small thing to do for an exposition that has a very worthy purpose, and a purpose with which, I am sure, the Senator from Idaho is in hearty sympathy. Most expositions have been favored with large appropriations, but this exposition has not been. While it has a Government exhibit for the purpose of setting forth the object and necessity of conservation, it has not been fortunate enough to receive an appropriation. This is the only encouragement that Congress can give to this exposition, which is the first of its kind, and is most important in its purposes and objects. I hope, therefore, that the Senator from Idaho will not insist upon his motion.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not seeking to interfere with the visit of this delegation to the exposition, but I am assuming that if a Member of Congress thinks he can serve the cause of conservation or any other cause by leaving his duties here for a few days, he will be perfectly willing to take care of his expenses. I object, however, to establishing the precedent of paying out of the funds of the Senate the expenses of these traveling delegations which may wish to visit this exposition or that exposition or the Rivers and Harbors Congress. I think it would establish a precedent that we ought to fully consider before we do establish it. I have not the least objection to the general purpose of the resolution, but does not the Senator think these gentlemen would be willing to make this visit without having their hotel expenses paid?

Mr. LEA. I do not think that is the question. It is not establishing a precedent; it is merely following a precedent. If the Senate should refuse to appropriate this small amount of money, it would cast a reflection upon this exposition, because a committee has been appointed to attend nearly every other exposition of the same character as this which has been held. I am not asking to establish a precedent, but I am asking that the Senate follow the precedents.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Idaho to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt, and will again put the question to the Senate. Those in favor of reconsidering the vote whereby the resolution appointing 11 Members of the Senate to attend the conservation congress at Knoxville, Tenn., at the expense of the contingent fund of the Senate will vote "aye," those opposed "no." It appears that the ayes have it.

Mr. LEA. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JACKSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LEA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS (when Mr. LODGE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. LODGE] is absent on account of illness. He has a general pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I think Senators will be glad to know that, although the Senator from Massachusetts has undergone a serious surgical operation, his condition to-day is entirely satisfactory to his physicians and friends.

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. McCUMBER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. McCUMBER] is absent on account of important business. I do not know how he would vote if he were present.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Arizona (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], and on this particular matter I do not feel inclined to vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). My pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has already been brought to the attention of the Senate. On account of that pair I refrain from voting.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when Mr. TOWNSEND's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] on official business. He is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. In his absence I refrain from voting.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEA. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] to the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and will vote "nay."

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am paired with the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have a pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] and therefore withhold my vote. I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. SHEPPARD. My colleague the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. WEEKS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is unavoidably absent from the Senate on account of business.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire whether the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have a pair with that Senator, which I will transfer to the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. KERN. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] and that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—20.
Borah	Gore	La Follette	Oliver
Bradley	Gronna	Lane	Penrose
Brandegee	Hitchcock	McLean	Sheppard
Bristow	Jackson	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Burton	Jones	Norris	Weeks
NAYS—29.
Ashurst	Johnson	Overman	Swanson
Bacon	Kern	Owen	Thompson
Bryan	Lea	Perkins	Thornton
Chamberlain	Lewis	Ransdell	Vardaman
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Shields	Williams
Hollis	Martine, N. J.	Shively
Hughes	Myers	Smith, Md.
James	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.
NOT VOTING—46.
Bankhead	Dillingham	Poindexter	Stephenson
Brady	du Pont	Pomerene	Sterling
Burleigh	Fall	Reed	Stone
Catron	Gallinger	Robinson	Sutherland
Chilton	Goff	Root	Thomas
Clapp	Kenyon	Saulsbury	Tillman
Clark, Wyo.	Lippitt	Shafroth	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	Lodge	Sherman	Walsh
Colt	McCumber	Simmons	Warren
Crawford	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.	Works
Culbertson	Page	Smith, Ga.
Cummings	Pittman	Smoot

So Mr. BORAH's motion to reconsider was rejected.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 12 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, October 2, 1913, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate October 1, 1913.

CHIEF INSPECTOR OF LOCOMOTIVE BOILERS.

Frank McManamy, of Oregon, now assistant chief inspector of locomotive boilers, to be chief inspector of locomotive boilers, vice John F. Ensign, deceased.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Frank J. Noonan, of Pennsylvania, to be United States marshal for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, vice John B. Robinson, resigned.

APPOINTMENT IN THE ARMY.

CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

Col. Dan C. Kingman, Corps of Engineers, to be Chief of Engineers with the rank of brigadier general from October 12, 1913, vice Brig. Gen. William T. Rossell, to be retired from active service October 11, 1913.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Lieut. Commander David F. Sellers to be a commander in the Navy from the 1st day of July, 1913.

Lieut. Commander Joseph M. Reeves, an additional number in grade, to be a commander in the Navy from the 1st day of July, 1913.

Ensign Cary W. Magruder to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy from the 6th day of June, 1913.

Paymaster Timothy S. O'Leary to be a pay inspector in the Navy from the 20th day of August, 1913.

Asst. Paymaster Ulrich R. Zivnaska to be a passed assistant paymaster in the Navy from the 2d of August, 1913.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

Sterling P. Rainer to be postmaster at Union Springs, Ala., in place of Thomas U. Baskin, removed.

ARKANSAS.

James L. Cannon to be postmaster at De Queen, Ark., in place of T. O. Poole, declined.

William E. Floyd to be postmaster at Little Rock, Ark., in place of U. S. Bratton, resigned.

CALIFORNIA.

Ada Ainscough to be postmaster at Banning, Cal., in place of John Ainscough, deceased.

COLORADO.

Lillian A. Hawks to be postmaster at Wray, Colo., in place of Charles D. Pickett, resigned.

CONNECTICUT.

William J. Thomas to be postmaster at Moodus, Conn., in place of G. P. Lecrenier. Incumbent's commission expired December 14, 1912.

FLORIDA.

L. M. Caswell to be postmaster at Perry, Fla., in place of James H. Lundy, resigned.

GEORGIA.

Jeptha H. Rucker to be postmaster at Athens, Ga., in place of William Fleming, resigned.

I. J. Slaughter to be postmaster at Jackson, Ga., in place of Alamo B. Harp, resigned.

ILLINOIS.

Frederic A. Perkins to be postmaster at Canton, Ill., in place of William H. Shaw, deceased.

Clint C. Tilton to be postmaster at Danville, Ill., in place of William R. Jewell, resigned.

David L. Wright to be postmaster at Effingham, Ill., in place of William W. Austin, removed.

INDIANA.

Nehemiah Littlefield to be postmaster at Rensselaer, Ind., in place of George E. Murray, removed.

IOWA.

Tracy R. Osborne to be postmaster at New Sharon, Iowa, in place of C. E. Wallace, resigned.

M. D. Sullivan to be postmaster at Wilton Junction, Iowa, in place of A. C. Shiflet, deceased.

KANSAS.

J. K. Stinson to be postmaster at Marquette, Kans., in place of C. J. Nordstrom. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1912.

KENTUCKY.

J. D. Caudill to be postmaster at Morehead, Ky., in place of James M. Carey, resigned.

W. B. Crabb to be postmaster at Eminence, Ky., in place of Miles M. J. Williams, resigned.

O. D. Procter to be postmaster at Adairville, Ky., in place of Lucy O. Mason, removed.

Jacob Roll to be postmaster at Newport, Ky., in place of George Wilhelmi, resigned.

LOUISIANA.

A. J. Alford to be postmaster at Amite, La., in place of George B. Burnham, resigned.

Lester L. Bordelon to be postmaster at Marksville, La., in place of B. F. Edwards, removed.

Jane McWilliams to be postmaster at Longville, La., in place of William C. Stewart, resigned.

MARYLAND.

Franklin B. Beall to be postmaster at Cumberland, Md., in place of William Pearre, removed.

Joseph C. Gernand to be postmaster at Thurmont, Md., in place of Jacob H. Cover. Incumbent's commission expired December 10, 1911.

F. B. McDermitt to be postmaster at Mount Savage, Md., in place of J. E. Macfarlane. Incumbent's commission expired January 11, 1913.

Benjamin Mitchell to be postmaster at Hancock, Md., in place of Mary J. Perkins. Incumbent's commission expired January 31, 1912.

MASSACHUSETTS.

John W. Baldwin to be postmaster at North Wilbraham, Mass. Office became presidential October 1, 1911.

MICHIGAN.

Charles E. Adair to be postmaster at Utica, Mich., in place of Stuart Beatty. Incumbent's commission expired December 14, 1912.

Louis J. Braun to be postmaster at South Range, Mich., in place of William Trevarthen, resigned.

J. W. Ewing to be postmaster at Grand Ledge, Mich., in place of Walter E. Wilson. Incumbent's commission expired March 10, 1912.

Thomas Gilligan to be postmaster at Hopkins, Mich., in place of Ora P. Gordon. Incumbent's commission expired April 19, 1913.

August C. Goehrend to be postmaster at Reed City, Mich., in place of Theodore Schmidt, resigned.

William W. Harper to be postmaster at Harrison, Mich. Office became presidential October 1, 1913.

Levi A. Harris to be postmaster at Gaylord, Mich., in place of W. S. Carpenter, removed.

G. Martin Harrington to be postmaster at Bancroft, Mich., in place of Hugh W. Parker. Incumbent's commission expired February 9, 1913.

William P. Hicks to be postmaster at Holly, Mich., in place of Charles H. Baird. Incumbent's commission expired April 24, 1912.

Arthur Hillman to be postmaster at Akron, Mich., in place of Charles W. Stacy, resigned.

Daniel A. Holland to be postmaster at Hancock, Mich., in place of Charles F. Rogers. Incumbent's commission expired February 9, 1913.

Arthur A. Juttner to be postmaster at Menominee, Mich., in place of Michael H. Kern, resigned.

Joseph Karl to be postmaster at St. Clair Heights, Mich. Office became presidential July 1, 1913.

Thomas H. McGee to be postmaster at Farmington, Mich., in place of M. Byron Pierce. Incumbent's commission expired April 5, 1913.

Robert Mooney to be postmaster at Ontonagon, Mich., in place of A. S. Follansbee. Incumbent's commission expired May 7, 1913.

Edwin S. Noble to be postmaster at Elk Rapids, Mich., in place of Archibald K. Dougherty, resigned.

Eugene L. Rose to be postmaster at Petoskey, Mich., in place of Charles J. Pailthorpe, resigned.

Johnson A. Saur to be postmaster at Kent City, Mich. Office became presidential October 1, 1912.

N. C. Sutherland to be postmaster at Romeo, Mich., in place of William T. Hosner. Incumbent's commission expired January 5, 1913.

MINNESOTA.

P. J. McCormick to be postmaster at Hopkins, Minn., in place of W. B. Anderson. Incumbent's commission expired January 5, 1913.

Lorenzo J. Markoe to be postmaster at White Bear Lake, Minn., in place of James M. King, resigned.

A. Waag to be postmaster at Roseau, Minn., in place of Charles A. Pearson, resigned.

MISSISSIPPI.

Myrtle A. McKay to be postmaster at Pelahatchee, Miss., in place of Martha H. Talbert, resigned.

MISSOURI.

John C. Downing to be postmaster at Cameron, Mo., in place of Dwight R. Ford, resigned.

Lee Jones to be postmaster at Hale, Mo., in place of Clyde M. Hudson, resigned.

NEBRASKA.

D. A. Berkey to be postmaster at Davenport, Nebr., in place of B. J. Showalter. Incumbent's commission expired January 25, 1913.

James H. Carroll to be postmaster at Cambridge, Nebr., in place of George Williams. Incumbent's commission expired May 18, 1913.

Edwin Cutts to be postmaster at Giltner, Nebr., in place of Frank W. Mather, resigned.

R. G. Hall to be postmaster at Fairmont, Nebr., in place of Lou W. Frazier. Incumbent's commission expired April 19, 1913.

Ira Lucy to be postmaster at Long Pine, Nebr., in place of E. M. Davisson. Incumbent's commission expired January 11, 1913.

N. Pearson to be postmaster at Shickley, Nebr., in place of Levi O. Dodge. Incumbent's commission expired January 11, 1913.

John G. Potter to be postmaster at Bridgeport, Nebr., in place of C. F. Clawges. Incumbent's commission expired January 28, 1913.

NEW JERSEY.

Thomas Hennessey, jr., to be postmaster at Fort Hancock, N. J., in place of Julia Martin, resigned.

NEW YORK.

Frank Tamany to be postmaster at Washingtonville, N. Y., in place of James M. Miller, deceased.

NORTH DAKOTA.

J. A. Berdahl to be postmaster at Stanton, N. Dak. Office became presidential April 1, 1913.

A. I. Koehmstedt to be postmaster at Langdon, N. Dak., in place of John McGauvran. Incumbent's commission expired July 20, 1913.

Annie Minehan to be postmaster at Garrison, N. Dak., in place of Cecil H. Taylor, resigned.

OHIO.

George B. Beacham to be postmaster at Williamsburg, Ohio, in place of Edward E. Peterson. Incumbent's commission expired August 4, 1913.

Barbara Crosser to be postmaster at Salineville, Ohio, in place of Mathias Tolson. Incumbent's commission expired May 22, 1913.

Harry E. Miller to be postmaster at New Concord, Ohio, in place of Charles M. Trace. Incumbent's commission expired April 19, 1913.

Benjamin S. C. McBride to be postmaster at St. Clairsville, Ohio, in place of G. P. Bumgarner. Incumbent's commission expired July 31, 1913.

J. H. Newton to be postmaster at Newark, Ohio, in place of George D. Heisey, resigned.

OKLAHOMA.

T. J. Brown to be postmaster at Tuttle, Okla., in place of O. C. Davis, resigned.

A. S. Foreman to be postmaster at Sallisaw, Okla., in place of Charles O. Frye, deceased.

Edward Learnard to be postmaster at Shattuck, Okla., in place of Andrew J. Eaton, resigned.

Bertha M. Nash to be postmaster at Fort Gibson, Okla., in place of James B. Miller. Incumbent's commission expired August 4, 1913.

J. M. Staten to be postmaster at Helena, Okla., in place of Elmer D. Immell. Incumbent's commission expired May 18, 1913.

T. J. Way to be postmaster at Haskell, Okla., in place of James W. Grady. Incumbent's commission expired August 4, 1913.

PENNSYLVANIA.

R. M. Hamilton to be postmaster at Houston, Pa. Office became presidential April 1, 1913.

Edward S. Haws to be postmaster at Narberth, Pa., in place of Joseph Mullineaux, jr., resigned.

Charles A. Smith to be postmaster at Swarthmore, Pa., in place of Caroline E. Hall, resigned.

J. K. Smith to be postmaster at Charleroi, Pa., in place of J. E. McCardle. Incumbent's commission expired June 12, 1913.

Louis N. Spencer to be postmaster at Lancaster, Pa., in place of Henry L. Trout. Incumbent's commission expired July 30, 1913.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Pierce M. Huff to be postmaster at Piedmont, S. C., in place of Albert S. Rowell. Incumbent's commission expired February 18, 1913.

J. F. Rickenbaker to be postmaster at Lake City, S. C., in place of Della D. Carter. Incumbent's commission expired June 16, 1913.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Thomas J. Ball to be postmaster at Mitchell, S. Dak., in place of James E. Wells. Incumbent's commission expired January 28, 1912.

Peter Schmitt to be postmaster at Waubay, S. Dak., in place of Peter Schnitt, to correct name.

TEXAS.

A. F. Loftis to be postmaster at Manor, Tex., in place of James T. Harrell, removed.

William R. Sharpe to be postmaster at Wolfe City, Tex., in place of L. C. Burnecke. Incumbent's commission expired April 20, 1913.

Almyra L. Williams to be postmaster at Taft, Tex. Office became presidential July 1, 1913.

VIRGINIA.

S. C. Cox to be postmaster at Galax, Va., in place of G. W. Todd. Incumbent's commission expired July 26, 1913.

WASHINGTON.

Ann E. Sykes to be postmaster at Grandview, Wash. Office became presidential January 1, 1912.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Thomas G. Burke to be postmaster at Oak Hill, W. Va., in place of James P. Staton, resigned.

P. H. Kelly to be postmaster at Thurmond, W. Va., in place of T. G. Arnold. Incumbent's commission expired July 31, 1913.

William H. McCutcheon to be postmaster at Webster Springs, W. Va., in place of Chesley S. Harper, removed.

WISCONSIN.

John G. Solverson to be postmaster at Nashotah, Wis. Office became presidential October 1, 1912.

W. H. Weed to be postmaster at Weyauwega, Wis., in place of H. S. Olson, resigned.

WYOMING.

John T. Jones to be postmaster at Worland, Wyo. Office became presidential October 1, 1913.

M. R. Merrill to be postmaster at Wheatland, Wyo., in place of Frederick E. Davis. Incumbent's commission expired December 17, 1912.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate October 1, 1913.

PROMOTIONS AND APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

Capt. Joseph Strauss to be Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance with the rank of rear admiral.

Lieut. Commander William P. Scott, an additional number in grade, to be a commander.

The following named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade):

John W. Rankin,

Charles H. Davis, jr.,

Albert M. Penn,

Martin J. Peterson, and

Thomas M. Tipton.

Midshipman Charles L. Foutz to be an ensign.

The following named citizens to be assistant surgeons in the Medical Reserve Corps:

James D. Bobbitt,

Ovid C. Foote,

Howard Priest,

Martin B. Hiden,

Arthur E. Beddoe,

Carroll R. Baker,

Charles S. Stephenson, and

William S. Wentzel.

Pharmacist Paul J. Waldner to be a chief pharmacist.

John D. P. Hodapp to be an assistant paymaster.

POSTMASTERS.

CONNECTICUT.

James T. Murray, Thompsonville.

MINNESOTA.

W. W. Belden, Caledonia.

NORTH CAROLINA.

A. C. Hughes, Apex.

O. A. Snipes, Rocky Mount.

OKLAHOMA.

J. N. Kimberlin, Altus.

OREGON.

W. A. Delzell, Klamath Falls.

TEXAS.

C. A. Howard, Bronson.

Mrs. Jesse O. Wheeler, Brownsville.

WASHINGTON.

R. B. Smith, Prescott.

WYOMING.

Mary E. Hurst, Greybull.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, October 2, 1913.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 99. An act to fix the times and places of holding district courts for the district of Arizona; and

S. 2254. An act to amend chapter 1, section 18, of the Judicial Code.

MEMORIALS.

Mr. JONES. I have received a telegram, in connection with those which I presented on yesterday, from J. W. Clise, of Seattle, Wash., in regard to the tax on rentals, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., October 1, 1913.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We sincerely protest tariff bill provision income tax that tax on rent be deducted and paid by lessee. Property should be sufficient security any tax. Respectfully urge you to oppose same.

J. W. CLISE.

Mr. POINDEXTER presented a memorial of John Barlow Camp No. 6, United Spanish War Veterans, Department of Washington and Alaska, of Vancouver, Wash., remonstrating against the proposed change in the design of the American flag, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 7898) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1913, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 116) thereon. I give notice that I shall call up the bill at the earliest practicable moment after the disposition of the conference report on the tariff bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

ANGELO ALBANO.

Mr. SHIVELY, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7384) to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Italian Government for the killing of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 118) thereon.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN SEAMEN.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to make the following report, which I ask may be read. The Secretary read the report (No. 117), as follows:

The committee, upon consideration of S. 4, S. 2221, and S. 136, reports favorably S. 136, with the statement that in the judgment of the committee action should not be taken on the measure until the regular session next December. The committee is moved to this opinion largely by reason of the fact that the International Conference on Safety at Sea will be held in London beginning November 12 next, and it would be advisable to have the results of that conference before taking final action on this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill (S. 136) will be placed on the calendar, and it will be postponed until the regular session of Congress.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, my attention was diverted for a moment. Is that a report from a committee upon a bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is, and a request on the part of the committee that the bill be not taken up until the regular session.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I inquire what is the number of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 136) to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States, to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto, and to promote safety at sea.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I must interpose an objection to the bill being laid aside for the session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the calendar, then.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let it go to the calendar, to be taken up in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the calendar.

MONONGAHELA RIVER (W. VA.) BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I report sundry bridge bills from the Committee on Commerce. The bills are in the usual form, and I shall ask for their immediate consideration.

First, from the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 6582) to authorize the city of Fairmont to construct and operate a bridge across the Monongahela River at or near the city of Fairmont, in the State of West Virginia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TUG FORK OF BIG SANDY RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 6378) to authorize Robert W. Buskirk, of Matewan, W. Va., to bridge the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at Matewan, Mingo County, W. Va., where the same forms the boundary line between the States of West Virginia and Kentucky, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BEAUFORT RIVER (S. C.) BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 7472) authorizing Beaufort and St. Helena Townships, Beaufort County, S. C., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Beaufort River, in Beaufort County, S. C., and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BLACK RIVER (ARK.) BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 7470) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across Black River at or near the section line between sections 8 and 9, in township 20 north, range 5 east, being a short distance south and east of the town of Corning, Clay County, Ark., and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LITTLE RIVER BRIDGE, ARKANSAS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 7469) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Little River at or near Lepanto, Ark., and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TENNESSEE RIVER BRIDGE AT CHATTANOOGA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 6635) to authorize the county of Hamilton, in the State of Tennessee, to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River at Chattanooga, in the State of Tennessee, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, AITKIN COUNTY, MINN.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 1985) to authorize the county of Aitkin, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in Aitkin County, Minn., and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WHITE RIVER BRIDGE AT NEWPORT, ARK.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 5891) authorizing the construction of a bridge across White River, at Newport, Ark., and I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RED LAKE RIVER BRIDGE, MINN.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 1681) to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Red Lake River, in township 153 north, range 40 west, in Red Lake County, Minn., and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 3175) to authorize the county of Miami, State of Indiana, to construct a bridge across the Wabash River, in Miami County, Ind.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 3176) to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Bangor, Me.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 3177) granting an increase of pension to Rodney Jones (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3178) granting an increase of pension to Ella M. Bragg (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SAULSBURY:

A bill (S. 3179) to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Smyrna, Del.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HUGHES:

A bill (S. 3180) to prohibit the payment of claims against the United States to public administrators, except in certain instances; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 3181) granting a pension to John E. Tevendale; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 3182) granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Frazier; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 3183) providing for the reimbursement of certain persons and organizations for damage to and destruction of their property in a riot in the city of Seattle, Wash.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COLT:

A bill (S. 3184) granting an increase of pension to Phebe A. Lewis (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3185) granting an increase of pension to Abby T. McCarthy (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3186) granting a pension to Laura F. Lawton (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3187) granting a pension to Isabella A. Trask (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TILLMAN:

A bill (S. 3188) to provide for the appointment of a district judge, a district attorney, and a marshal for the western judicial district of South Carolina; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT TO THE DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WEEKS submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to consider, adjudicate, and pay, under the act of Congress approved July 27, 1912, the claim of any trust company, banks, bankers, or similar institutions for the refund of taxes erroneously assessed or illegally collected under the war-revenue act of June 13, 1898, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DEVELOPMENT AND IMPROVEMENT OF WATERWAYS.

Mr. ASHURST. On the 15th day of last month I spoke in the Senate regarding the Newlands river-regulation bill, to wit, Senate bill 2739. I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in the RECORD a letter upon this subject which I have received from Hon. J. J. Sanders, who is one of the ablest writers and most profound thinkers in the State of Arizona.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FLORENCE, ARIZ., September 23, 1913.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have just read your great effort in favor of the Newlands river bill. It is a practical proposition that will be fully demonstrated within the next decade. Every drop of water that falls in Arizona from the clouds, every drop of water that bubbles from her springs, should be conserved for power and irrigating purposes. The swirling waters of the Colorado River will yet yield its millions of amperes for the driving of machinery and its waters for the reclamation of the desert. Then, and not till then, shall Arizona come into its own. Some characterize this great proposition embodied in the Newlands bill as the dream of a visionary. All the great things that man has ever done were at one time characterized as the dreams of visionaries. Have we not seen Morse ridiculed on the very floor where you now stand in the United States Senate Chamber; have we not seen Fulton ridiculed in the great city of New York; and, to come to the present, have we not seen the Wright brothers ridiculed by their fellow citizens of Dayton, Ohio? Then, again, we have seen the great city of Dayton taking a holiday to honor them when they made their great dream come true—when they had done what man had claimed for thousands of years could not be done.

The reclamation of desert lands is a simple mathematical and financial proposition for the Government of this country. Land that is now practically worthless would become very valuable with the life-giving waters turned on for irrigation.

With best wishes, I am,

Sincerely, yours,

J. J. SANDERS.

THE COMMERCE COURT (S. DOC. NO. 203).

Mr. BRYAN. I ask to have printed as a Senate document an article by Hon. R. F. BROUSSARD, of Louisiana, on the United States Commerce Court.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Florida will be complied with.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7207, being Order of Business 94 on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 7207.

Mr. PENROSE. Let it be read for the information of the Senate, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 7207) granting to the city and county of San Francisco certain rights of way in, over, and through certain public lands, the Yosemite National Park, and Stanislaus National Forest, and certain lands in the Yosemite National Park, the Stanislaus National Forest, and the public lands in the State of California, and for other purposes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is that what is known as the Hetch Hetchy bill?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator asks unanimous consent to consider it at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have made that request.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection to taking up the bill, but if there is going to be consideration of the other matter, which it was supposed we would take up to-day, we will not be able to dispose of it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I rather consented that the Senator from Nevada might call up this measure provided there would be no discussion of it, but if there is to be any debate, I must insist on its going over.

Mr. PITTMAN. I was not aware that there would be any debate. Of course, if there is going to be debate on the matter, I would not think for one moment of asking for its present consideration this morning.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know that there will be any extended debate, but there are a number of things in the bill which will undoubtedly call for explanations, and so forth, and I presume it would be likely to lead to some debate. Although I am not indicating that I propose to debate it at length, there are a number of things in the bill which I would like to know more about before I vote on it than I know now. I do not, however, desire to delay its consideration unnecessarily.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope the Senator from Nevada under those conditions will withdraw his request.

Mr. PITTMAN. Very well; I withdraw the request for present consideration.

THE TARIFF—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to call up for consideration a privileged report, being the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. It seems to me we ought to have a quorum when this report is considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hollis	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Bacon	Hughes	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Jackson	Overman	Smith, Md.
Bradley	James	Penrose	Smith, Mich.
Brandeggee	Johnson	Perkins	Smith, S. C.
Bristow	Jones	Pittman	Swanson
Bryan	Kern	PoinDEXTER	Thomas
Burton	La Follette	Pomerene	Thompson
Chamberlain	Lane	Ransdell	Thornton
Clarke, Ark.	Lea	Saulsbury	Tillman
Colt	McLean	Shafroth	Vardaman
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Walsh
Gore	Martine, N. J.	Shields	Weeks
Gronna	Myers	Shively	Williams
Hitchcock	Nelson	Simmons

Mr. WEEKS. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. LODGE] is unavoidably absent from the Senate on account of illness, and that the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is also absent on account of business.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] is absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the chairman of the Finance Committee whether it is his intention to have the report of the conference committee read to the Senate?

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator ask whether it is the purpose to have the report read?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes, sir. I am making an inquiry as to what is the view of the chairman of the committee in relation to the reading of the conference report.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is customary, I think, to read the conference report.

Mr. PENROSE. Then we should proceed now with the reading of the report, I take it.

Mr. SIMMONS. That would be first in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3321) entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from North Carolina whether he expects to secure a vote on the conference report to-day?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that that is my hope and my expectation.

Mr. NORRIS. Could the Senator ascertain by request, if he sees fit to take that course, whether that could be done? There are one or two of us who would like to be away if the vote is not to be taken during the afternoon.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should be very glad to have unanimous consent that we vote this afternoon, say, at not later than 6 o'clock.

Mr. NORRIS. If the debate is to go over and the vote to be taken after to-day, and that could be ascertained, it would accommodate two or three Senators.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will now, as I had intended to do a little later, ask unanimous consent that we vote upon the conference report and the Clarke amendment, so called, not later than 6 o'clock this afternoon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, we on this side of the Chamber are unable to hear the colloquy which is going on.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was simply asking unanimous consent that the vote be taken on the conference report not later than 6 o'clock this afternoon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To which the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] objects.

Mr. PENROSE. I think if the chairman of the committee will make his request later in the day perhaps he can get consent. It is a little early yet.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I had intended to postpone making the request, but, upon the suggestion of a Senator, I thought I would make it at this time. I inquire of the Senator from Washington if he would consent to a later hour to-day for taking the vote, say, before we adjourn to-night?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, one reason that I have for making the objection is that there are Senators who, I am informed, desire to debate the conference report, and some of them are not even present at this time. I would suggest that the Senator reserve his request.

Mr. SIMMONS. I withdraw the suggestion if that is the case.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from North Carolina if he expects the Senate to remain in session until we vote on the conference report?

Mr. SIMMONS. If there is any possibility of securing a vote to-night, I shall expect the Senate to remain in session.

Mr. NORRIS. Would the Senator be willing, if an agreement could be reached by which we could vote to-morrow, to have an hour determined now?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think not at this time.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from North Carolina would not want to make a request now to vote at some hour to-morrow?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I would not. I am exceedingly anxious to get through with this matter to-day or to-night, if possible.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BURTON. I desire to ask at what stage of the proceedings a point of order should be raised on this conference report—whether when the particular paragraph is reached or at the beginning of the reading?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks a point of order may be raised at any time.

Mr. BURTON. I desire to give notice, then, that I shall raise a point of order when paragraph 116 is reached.

Mr. PENROSE. And I give similar notice that I shall raise a point of order when amendment 241 is reached.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina has submitted a conference report, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report, and read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3321) "to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 8, 25, 31, 34, 42, 44, 45, 46, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 68, 80, 81, 82, 83, 86, 99, 100, 101, 102, 115, 116, 117, 129, 133, 137, 138, 143, 147, 152, 158, 172, 176, 177, 183, 188, 189, 190, 192, 200, 203, 205, 208, 209, 219, 220, 227, 231, 235, 243, 248, 249, 250, 251, 253, 257, 259, 262, 263, 267, 272, 273, 274, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 289, 290, 291, 305, 306, 307, 308, 313, 329, 332, 333, 336, 340, 348, 359, 360, 362, 366, 372, 388, 396, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 408, 409, 413, 414, 418, 419, 420, 433, 437, 444, 445, 448, 452, 463, 474, 475, 487, 488, 493, 496, 501, 508, 524, 540, 565, 573, 574, 593, 594, 595, 596, 606, 612, 613, 614, 615, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 633, 640, 645, 647, 650, 652, 662, 663, and 666.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 29, 30, 32, 33, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 47, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 65, 67, 69, 70, 71, 72, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 84, 85, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 98, 104, 105, 106, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 127, 128, 130, 131, 132, 134, 135, 136, 139, 140, 141, 144, 145, 146, 148, 149, 150, 151.

 153, 155, 156, 157, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168.
 169, 170, 171, 173, 174, 178, 179, 181, 182, 184, 185, 195, 196, 197.
 198, 199, 201, 202, 204, 205, 207, 210, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217.
 218, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 228, 229, 230, 232, 233, 234, 236, 237.
 238, 239, 240, 242, 243, 244, 245, 247, 252, 260, 261, 264, 265, 266.
 271, 275, 276, 279, 286, 287, 288, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 299, 300.
 302, 303, 304, 309, 311, 312, 314, 315, 316, 317, 319, 320, 321, 322.
 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 330, 331, 334, 335, 337, 338, 341, 342.
 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 364.
 365, 368, 370, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 380, 381, 383, 384, 387.
 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 398, 406, 407, 410, 411, 412, 415.
 416, 417, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 434.
 435, 436, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 446, 447, 449, 450, 451, 453, 454.
 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470.
 471, 473, 476, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 489, 490.
 492, 494, 495, 497, 498, 499, 500, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 510.
 511, 512, 513, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 521, 522, 523, 525, 526, 527.
 528, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 541, 543, 544.
 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560.
 561, 562, 563, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 572, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580.
 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 587, 589, 590, 591, 592, 600, 601, 602, 604.
 605, 607, 610, 611, 617, 625, 626, 627, 631, 632, 635, 636, 637, 638.
 639, 643, 644, 646, 651, 653, 654, 655, 660, 661, 664, 665, 667, 668.
 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, and 676; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "7" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "6"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "15" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "12"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "5" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "10"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert on page 16 of the bill, line 5, after the word "refined," the following: "and chlorate of"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "pound," where it first occurs, strike out the comma and the words "and not above 75 cents per pound"; in lines 4 and 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "valorem," strike out the semicolon and the following: "valued above 75 cents per pound, 20 per cent ad valorem"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "not specially provided for in this section,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. PENROSE. I suggest that when the Secretary mentions an amendment he also, if possible, mention the page of the bill on which the amendment occurs. That will facilitate following the reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is only possible for the Secretary to read the report as it is printed.

Mr. PENROSE. Then if the Secretary would not proceed quite so fast, we could perhaps turn the pages.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the conference report and read as follows:

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert, on page 21 of the bill, line 14, after the word "valorem," the following: "manufactures of carbon not specially provided for in this section, 20 per cent ad valorem"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "for" of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "in this section"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 64: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 26 of the bill, line 9, after the word "enamel" and the comma insert the following: "not specially provided for in this section"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, does that amendment refer to page 26 of the bill which we have before us?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is unable to give any information on that matter.

Mr. PENROSE. Perhaps the chairman of the committee can give the information.

Mr. SHIVELY. It refers to the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. BRISTOW. But the amendment just referred to by the Secretary states that it occurred on page 26, line 9, while in the bill which we find on our desks there was no change made by the Senate in the provision of the House bill on that page and line. What section is it, please?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is unable to give any information in reply to these questions.

Mr. BRISTOW. Somebody ought to be able to give the information.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator, so that there may be no confusion about what bill this report refers to, that the report refers always to the bill as it passed the House, and not to the bill as it passed the Senate or to any subsequent print. Lines are referred to frequently, but the reference is not to the lines in the engrossed bill, but to the number of the line in the paragraph with which the particular item in the report is dealing.

Mr. BRISTOW. The reading is simply a farce, then, is it not, so far as any information to the Senate goes?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to make a suggestion. It seems that Senators ought to have some bill whereby they can follow the reading of the conference report and ascertain what was done by the conferees. If we can find copies of that bill, they will be distributed to Senators.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is the reason I made the inquiry. In looking at the page and line indicated by the Secretary I see that no amendment is there, and so we have no way whatever of knowing what the amendment is, what it refers to, or anything about it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I understand this report refers to what is called the blue print, which is on the desk?

Mr. SIMMONS. Called what?

Mr. PENROSE. Refers to what is called the blue print of the bill, which is in the possession of the Secretary.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the engrossed bill of the House.

Mr. PENROSE. Is that blue-print bill in its paging and paragraphing the same as the bill which we have on our desks?

Mr. SIMMONS. It is in its paragraphs; yes. The same paragraphs are mentioned.

Mr. PENROSE. Is it identical?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know about the numbering of the pages; I can not say as to that.

Mr. PENROSE. I think we ought to insist upon having this matter go over until we can get the print referred to in the conference report.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I am not willing that that should be done.

Mr. PENROSE. The reading is a farce the way it is going on.

Mr. SIMMONS. The way by which to compare the report with the bill is by taking the engrossed bill of the House and following that. What I meant to say to the Senator a little while ago was that the lines of that bill as printed may be misleading because the report refers to the lines in the paragraphs of that bill; it refers to the lines following the amendment, counting from the beginning of the amendment down.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair make an inquiry of the Senator from North Carolina? When the bill came originally from the House, that was the engrossed bill from the House, was it not?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Were not copies of that bill printed at once for the use of the Senate, and does not this report refer to that bill as then printed?

Mr. SIMMONS. Surely, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then can not Senators be supplied by the pages or the Sergeant at Arms or somebody else with the original print of the House bill?

Mr. PENROSE. That is it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It seems to the Chair that would clear up the situation and enable Senators to follow the bill. The Chair desires to say that if we had the House print of House bill 3321, it would be perfectly easy to follow the conference report. The Sergeant at Arms says this bill is on every Senator's desk, marked "Conference print."

Mr. BRISTOW. That is what we were trying to follow. Will the Secretary please read the last amendment and see where we come out?

The SECRETARY (reading):

Amendment numbered 64: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

On page 26 of the bill, line 9, after the word "enamel" and the comma, insert the following: "not specially provided for in this section"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is paragraph 98, on page 29 of the bill that we have. The Secretary read it as page 26, line 9. Amendment No. 64 in the printed bill is in paragraph 98, on page 29. This interlineation comes after the word "enamel," as read by the Secretary. There is some confusion, some mistake, in this print. All I want is to be able to find what the Secretary refers to when he announces the amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is quite evident that that is a misprint, and should be "page 29."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, is it so that in the conference print that lies upon the desks of Senators the changes made by the committee of conference are indicated only by footnotes and are not carried into the text of the print at all? For instance, I am led to ask that question because I see at the bottom of page 29, corresponding to a numeral "1" which appears at the end of the word "enamel," in line 5 of that page, the following statement:

Conference inserted the words "not specially provided for in this section."

My inquiry is to ascertain whether the so-called conference print tells what the report of the conference committee is only by these annotations made, I suppose, in the printing department.

In other words, are we to accept this report on some footnotes made by parties unknown to us, or is the report to be printed under authority of the committee?

Mr. SIMMONS. The bill as amended by the conference committee is printed. If the Senator has not a copy of it on his desk, he ought to have one on his desk.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator from North Carolina be kind enough to tell me under what date the perfected report purports to be printed?

Mr. SIMMONS. It was printed, I think, on the 29th of September.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have that print in my hands, Mr. President. That is the document from which I have been reading.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course the Senator understands that to make everything perfectly clear in a bill, print it as you will, is a difficult matter. If the Senator will take the footnotes he refers to, and will then take the conference report, he will have no difficulty, I think, in ascertaining exactly what the conferees have done.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I assumed that if the text of the conference report were followed out, and if a Senator should sit down with a lead pencil and interline in the proper places what the conference report says, he could pick it out for himself.

Mr. SIMMONS. This bill is printed just as every other conference bill has been printed.

Mr. PENROSE. Oh, no; it is not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is a matter about which I would not be competent to speak, because I have never been on the Committee on Finance; but the Senator from Pennsylvania, as I understand, says that is not the case.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator from Connecticut permit me a moment?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, this reading is a farce. We have reached the fiftieth amendment, and I doubt whether there is a minority Senator who knows anything about any amendment which has been read by the Secretary. It has been a physical impossibility to follow this measure as it is being proceeded with in the Senate after a very long period of secret conference by the majority in perfecting it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator will wait one moment, we are acting on a conference print. I maintain that the Senate is entitled to have its own print, and I refer the Chair to page 28 of the Rules of the Senate, paragraph 3:

Every bill and joint resolution introduced on leave or reported from a committee, and all bills and joint resolutions received from the House of Representatives, and all reports of committees shall be printed, unless, for the dispatch of the business of the Senate, such printing may be dispensed with.

Senators have on their desks only the bill as it was printed in the House of Representatives and the bill as it was printed for the use of the conference committee. These two bills differ in paging, in lining, and in general arrangement. Some Senators have one bill and some have the other. Before the bill is proceeded with I think the Senate is entitled to have a print of its own, which will be accurate in its dovetailing in with the references made in the report.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the bill in all particulars is the same as it passed the House, with the amendments of the Senate and with the action of the conference committee. Whether that bill was printed by an order of one body or by an order of the other body is immaterial; the matter is identically the same.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator. Is it usual for the Senate to consider the House print of a bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. We are not considering the bill; we are considering the conference report. The bill is not before the Senate. The only thing before the Senate is the conference report. The bill is merely to enable Senators to understand the report. That is its purpose and its office, and nothing else.

Mr. PENROSE. Surely the bill is part of the report. The bill is reported with amendments.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator finds on his desk a bill which was ordered to be printed by the House of Representatives. It is the House bill as engrossed and as amended by the Senate, and as agreed to by the conference committee. The Senator makes the point that therefore the whole thing is in a state of confusion, when as a matter of fact the two bills are identical. If the bill were to be printed by the Senate, this bill just as it is printed now and as it is on the desks of Senators, would be printed, line for line, without any change whatsoever in punctuation.

We are not considering that bill. That bill is not before the Senate at all. What is before the Senate is the conference report, which is to be read from the desk. The Secretary is not reading this bill from the desk. The Secretary is not reading the eliminations and the interlineations in this bill. This bill contains in it, necessarily, the Senate amendments that were rejected, either by the recession of the Senate or by the agreement of the House to disagree to the Senate amendments.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SIMMONS. Just a moment. That is not what is under consideration before the Senate. The thing that is under consideration before the Senate, and the only thing under consideration before the Senate, is the report of the conference committee. The only purpose of having this bill here at all, the only purpose of having it printed in this way, is to enable Senators easily to locate these amendments and ascertain what they are. There is no difficulty about the matter.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish the Senator would let me finish my statement; then I will yield.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly; but I wish to ask a question for information.

Mr. SIMMONS. There is no difficulty about the matter. Here are 150 amendments that were made by the Senate and receded from by the Senate conferees. The report refers to the numbers of the amendments as printed in the bill. All that Senators have to do is to turn to the amendments made by the Senate. A conference print of the bill is just as good for that purpose as a Senate print of the bill. Senators will simply have to refer to the number of the amendment made by the Senate. That has been printed also. Here it is upon the desk of every Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. SIMMONS. Pardon me a moment. There is also an official copy of the bill that gives the exact language of the amendments of the Senate. As I say, Senators will only have to refer to the bill to determine what each one of these 150 amendments is.

Then the House receded from its disagreement to four hundred and odd of these amendments. They are referred to by number.

When you get to those where there was a disagreement on the part of the House with an amendment and an agreement by the Senate conferees to the amendment, the conference report explains the character of the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Now will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina where Senators will find the amendment reported by the conference committee after the word "enamel" in amendment No. 64 to House bill 3321? An amendment has been made, after the word "enamel," as follows:

Not specially provided for in this section.

Where do we find that anywhere except in the report which the Secretary is reading?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask the Senator to call that matter to my attention later.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But we are right upon it now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will answer that question. It is found on page 29 of the conference report print. The Chair interfered for the purpose of enabling Senators to get the information they want; but it must be perfectly apparent that it can be obtained by reading the conference report.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Chair refers to the footnote?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The footnote.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. On page 29?

The VICE PRESIDENT. On page 29.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if I may be allowed to interpolate a suggestion here, it seems to me that this is the situation: The report of the conference committee, for instance, on page 3, in speaking of the very amendment which the Senator from Michigan is discussing, states as follows, midway of the page:

On page 26 of the bill, line 9, after the word "enamel"—

And so forth.

The Senator from North Carolina, in his explanation, stated that there was an official copy of the bill, which the conference committee was considering. I assume that is the House bill as it came to the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If Senators will examine the House bill, which was passed by the House on May 8, as certified by its Clerk, they will find, on page 26, line 9, the matter in controversy, which is now, under the conference print, taken care of in Senate amendment No. 64, on page 29. So the only way that a Senator in the consideration of the 150 amendments, more or less, contained in this conference report can locate the amendment and see what change has been made by the conference committee is to take the report of the conference committee and get an old copy of the House bill passed by the House on May 8 and turn to the page there, as indicated in the report; then get a copy of the conference print and turn to the Senate amendment, by its number, and see how the Senate amendment, as described by its number, compares with the provision of the House bill as referred to in the Senate report, and see what the change is. A Senator must do that before he can vote intelligently upon these amendments. I think I have stated the case as it stands.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in the official engrossed bill I find, on page 29, line 9, after the word "enamel," and the comma:

Insert the following: "not specially provided for in this section."

I find in the conference print here that the note with reference to the action of the conference committee is to insert the words "not specially provided for in this section."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No one can hear the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. I can not hear myself; there is so much confusion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There must be order in the Senate of the United States, or the proceedings will stop.

Mr. SIMMONS. I suggest that the reading of the report proceed, and if gentlemen want to make technical objections that they take note of them and present them after the report has been read.

Mr. PENROSE. I want to find out distinctly from the chairman of the Finance Committee whether he denies to the Senate a Senate print of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator that the print that has been put on the desks of Senators, the House print, by order of the House, is identical with the print of the conference committee, and I do not think it is necessary to have any other print of the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Connecticut has just shown that it is not identical in connection with one particular amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I say it is identical with the print of the conference committee, and it is a correct statement of what the House and Senate conferees did.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not dispute the fact that both bills have the same contents in them, but I do deny that they are the same bills in paging and arrangement and that they agree as documents to be referred to. For the first time in the history of the United States we are proceeding in the Senate with legislation on a copy of a House bill printed as long ago as May 8, with no information as to whether it is a final print or whether it is a copy of the bill finally acted on, and without any bill printed for the use of the Senate accompanying the report of the conference committee, and in accordance with the rules of the Senate.

Over 400 changes have been made in the House bill in absolutely secret conference. The minority conferees might just as well have been in China as to have been upon that conference committee. On Monday the bill was reported to the full conference. The minority have had only since Monday to examine this measure, and that opportunity has been accompanied by documents which are not accurate as documents of reference in connection with the report.

Now, here is a matter of the greatest concern to the American people. The minority only asks for a brief opportunity intelligently to consider it. There is no desire whatever to filibuster on this measure or to delay it a single moment, but the Senate is certainly entitled to orderly procedure in accordance with the precedents of the Senate. In the 16 years that I have been a Member of this body I have never known the Senate of the United States to proceed to the consideration of a measure upon a print of the House of Representatives. The rule distinctly states that every report of a committee shall be printed, including the bill, for the use of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It does not say "including the bill."

Mr. PENROSE. I think that is the inference.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Time after time during the last session reports of conference committees have come in here upon large appropriation bills without any reprint of the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. By unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Without any unanimous consent.

Mr. PENROSE. It is frequently dispensed with by unanimous consent, and we all know how most of us surrender our prerogatives in connection with large appropriations. But here is a bill affecting vitally the industries of America that in all human probability will be on the statute books for four years, and the minority are certainly entitled to orderly procedure and an opportunity for enlightenment.

I call the attention of the Chair to page 28, paragraph 3, of Rule XXIX.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks everything has been done that that paragraph requires.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Chair think that this bill has been printed for the use of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair states that it appears from the record that the bill as received from the House of Representatives was printed and is here, and the Chair is informed that the report of the conference committee was printed and is here, and the Chair does not see anything else in the rule that is required to be printed.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Chair will pardon a colloquy from the floor, might I ask the Chair whether it is usual or orderly to legislate on a House print of a bill in the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Of that the Chair is not aware, but since the Chair has been here that is just the way legislation has taken place.

Mr. PENROSE. The Chair thinks the Senate must proceed to legislate on a copy of the House bill, printed by a body over which we have no jurisdiction?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not say, for the Chair does not know, whether the Senate will do it. The Senate has done it.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not recall that it has ever been done in the history of the Senate of the United States. If there is a precedent, I should like to hear it.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, I should like to make a suggestion. This conference report is not a House print, nor is it a Senate print. It is a report of the two Houses, and it can be printed in either House. The other House can certainly print it for the purpose of enlightening the Senate and that the Senate may understand it.

Mr. PENROSE. It is true in its inception it is a combined effort of the conferees of both branches, but after it gets into this body it becomes separated again and we sit here as an independent and sovereign legislative branch to consider it. To ask us to pass on a matter of this momentous consequence on the print of a coordinate body over which we have no jurisdiction is one of the most preposterous parliamentary doctrines ever enunciated in the history of the Anglo-Saxon race.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would be very much inclined to rule with the Senator from Pennsylvania, regardless of the rule of the Senate, if it were not perfectly apparent that from the conference print of House bill 3321 there is not the slightest difficulty in the world in ascertaining what the conference report is.

Mr. PENROSE. The House receded on 469 amendments and the Senate on 155. That shows the extensive and complicated character of these changes.

Mr. President, I think I speak for a large number of the minority when I say that we are unable to consider intelligently and properly this report without a Senate print in the accuracy of which we can have confidence, so far as the references in the report are concerned. I therefore ask unanimous consent that this report shall go over until a Senate print can be had which will bear the recommendation of the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent—

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, of course I must object. I want to say in this connection that since I have been here and from a reading of the history of former conference reports, certainly not in recent years, certainly not during the last 25 years, I do not think the majority party has ever given the same length of time for the examination and consideration of a conference report that the minority have been given in connection with this conference report.

This conference print has been here, and Senators have been sending to me for it, and I have invariably furnished them with a copy of the bill and the conference report as printed. They have had since last Sunday morning. To-day is Thursday. Since Sunday this conference print of the bill has been at their service. This makes the fourth week day that Senators have had for the purpose of examining it and comparing and considering it. My recollection of tariff bills heretofore is that almost immediately, before the minority had any opportunity to consider the report of the conference committee at all, the bills have been taken up, and they have been forced into an immediate discussion of them.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have the floor; and on that point I would ask the Senator whether he would be curious enough to inquire of the clerks whether the tariff bill four years ago was not printed for the use of the Senate, together with the report of the conferees?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know whether it was or not. I have not inquired. I do not think it is material whether the bill as reported is printed by the other House or by this House. We have the House print, and that, I contend, is amply sufficient.

Mr. PENROSE. I make the statement, and I challenge contradiction, that no report of a conference or other committee was ever made to the Senate in the history of this body that was not printed at the request of an individual Senator and did not go over until such printing could be had. If there is any such case in the records, I would be glad to have it produced.

There is no other term to designate this method of parliamentary procedure than a slipshod method and an utter disregard of all legislative proprieties. It is true that the minority have had ample leisure to consider this bill, but it has been the leisure of reflection and of ignorance, without any accurate knowledge until the last moment or any information as to the details of this measure, while the majority was sitting behind closed doors in caucus or in conference. It has been leisure, Mr. President. It has been most irksome to all of us. Even during these last few days we have been held in anxious expectation while the Democratic Senators met in caucus morning, afternoon, and evening in order to beat the malcontents into line. That certainly is not the opportunity which Senators sitting here under oath, even if it be that they are in the minority, are entitled to in the consideration of a measure of this importance.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think, Mr. President—

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator excuse me a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. PENROSE. I am pretty nearly through.

Mr. President, vast interests are involved in this bill. Millions of dollars are involved in the determination of these schedules. We have known in the past in Washington and in State capitals of matters surreptitiously or accidentally introduced into a measure which have determined millions of dollars of property or radically affected the purpose of the measure. There are billions of dollars involved in this measure, which is an encyclopedia of the industries of America. The change of a comma may determine whether the manufacturer shall be ruined or the importer made prosperous. We have heard much of lobbies around this Capitol. The bribery of a clerk, were such a thing possible, the tampering with a printer, were that possible, might mean destruction or prosperity to Europe or America. The accident or mistake of a printer or a clerk, regardless of any sinister motive, might equally determine the fortunes of the American manufacturer or the German importer.

Are we not entitled to the most accurate information and the fullest enlightenment? Shall we be treated in this cavalier manner and told that our only information is a print of the House of May 8, whether a final print or a preliminary print we have no information, on a conference report which is before this body when we are entitled to have a Senate print of the whole report, and when the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] has clearly shown that in an amendment reached early in the reading there is a discrepancy of three pages between the House bill and the conference report?

Mr. President, the interest from my point of view of the American laborer and the American manufacturer at least demands that when this guillotine shall fall it shall fall with due solemnity and with the observance of all the decencies.

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

Mr. PENROSE. I have the floor, but I will yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. PENROSE. No; I am not through.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I will speak in my own right.

Mr. PENROSE. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not ask the Senator to yield; I thought the Senator had finished. I will reply in my own right.

Mr. PENROSE. Now, Mr. President, the Chair has ruled in the full light of publicity of the American people that the Senate of the United States is not entitled to have a print of the tariff bill of its own, and in this connection I want to say—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not ruled any such thing.

Mr. PENROSE. That it is not necessary to have it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has ruled that under the rules of the Senate all the prints of the tariff bill that are needed have been made.

Mr. PENROSE. I make the charge distinctly—I can not prove it to-day, but I shall prove it, even if it be after this bill receives the approval of the President—that this conference copy which we are asked to consider has a number of typographical errors in it. I make that statement to the Senate; I challenge its contradiction; and I expect to be able to prove it.

I now move, Mr. President, that the consideration of this bill be postponed, and that the report be printed for the use of the Senate, and that then the consideration of the measure be resumed by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the further consideration of the conference report be postponed until the bill as agreed upon by the conferees has been prepared for the use of the Senate and printed. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. PENROSE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there is not the slightest practical difficulty in following the action of the conferees. Every Senator has upon his desk the conference report on House bill 3321.

Mr. PENROSE. I claim that the bill is filled with typographical errors, which may or may not affect millions of dollars' worth of property.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That has nothing to do with what I am saying.

Mr. PENROSE. No; a typographical error would not affect the Senator in a tariff bill, I suppose.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The bill has been laid on the desks of Senators and copies may be readily obtained.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that a motion to lay on the table has been made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Nebraska, who desires to make an inquiry?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have just been informed by the Senator from North Carolina that he made a motion to lay the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hear him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If so, I am out of order and can yield to nobody.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hear the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I made that motion.

Mr. NORRIS. The inquiry I desired to make was whether such a motion had not been made and if it is debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina moves to lay the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania on the table.

Mr. PENROSE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SHEPPARD (when Mr. CULBERSON's name was called). I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. JACKSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. McCUMBER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. McCUMBER] is necessarily absent from the city on important business.

Mr. PENROSE (when Mr. OLIVER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. OLIVER] is absent from Washington and will be absent during the remainder of the week. I will let this statement stand for every vote during the rest of this week.

Mr. SHAFROTH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS]. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Arizona (when his name was called). I have a modified pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. In view of that I do not feel free to vote on this question. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. As he is not here I refrain from voting. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea." He being absent I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when Mr. TOWNSEND's name was called). I again announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and will let this announcement stand for the day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire has the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then I ask leave to withdraw my vote, as I have a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER. I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. REED. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. STONE]. It is absolutely impossible for him to be in the Senate on account of sickness in his family. I make this announcement generally now to cover any votes that may be had within the next three or four days. I myself desire to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BACON. I inquire whether the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. BACON. Then I withhold my vote, as I have a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. LEA. I announce my pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. It does not, however, extend to the conference report on this measure. As the question now before the Senate is incidental to that, I will allow my vote in the affirmative to stand.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am paired with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], and therefore refrain from voting. If that Senator were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS. I desire to state that the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is absent on account of important business. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Ashurst	Lane	Ransdell	Thomas
Bryan	Lewis	Reed	Thompson
Gore	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Thornton
Hitchcock	Martine, N. J.	Shields	Vardaman
Hollis	Myers	Shively	Walsh
Hughes	Overman	Simmons	Williams
James	Owen	Smith, Md.
Johnson	Pittman	Smith, S. C.
Kern	Pomerene	Swanson
.
Borah	Burton	La Follette	Perkins
Bradley	Gronna	McLean	Polindexter
Brandegee	Jackson	Norris	Smith, Mich.
Bristow	Jones	Penrose	Weeks

NOT VOTING—46.

Bacon	Culberson	McCumber	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Cummins	Nelson	Smoot
Brady	Dillingham	Newlands	Stephenson
Burleigh	du Pont	O'Gorman	Sterling
Cañon	Fall	Oliver	Stone
Chamberlain	Fletcher	Page	Sutherland
Chilton	Gallinger	Robinson	Tillman
Clapp	Goff	Root	Townsend
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Saulsbury	Warren
Clarke, Ark.	Lea	Shafroth	Works
Colt	Lippitt	Sherman
Crawford	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.

So the motion of Mr. SIMMONS to lay Mr. PENROSE's motion on the table was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the conference report.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Finance. I wish to ask him what bill the minority Members are now to refer to? There are several prints here on our desks, in fact every print is here except the caucus print.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania knows perfectly well that the report of the conference committee is the report upon the engrossed bill of the other House. There is a conference print, which is intended to aid Senators in determining what are the amendments which are made and referred to in the conference report. The Senator will also find an official print of the amendments made by the Senate to the House bill, printed September 9. The Senator from Pennsylvania may need one or the other or all of these; I do not know. I have no trouble myself, taking the engrossed bill and the conference report, in determining exactly what has been done.

Mr. PENROSE. Of course, the Senator from North Carolina made the report; he has been sitting in these secret conferences, and is much more familiar with this measure than am I. He can doubtless handle a dozen copies of the bill, but I am somewhat at a loss to know just how to follow the report. I will ask the Secretary to read slowly now, so that the minority Senators may identify each amendment.

The SECRETARY. Continuing the reading on page 3 of the printed report—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will indicate the page where the amendment will be found in the conference print.

The SECRETARY. Amendment numbered 66 appears on page 31 of the conference print.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "otherwise" in the matter inserted by said amendment and insert after the word "for" the following: "in this section"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73 appears on page 32 of the conference print:

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the last word of the matter inserted by said amendment and the comma insert the following: "wholly or partly manufactured"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. PENROSE. Now, Mr. President, will the Secretary repeat that again? What paragraph does the Secretary refer to?

The SECRETARY. Amendment No. 73, on page 32 of the conference print.

Mr. PENROSE. I beg pardon of the Chair. I had the House bill. Is the Secretary referring to page 32, line 12?

The SECRETARY. Page 32, amendment numbered 73:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with amendment as follows: After the last word of the matter inserted by said amendment and the comma insert the following: "wholly or partly manufactured."

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I will ask the chairman of the committee whether he does not consider that in the nature of new matter? It was in neither bill. It has been frequently ruled in this body that the only subject in conference between the two Houses is matter actually in disagreement between them. Neither the House nor the Senate said anything about "wholly or partly manufactured" in the consideration of this subject.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, that—

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, if the Senator will speak up so that the minority may hear him, he would overcome the tendency to whisper, which doubtless characterized the proceedings of the secret caucus, which he has got into the habit of observing in the last two months.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has probably had so much to do with making tariff bills in secret at the dictation of the special interests of this country that he is enabled to speak with some authority upon the question of secrecy with reference to legislation.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the Senator is not quite correct, but I have overcome any bad habits by listening to the lofty pretensions of the Democracy during the campaign and saturating my system with the precepts of the "new freedom," and just as I am becoming converted and getting endowed with high aspirations and treading among the clouds in the loneliness which always accompanies a righteous man, I observe the chairman of the Finance Committee and the Democratic Senators sinking to depths which I never contemplated. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, we have learned very recently that the Senator from Pennsylvania has seen a new light. Many of his votes upon this tariff bill indicate that he has suddenly become a radical progressive; but, Mr. President, the Senate understands and the country understands that it is because the elections last year in Pennsylvania condemned and repudiated the Senator's standpatism, and he is now trimming his sails for the next election.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, do not let us throw up these unpleasant incidents of the past. [Laughter.] I shall never forget—

Mr. SIMMONS. I sympathize with the Senator.

Mr. PENROSE. I never shall forget the impressive picture presented to this body when the Senator from North Carolina, in a gray suit of clothes and with the thermometer about 102, was haranguing a listening Senate for three days, urging what was considered by the consumer in some parts of the country to be the most vicious duty in the whole tariff bill—a duty upon lumber. He has changed and I have changed; that is the law of evolution and development and progress. He has gone backward, while I have gone forward and upward. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania submit to an interrogatory? Do I understand that the Republican Party—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. PENROSE. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand that the Republican Party will enter into the—

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that if he moves at all he will have to move upward, because he has gone as far downward as it is possible for him to go. [Laughter.]

Mr. PENROSE. Not so far as the Senator from North Carolina has gone. I yield now to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wanted to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether the Republican Party proposed to enter the next campaign with a banner upon which shall be inscribed the legend "PENROSE and publicity"?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to have that inscribed on my banner; but I will not need a banner, for this bill will return Pennsylvania to the Republican column by 300,000 majority. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will now proceed with the reading.

Mr. PENROSE. No, Mr. President; I have an inquiry pending. I suppose that I still have the privilege of asking for information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I beg pardon.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator kindly inform the Senate whether or not he considers this new matter or whether he considers that it was in conference between the two Houses and investigated, considered, and debated?

Mr. SIMMONS. That is an amendment to Senate amendment No. 73, I believe.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the Senator will have to overcome that mumbling habit. We can not hear him here. If he will speak out—

Mr. SIMMONS. I have had very great difficulty in hearing the Senator from Pennsylvania, but I have not alluded to it constantly.

Mr. PENROSE. And the Senator will hear from me again before the sun sets.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have already discovered that the Senator has made up his mind to throw all the obstacles in the way of the passage of this bill that it is possible for his ingenious and inventive mind to conjure up. Now, if the Senator will permit me—

Mr. PENROSE. On that point, if the Senator will permit me, I repudiate the suggestion that I am delaying this bill. I am being oppressed and repressed by a refusal to have furnished any accurate knowledge, beginning with the extraordinary and unprecedented action of the Senate in declining to have the bill printed. If the Senator will kindly inform the minority whether he considers that new matter or matter that was debated and considered in conference, I will let it go at that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, that is with reference to the amendment made by the Senate to paragraph 109, adding the words "and barrel hoops of iron or steel," and striking out the ad valorem fixed by the House, 12 per cent, and inserting an ad valorem of 10 per cent. It was considered by the conferees, and I have no question about it that it was perfectly competent to add to that amendment the words "wholly or partly manufactured."

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, legislation of this character in an encyclopedic measure of this sort is filled with possibilities. Can the Senator point to a page in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the proceedings of the Senate or the House showing that any amendment was offered or any scintilla of debate was had regarding the words "wholly or partly manufactured"?

Mr. SIMMONS. Why, it is perfectly competent for the conferees in connection with an actual amendment to change that amendment, to agree to it with a modification, or to add things that were not discussed. The changes which the conferees made now come before the Senate. They have made a great many changes in these amendments as to which there was a disagreement.

Mr. PENROSE. I have no doubt that they made many changes.

Mr. SIMMONS. They have inserted things that have never been discussed before the Senate or the House.

Mr. PENROSE. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is true of every conference report that has ever been made upon a tariff bill. That is true of every conference report that has been made upon any other bill, I take it, especially if it involved many items of change by the one House or by the other House. That is what we are considering the conference report for. That is what makes it necessary that it should come back, for the purpose of enabling the two Houses to pass upon any new matter that may be incorporated into an amendment and deciding, where there is a disagreement on the part of one House with an amendment, whether the conference report shall be accepted with that change in the amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, had the whole paragraph been in conference, I admit that the conferees, following the precedents of 100 years, would have been permitted to confer as to the phraseology of the whole paragraph. Had this bill been amended in the Senate by striking out all after the enacting clause in the House bill and inserting the bill as it passed the Senate, the whole measure would have been in conference and susceptible of change. But I maintain that in this paragraph all that was considered was whether the Senate amendment, "barrel hoops of iron or steel," should be agreed to or should be disagreed to. There was never any consideration given to those mysterious words "wholly or partly manufactured." Were those words dictated by the "insidious lobby," of which we read so much, or in some way meant as a salve to the ruder and more definite words "barrel hoops of iron or steel," or what is the meaning of these cabalistic expressions which have been inserted in the bill? Can the Senator explain them?

Mr. SIMMONS. It is very easily explained, Mr. President.

Mr. PENROSE. What kind of articles will the words cover?

Mr. SIMMONS. Barrel hoops of iron or steel, wholly or partly manufactured.

Mr. PENROSE. What are those articles?

Mr. SIMMONS. I suppose the Senator understands what that is as well as I do; it is a matter of common knowledge.

The Senator says he does not know whether this language was incorporated here at the instance of an "insidious lobby" or not. I wish to say to the Senator that ever since the war, probably with the exception of the act of 1894, certainly every time the Republican Party has framed a tariff bill in this country, there has been an insidious lobby here, and that lobby has had its way in framing the bill. In many instances that lobby has practically written the bill. But despite the declaration of the Senator from Pennsylvania, the country knows and the Congress knows that in this instance the insidious lobby that came here and had its way when Republican tariff bills were under consideration has gone home absolutely empty handed.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator speaks with experience and with fervor. He and I, of course in an entirely proper way, were in very close contact with one of the most powerful lobbies that ever appeared in Washington, four years ago—the lumber lobby.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator may have been. I do not know as to that.

Mr. PENROSE. Many of the people who came to see me had just left the Senator. [Laughter.] We are supposed now to be on a higher standard and under a new régime. What I want to know now is. Do the words "wholly or partly manufactured" mean the same as "barrel hoops of iron or steel"?

Mr. SIMMONS. The words "wholly manufactured," Mr. President, refer to "barrel hoops of iron or steel."

Mr. PENROSE. Then what was the object of putting vague words, which may comprehend a multitude of unthought-of objects, in place of these specific words? Will the Senator explain to the minority what was the purpose?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the purpose of that is perfectly clear. We wanted to make it apply to barrel hoops of iron or steel, whether they were partly manufactured or wholly manufactured.

Mr. PENROSE. Can the Senator inform the Senate, without a breach of etiquette of the Democratic caucus, at whose suggestion the amendment was made?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I can not inform the Senator. So far as I know, it was at the suggestion of nobody, but was done upon the consideration of the matter by the conferees themselves.

Mr. PENROSE. No stenographer was present, I take it, to keep a record of the caucus proceedings?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; and I have not heard of any being present at conferences upon tariff bills heretofore.

Mr. PENROSE. I record my protest, and I shall later on raise a point of order on another paragraph.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report, as follows: Amendment numbered 87 (p. 35): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows—

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the Secretary has skipped to page 35. I have here a memorandum of amendments on page 33. Oh, I suppose they are amendments of the House.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, in general where there was an amendment there was an agreement or disagreement without modification. In this case there was a modification.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report, as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and in line 14 of the restored matter strike out the numeral "20" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "15"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. BURTON. I raise the point of order on the conference report, so far as it relates to that paragraph, on the ground that the report fixes the rate on an item included in this paragraph, woven wire cloth, other than the rate fixed either by the House or by the Senate, and below the limit fixed by either the House or the Senate.

As the bill came to us from the House the duty on woven wire cloth was fixed at 20 per cent. The Senate added an amendment set forth in lines 21, 22, and 23, at the bottom of page 36, the end of amendment No. 87, in these words:

Woven wire cloth made of iron, steel, copper, brass, bronze, or other metal, 30 mesh and above, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Thus the House rate was 20 per cent and the Senate rate was 30 per cent. The conference committee, going outside of these two rates, changed the figure "30," at the end of line 22, page 36, as it appears in the conference print, and made it "15." It is thus a clear case of a figure lower than and outside of the limits fixed by either the House or the Senate.

I raise the point at this time, and if the Chair desires to decide it I will state the case more fully. If it is desired that the reading of the bill proceed I shall ask that this paragraph be again taken up.

Mr. SIMMONS. I suggested some time ago that I thought that was decidedly the best practice. If Senators desire to make points about some particular amendment, let them reserve the points until the report has been read. I think that is the best practice.

Mr. BURTON. I am entirely satisfied with that method. Of course, I wish to have ample time to discuss it when it is reached, and do not wish to have it taken up in my absence.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report, as follows:

Amendment numbered 88 (p. 38): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 88, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"121. Automobiles, valued at $2,000 or more, and automobile bodies, 45 per cent ad valorem; automobiles valued at less than $2,000, 30 per cent ad valorem; automobile chassis, and finished parts of automobiles, not including tires, 30 per cent ad valorem."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 95 (p. 39): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "25" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "30"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 96 (p. 39): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 96, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "30" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "35"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 97 (p. 40): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 97, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "Cast iron pipe of every description" and a comma. In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "cast-iron"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103 (p. 42): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 3 and 4 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: "but not ornamented or decorated with lithographic or other printing"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 107 (p. 45): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 107, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "15" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "20"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 114 (p. 47): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 41 of the bill, line 4, after the word "oxide," insert a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 126 (p. 50): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 44 of the bill, line 25, after the word "valorem" and the semicolon, insert the following: "time detectors, 15 per centum ad valorem" and a semicolon; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 142 (p. 55): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 142, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "without the payment of duty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 154 (p. 60): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 154, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "oatmeal and rolled oats, 30 cents per 100 pounds; oat hulls, 8 cents per 100 pounds."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 175 (p. 66): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 175 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "1 cent" and insert in lieu thereof "1 1/2 cents"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 180 (p. 67): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 180, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert on page 58 of the bill, line 19, after the word "dead" the following: "or prepared in any manner, including the weight of the immediate coverings or containers"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 186 (p. 72): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 186, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "except that when it shall appear to the collector of customs from the gauger's return, verified by an affidavit by the importer to be filed within five days after the delivery of the merchandise, that a cask or package has been broken or otherwise injured in transit from a foreign port and as a result thereof a part of its contents amounting to 10 per centum or more of the total value of the contents of the said cask or package in its condition as exported, has been lost, allowance therefor may be made in the liquidation of the duties."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 187 (p. 74): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 187, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 64 of the bill, line 11, after the word "each," insert the following: "more than one-half pint and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 191 (p. 79): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 191, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 18 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "nine," strike out the words "and not exceeding No. 199"; in lines 19 and 20 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "valorem," strike out the following: "exceeding No. 199, 20 per cent ad valorem"; in line 20 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the word "If" and insert in lieu thereof the word "When"; in lines 33 and 34 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "nine," strike out the words "and not exceeding No. 199"; in lines 34, 35, and 36 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "valorem," strike out the following: "exceeding No. 199, 20 per cent ad valorem"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 193 (p. 82): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 193, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "painted," insert the word "printed" and a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 194 (p. 84): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 194, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the comma after the word "cotton"; in line 12 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "imported," insert the following: "except that all clipped threads shall be measured as if continuous"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 211 (p. 87): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 211, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 69 of the bill, line 12, after the word "than," insert the following: "70 cents, and not more than $1.20 per dozen pairs, 40 per cent ad valorem; if valued at more than"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 221 (p. 90): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 221, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, striking out, in line 5 of the matter restored, the following: "whether in the piece or otherwise" and the comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 241 (p. 94): That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 241, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 74 of the bill, line 12, strike out the numeral "20" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "10"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether he considers the words added by the Senate and agreed to by the House—

Mr. SIMMONS. What amendment does the Senator refer to?

Mr. PENROSE. Amendment 241, page 94, of the bill. I made the inquiry of the chairman of the committee in regard to paragraph 288, page 94, of the conference print, amendment 241.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is laboring under a misapprehension. That amendment was made by the Senate, not by the conferees.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I withdraw my inquiry.

Mr. SIMMONS. The conference merely changed the rate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let me ask the Senator from North Carolina in relation to that same amendment—bleached, dyed, colored, and so forth—what authority did the conference committee have to reduce the rate in the bill as passed by the House from 20 per cent to 10 per cent?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I want to correct myself. I meant to make the point made by the Senator from Connecticut, and I did not express myself clearly. The point is there was a 20 per cent rate, and in conference it was reduced to 10 per cent, although never in conference.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There appears to have been no disagreeing action on the rate whatever. The House passed the rate at 20 per cent, and the Senate passed the paragraph with the same rate, but inserted some other words. Now, the Senate conferees recede from the Senate amendment, and yet the conference committee has proceeded to change the rate that was agreed upon by both branches, and has reduced it 50 per cent—from 20 per cent to 10 per cent. My point is that that was not in conference and was not in the jurisdiction of the conference committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The conferees regarded this entire subject matter as being thrown into conference, and the difference between the House and the Senate was as to whether burlaps, bleached or dyed, and so forth, should be imported free or not. Having agreed in conference to put burlaps upon the free list, we thought ourselves authorized to maintain the differential which the House had established between the two. The House conferees insisted upon that differential and not having a larger differential. The differential which the House has left between the plain woven fabrics that were bleached and printed and dyed and those which were not had been 10 per cent, and therefore the conferees reduced this duty to maintain that differential.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It did not seem to me that the matter was in conference at all when the two Houses had agreed upon the rate. Let me ask the Senator if the House had passed the bill with 10 per cent and the Senate had put on an amendment raising it to 20 per cent, would the Senator think the conferees had jurisdiction to put the article upon the free list?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That would have been a slightly different case. We were trying to maintain the intent of the House, which was to establish a differential of 10 per cent between these two articles. We thought we were authorized to do it, or, of course, we would not have done it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It seems to me the province of the conference should be to adjust the difference between the two Houses and not to go outside of the difference. The only question in conference here was the addition of some descriptive words by the Senate, to wit, bleached, dyed, and so forth. In adjusting the matter in dispute, whether those words should be in or not, the conference committee has gone entirely outside of that, and has proceeded to change a rate upon which both Houses had agreed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The matter came from the House in this shape. The House put all plain woven fabrics of jute yarns, by whatever name known, at a rate of 20 per cent. The Senate classified them and put those that were not bleached, nor dyed, nor printed, nor stained upon the free list and left this rate at 20 per cent. The House insisted that if we were not going to put those that were not bleached or stained upon the free list we ought to maintain the House differential of 10 per cent.

I am aware that that is merely a repetition almost of what I said before, but I consider that these two paragraphs must be taken in conjunction, one with the other, and that we had abundant authority to do what we did as conferees.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The trouble with the Senator's explanation is that it appears the only way these two sets of conferees could be brought into agreement was to exceed their jurisdiction as conferees and do something else.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, when the extraordinary parliamentary history of this bill shall be written and when the American people have an opportunity to examine the procedure under which this measure has been pressed to final passage, let the crowning violation of parliamentary precedent and regularity be that which the Senator from Mississippi says he has ample authority for, that the conferees can change a rate which is not in conference. A more astounding proposition was never enunciated in the whole history of the Senate of the United States. The very vitals of a tariff bill are the rates. The only jurisdiction that the conferees has is between the maximum and the minimum in altercation between the two Houses.

The Senator from Mississippi deliberately states that he has ample authority for an action in the conference by which a rate of 20 per cent which was not in dispute is arbitrarily altered by the conferees. For that he says he has ample authority. On that same line of procedure every rate in this bill could be changed in the secret conferences of the majority.

I remember distinctly, for I was a conferee when the Payne bill was under consideration, that the most scrupulous observance was had to the principle above all others that no amount could be changed which was not in dispute, and on more than one occasion where we were very desirous of amending the bill we abandoned the effort, being unwilling to resort to a method potential of so many abuses and sinister influences as the alteration of a rate not in conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania for what purpose he rose at this time?

Mr. PENROSE. I rose in order to put the majority on record for as astounding a proposition of parliamentary law as was ever propounded in either branch of the American Congress. I rose to make this record that in the future when this bill shall come up for the verdict of the American people this extraordinary method may be noted.

I rose, Mr. President, because when this bill shall be in litigation, when, perhaps, typographical errors of the printer shall have altered the purpose of the conferees and the Congress, and I again repeat the charge that this bill has typographical errors in it, and when, Mr. President, it may be developed that sinister influences have caused changes, and the dotting of an "i," or the insertion of a comma, may make such a change, that the American people shall know that it was the utter disregard of all well-founded principles of parliamentary law which has placed this extraordinary bill upon the statute books.

The Senator from Mississippi says that he has ample authority. I challenge him for any authority in either branch of Congress permitting the conferees to alter an amount which is not in conference. I will reserve any point of order until the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] raises his.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair holds that this whole proceeding is out of order, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. PENROSE. I take it, we can discuss the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not without unanimous consent until the Senate has ordered that the Senate shall proceed with the consideration of the report. Rule XXVII says:

The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and when received the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put, and shall be determined without debate.

The Senator raises the point of order that the conferees have exceeded their jurisdiction in inserting an amount not in dispute between the two Houses. The point of order, under the practice of the Senate, is a matter that presents itself to the Senate when it comes to dispose of the entire report. It is not subject to a point of order at this stage and will be overruled.

Mr. PENROSE. I did not intend to press any point of order now. I merely wanted to advise the Senate that I intended to raise it. Do I understand the Chair to rule that debate as we reach these several amendments is not in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not during the reading of the report, except by unanimous consent. The report will be adopted as a whole or rejected as a whole.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not understand that the report has to be adopted as a whole. The Senate may disagree to any item in the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It could be resubmitted to the conferees for that purpose.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senate can by no means be muzzled—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not a question of being muzzled. It is a question of the observance of the rules.

Mr. PENROSE. If debate is out of order it will be quite agreeable for me to retire from the Chamber, for I can not understand the references in the report. We have been going on in this way for two hours and I do not know of any rule of the Senate that prohibits during the consideration of these items comment on them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. We are not considering the items in a conference report. We are considering the report as a whole. The Chair called attention to the fact that debate must proceed by unanimous consent. If no objection is raised the Senator may proceed.

Mr. PENROSE. I can easily imagine how the discussion of the measure would be offensive to the majority, and I do not want to be disagreeable. I am perfectly willing to say what I have to say after the reading has been concluded, if that is more agreeable.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The rule read by the Chair seems to me to provide that the question of consideration if raised shall be decided without debate. This matter is under consideration now, and has been for several hours. I do not understand from the hasty reading of the rules by the Chair that the rule would prohibit debate upon the conference report or any item of the same as read—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Clearly not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. During the consideration of the report. But the question is whether the consideration of the report shall at that time be decided or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Some Senator demanded that the conference report be read preliminary to its consideration.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is not the conference report under consideration at the present time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be under consideration after it is read.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Not until it is read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presumes that by unanimous consent it might be.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no interest in it except that I may have some remarks to make at some time during this proceeding, and I should like to suggest a parliamentary inquiry. It is whether debate is now in order on separate items or the different amendments in the report as they are read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not before the reading of the report is finished, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Would the Chair kindly have the Secretary read the rule which the Chair read?

Mr. PENROSE. Let the rule be read to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read Rule XXVII, on page 27.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE XXVII.

REPORTS OF CONFERENCE COMMITTEES.

The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and when received the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put, and shall be determined without debate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the question then seems to me off hand to resolve itself into, first, the reception of the report, which I assume has been had, and now the consideration of it, which shall be immediately put, according to the rule. If that was put and carried, I would know where I stood in a parliamentary sense, but it has not yet been put and carried.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was not put for the reason that some Senator demanded the reading of the report. Of course the Senate can not proceed to the consideration of a measure until it is laid before the Senate in proper form.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the rule distinctly provides that the question upon its consideration shall be immediately put, I would ask that the provision of the rule be complied with, irrespective of the suggestion of some Senator that the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that would be improper.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Except, of course, if the rule should be set aside by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proper procedure is that preliminary to its consideration it should be read upon the demand of any Senator. Then it may be taken up for consideration and presented to the Senate in a formal way.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well. If that is so, I give notice that I shall object to any debate whatever upon any amendment until the reading has been finished.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the report.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the report, as follows:

Amendment numbered 254: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 254, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "5" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "8"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 255: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 255, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "15" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "18"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 256: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 256, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "valorem" and the semicolon, insert the following: "plushes, velvets, and all other pile fabrics, cut or uncut, woven or knit, whether or not the pile covers the entire surface, made wholly or in chief value of wool, and articles made wholly or in chief value of such plushes, velvets, or pile fabrics, 40 per cent ad valorem"; in line 16 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "hair," insert the following: "not specially provided for in this section"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 258: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 258, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, striking out the numeral "35" and inserting in lieu thereof the numeral "30"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 268: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 268, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, striking out the numeral "20" and inserting in lieu thereof the numeral "15"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 269: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 269, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "5" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "20"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 270: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 270, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "15" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "25"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 277: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 277, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "other" and insert in lieu thereof the word "pile"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 278: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 278, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "40" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "45"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 280: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 280, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "30" inserted by said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "20"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 297: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 297, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, striking out, in lines 4, 5, and 6 of the matter restored, the words "weighing not more than 10 pounds per ream of 480 sheets"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 298: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 298, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 7 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the numeral "50" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "40"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 301: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 301, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 24 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the numeral "6" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "5." In line 27 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the numeral "8" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "7." In line 29 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the numeral "6" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "5." In line 43 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the numeral "12" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "10." In lines 46, 47, and 48 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: "weighing over one hundred pounds per thousand sheets on a basis of 20 by 30 inches in dimensions, 15 cents per pound," and the semicolon. In line 49 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the numeral "20" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "15"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 310: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 310, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "25" in said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "20"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 318: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 318, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the numeral "50" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "45." In line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the numeral "50" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "45." In line 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the comma after the word "buttons" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and." In line 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the comma after the word "studs"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 339: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 339, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "45" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "50"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 349: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 349, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 11 of the matter inserted by said amendment, before the word "nets" insert the following: "edgings, insertings, galloons,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 350: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 350, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and insert after the word "action" and the comma in line 2 of the restored matter the following: "enameled upholstery leather,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 361: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 361, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the numeral "40" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "35"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 363: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 363, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of said amendment insert on page 96 of the bill, line 1, after the word "cents," the word "additional"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 367: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 367, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "additional" in the matter inserted by said amendment and insert in lieu thereof, on page 96 of the bill, line 5, after the word "cents," the word "additional"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 369: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 369, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the numeral "3" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "2.50"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 371: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 371, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "amber" and the comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 379: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 379, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"386. Works of art, including paintings in oil or water-colors, pastels, pen and ink drawings, or copies, replicas or reproductions of any of the same, statuary, sculptures, or copies, replicas or reproductions thereof, and etchings and engravings, not specially provided for in this section, 15 per cent ad valorem."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 382: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 382, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 1 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "cameras," insert the following: "and parts thereof, not specially provided for in this section" and a comma; in line 6 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the numeral "4" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "2"; in line 7 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the numeral "5" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "3"; in line 13 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out "1 1/2 cents" and insert in lieu thereof "1 cent"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 385: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 385, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "machinery for use in the manufacture of sugar"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 386: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 386, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of said amendment and in the same line, after the word "Albumen," where it occurs the first time, strike out the comma and the following: "blood, and albumen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 397: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 397, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 4 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "process" insert a semicolon; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 420: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 420, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "diamonds" strike out the comma and the following: "and diamond dust"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 438: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 438, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, however, That none of the foregoing meats shall be admitted into the United States unless the same is healthful, wholesome, and fit for human food and contains no dye, chemical, preservative, or ingredient which renders the same unhealthful, unwholesome, or unfit for human food, and unless the same also complies with the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of Agriculture, and that, after entry into the United States in compliance with said rules and regulations, said imported meats shall be deemed and treated as domestic meats within the meaning of and shall be subject to the provisions of the act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 674), commonly called the meat-inspection amendment, and the act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 768), commonly called the food and drugs act, and that the Secretary of Agriculture be, and hereby is, authorized to make rules and regulations to carry out the purposes of this paragraph, and that in such rules and regulations the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe the terms and conditions for the destruction for food purposes of all such meats offered for entry and refused admission into the United States unless the same be exported by the consignee within the time fixed therefor in such rules and regulations."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 455: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 455, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the words "chlorate of" and the semicolon; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 472: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 472, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the comma inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 477: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 477, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "products," insert the following: "not specially provided for in this section." In line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "wheat," insert the following: "not specially provided for in this section." In line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "valorem," insert a comma. In line 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "semolina," strike out the words "or any other product of wheat." In line 9 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "States," strike out the colon and the following words: "Provided further, That the importation of weed seeds, whether or not mixed with bran or wheat screenings, is prohibited unless the same shall have been ground or otherwise treated so that the seeds will not germinate"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 491: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 491, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"654. Original paintings in oil, mineral, water, or other colors, pastels, original drawings and sketches in pen and ink or pencil and water colors, artists' proof etchings unbound, and engravings and woodcuts unbound, original sculptures or statuary, including not more than two replicas or reproductions of the same; but the terms 'sculpture' and 'statuary' as used in this paragraph shall be understood to include professional productions of sculptors only, whether in round or in relief, in bronze, marble, stone, terra cotta, ivory, wood, or metal, or whether cut, carved, or otherwise wrought by hand from the solid block or mass of marble, stone, or alabaster, or from metal, or cast in bronze or other metal or substance, or from wax or plaster, made as the professional productions of sculptors only; and the words 'painting' and 'sculpture' and 'statuary' as used in this paragraph shall not be understood to include any articles of utility, nor such as are made wholly or in part by stenciling or any other mechanical process; and the words 'etchings,' 'engravings,' and 'woodcuts' as used in this paragraph shall be understood to include only such as are printed by hand from plates or blocks etched or engraved with hand tools and not such as are printed from plates or blocks etched or engraved by photochemical or other mechanical processes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 509: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 509, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lines 7 and 8 of the matter inserted in said amendment strike out the words "companies, whether incorporated or partnership," and insert in lieu thereof the words "corporations, joint-stock companies, or associations however created or organized"; in line 12 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the words "company or partnership" and insert in lieu thereof the words "corporation, joint-stock company, or association, is a mere holding company"; in line 22 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "company" and insert in lieu thereof the words "corporation, joint-stock company, or association"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 514: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 514, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 17 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "made," insert the following: "but no deduction shall be made for any amount of expense of restoring property or making good the exhaustion thereof for which an allowance is or has been made"; in line 25 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "from" and insert in lieu thereof the word "for"; and in the same line, after the word "source," insert the words "of the income"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 520: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 520, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted in said amendment insert the following:

"C. That there shall be deducted from the amount of the net income of each of said persons, ascertained as provided herein, the sum of $3,000, plus $1,000 additional if the person making the return be a married man with a wife living with him, or plus the sum of $1,000 additional if the person making the return be a married woman with a husband living with her; but in no event shall this additional exemption of $1,000 be deducted by both a husband and a wife: Provided, That only one deduction of $4,000 shall be made from the aggregate income of both husband and wife when living together."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 529: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 529, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the words "date of the passage of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the following "first day of November, 1913"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 542: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 542, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment restore the matter stricken out by said amendment; in line 3 of the restored matter, after the word "the" where it occurs the second time, insert the words "deduction and"; in line 4 of the restored matter strike out the following: "of $4,000"; and in the same line strike out the word "herein" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in paragraph C of this section"; in line 8 of the restored matter strike out the words "an affidavit" and insert in lieu thereof the words "a signed notice in writing"; in line 9 of the restored matter insert, after the word "exemption," the words "and thereupon no tax shall be withheld upon the amount of such exemption: Provided, That if any person for the purpose of obtaining any allowance or reduction by virtue of a claim for such exemption, either for himself or for any other person, knowingly makes any false statement or false or fraudulent representation, he shall be liable to a penalty of $300"; in line 13 of the restored matter strike out the words "file either" and insert in lieu thereof the words "either file"; in line 20 of the restored matter strike out the words "such person may"; in line 22 of the restored matter, after the word "him," insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That if such person is a minor or an insane person, or is absent from the United States, or is unable owing to serious illness to make the return and application above provided for, the return and application may be made for him or her by the person required to withhold and pay the tax, he making oath under the penalties of this act that he has sufficient knowledge of the affairs and property of his beneficiary to enable him to make a full and complete return for him or her, and that the return and application made by him are full and complete"; on page 147 of the bill, line 1, after the word "Provided," insert the word "further"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 545: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 545, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 147 of the bill, line 5, after the word "other," insert the word "similar"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 551: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 551, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment, before the word "by," insert the words "of such interest or dividends." In line 10 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "shall," insert the word "knowingly"; and the Senate agree to the same. On page 148 of the bill, line 15, after the word "tax," insert a comma and the words "nor shall any contract entered into after this act takes effect be valid in regard to any Federal income tax imposed upon a person liable to such payment"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 564: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 564, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 7 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "welfare," insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That there shall not be taxed under this section any income derived from any public utility or from the exercise of any essential governmental function accruing to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of a State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, nor any income accruing to the Government of the Philippine Islands or Porto Rico, or of any political subdivision of the Philippine Islands or Porto Rico: Provided, That whenever any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of the State or Territory, has, prior to the passage of this act, entered in good faith into a contract with any person or corporation, the object and purpose of which is to acquire, construct, operate, or maintain a public utility, no tax shall be levied under the provisions of this act upon the income derived from the operation of such public utility, so far as the payment thereof will impose a loss or burden upon such State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or a political subdivision of a State or Territory; but this provision is not intended to confer upon such person or corporation any financial gain or exemption or to relieve such person or corporation from the payment of a tax as provided for in this section upon the part or portion of the said income to which such person or corporation shall be entitled under such contract"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 571: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 571, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "thereof," where it occurs the second time, insert the following: "and life insurance companies shall not include as income in any year such portion of any actual premium received from any individual policyholder as shall have been paid back or credited to such individual policyholder, or treated as an abatement of premium of such individual policyholder, within such year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 575: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 575, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "bonded" and insert in lieu thereof the words "interest bearing"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 586: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 586, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "thereof," where it occurs the second time, insert the following: "and life insurance companies shall not include as income in any year such portion of any actual premium received from any individual policyholder as shall have been paid back or credited to such individual policyholder, or treated as an abatement of premium of such individual policyholder, within such year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 588: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 588, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "bonded" and insert in lieu thereof the words "interest bearing"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 597: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 597, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "thereof," where it occurs the second time, insert the following: "and life insurance companies shall not include as income in any year such portion of any actual premium received from any individual policyholder as shall have been paid back or credited to such individual policyholder, or treated as an abatement of premium of such individual policyholder, within such year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 598: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 598, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "thereof," where it occurs the second time, insert the following: "and life insurance companies shall not include as income in any year such portion of any actual premium received from any individual policyholder as shall have been paid back or credited to such individual policyholder, or treated as an abatement of premium of such individual policyholder, within such year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 599: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 599, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "bonded" and insert in lieu thereof the words "interest bearing"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 603: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 603, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 160 of the bill, line 3, strike out the word "after"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 608: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 608, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 13 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: "$1,200,000," and insert in lieu thereof "$800,000"; in lines 30, 31, and 32 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the words "For the administration, in the Internal Revenue Bureau at Washington, D. C., of this act in the collection of the tax aforesaid," and insert in lieu thereof the words "In the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington, D. C."; in line 32 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "appointed," insert the words "by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury"; in line 40 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "employees," insert the words "not including the clerical force below the grade of chief of division employed in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the city of Washington, D. C."; in lines 48, 49, 50, and 51 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following proviso: "Provided further, That no person now in the classified service who shall be appointed an agent, deputy collector, or inspector shall lose his civil-service status because of such appointment," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided further, That the force authorized to carry out the provisions of Section 11 of this act, when not employed as herein provided, shall be employed on general internal-revenue work"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 616: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 616, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 11 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "article," insert a comma and the words: "and it shall be the duty of the consular officer, to whom the invoice shall be produced, to require such information to be given"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 624: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 624, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "unless by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury in cases in which the importer certifies at the time of entry that the entered value is higher than the foreign market value and that the goods are so entered in order to meet advances by the appraiser in similar cases then pending on appeal for reappraisal, and the importer's contention shall subsequently be sustained by a final decision on reappraisal, and it shall appear that the action of the importer on entry was taken in good faith, after due diligence and inquiry on his part, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall accompany his directions with a statement of his conclusions and his reasons therefor"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 628: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 628, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "for each entry"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 629: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 629, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "and in so doing may exercise both judicial and inquisitorial functions." In lines 9 and 10 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: "Hear-say evidence and unsworn statements shall not be admitted, but" and capitalize the word "Affidavits"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 630: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 630, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "samples," insert a comma and the following: "and where the merchandise or samples were reasonably accessible for inspection"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 634: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 634, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and insert, after the word "imported," the words "within one year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 641: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 641, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment down to and including the word "continues," page 192 of the bill, line 4, and in lieu of the remaining matter insert the following: "to levy an additional duty of 15 per cent ad valorem on all such merchandise when imported into the United States: Provided, however, That such additional duties shall not be imposed in case the laws of the country of exportation provide for the administration, by its duly authorized officers, of oaths to invoices, or statements of cost, before certification by consuls, and for punishment for false swearing under said oaths, whenever consuls are directed by the Secretary of State, under section 2862 of the Revised Statutes, to require such oaths before certification of the invoices"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 642: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 642, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment down to and including the word "continues" and the comma, on page 192 of the bill, line 18, and insert in lieu of the remaining matter the following: "to assess additional duty of 15 per cent on all merchandise consigned to or imported by, or shipped, or intended for delivery, to such person, persons, corporations, or other bodies so failing or refusing"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 648: That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment numbered 648, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "except as to the proviso of article 8 of said treaty, which proviso is hereby abrogated and repealed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 649: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 649, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment striking out in line 2 of the matter restored the numeral "50" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "20." In lines 3 and 4 of the matter restored strike out the following: "or 20 per cent in case of manufactures of tobacco" and the comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 655: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 655, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "vessels," inserted by said amendment, insert the words "or other vessels"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 656: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 656, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the words "admitted to registration" and insert in lieu thereof the words "now or hereafter registered"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 657: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 657, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and insert in line 4 of the restored matter, after the word "States," a colon and the following: "Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall be so construed as to abrogate or in any manner impair or affect the provisions of any treaty concluded between the United States and any foreign nation"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 659: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 659, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment insert after the word "duties" the words "on such tobacco in its condition as imported." In line 7 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "thereon" and insert in lieu thereof the words "on such cigars"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference has been unable to agree on the amendment of the Senate numbered 609.

That in the enrollment of the bill the sections and paragraphs thereof be numbered in consecutive order.

F. M. SIMMONS,
JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
BENJ. F. SHIVELY,
CHARLES F. JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

O. W. UNDERWOOD,
CLAUDE KITCHIN,
HENRY T. RAINEY,
LINCOLN DIXON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This completes the reading of the conference report. The question is, Will the Senate agree to its adoption?

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I had a letter a few days ago from a friend of mine in Kansas asking me to give him the reasons why I voted against the tariff bill and asking me to analyze it from the Kansas point of view. Before the vote is taken on the conference report, I desire to do so.

I voted against the tariff bill because I believe it unjust and discriminatory. Its discrimination in favor of localities and certain special interests is worse than that of the Payne-Aldrich bill.

It probably is the most inconsistent tariff bill that has ever passed the American Congress. It represents no definite policy and follows no well-defined principle of taxation. It is not a protective measure, though it imposes a high protective duty on many articles of domestic production. Nor can it be styled a free-trade measure, though it places upon the free list many important American products. It is not a tariff for revenue only, because it free lists the most important revenue-producing articles that our people consume. It has many of the weaknesses of all the tariff theories ever advocated in American politics and the strength and consistency of none of them.

It is especially discriminatory against the northern and western farmers. It puts potatoes on the free list, the product of the farm, yet it places a duty of $1 and $1.25 per hundred pounds, respectively, on potato starch and on dextrine made from potato starch. These are practically the same duties that were carried in the Payne-Aldrich bill on these manufactured products, though the manufacturers are given their raw material free of duty. When I denounced this provision of the bill on the floor of the Senate, it was vehemently declared that the potato duty was of no benefit to the American farmer. Nevertheless, more than 13,000,000 bushels of potatoes were imported into the United States last year.

Our Democratic friends claim that the tariff is a burden upon the people because it is added to the price of the article upon which it is imposed. If that theory is correct, then the removal of the duty of 25 cents a bushel on potatoes will reduce the price which the American farmer secures for his potatoes. If that theory is not correct, then why is a high duty imposed on potato starch and dextrine? It was alleged by Senator JOHNSON of Maine, in charge of this schedule of the bill, that our local producers of potato starch and dextrine are brought into sharp competition with foreign importations, and it was thought necessary to protect the American manufacturers by imposing the revenue duties provided in the bill. That is, the Democratic Finance Committee found it desirable to protect the manufacturer of potato products from direct competition with the foreign producer, but persistently refused to give the farmer the advantage of an import duty upon his potatoes. Such a position I believe to be indefensible and unjust.

It is claimed by the friends of this bill that its passage is a blow to special privilege, but an analysis of the measure shows that the special interests it is most hostile to are the farmer, the market gardener, and the producer of live stock, for their products are placed upon the free list. But the products of the gigantic manufacturing concerns that our Democratic friends for half a century have been denouncing are kept on the dutiable list. They are treated with generosity by this bill.

Another example of its discrimination is the placing of wheat that is grown on the western prairies on the free list, and maintaining a duty of $1 per 100 pounds, or 45 cents a bushel, on rice that is grown on the southern plantations. Both wheat and rice are basic food products. It is the alleged policy of Mr. Wilson and his congressional satellites that articles of food should not be taxed. Why, then, should there be maintained a protective duty of $1 per 100 pounds on rice? The reason assigned by the defenders of the bill on the floor of the Senate was that such a duty is necessary to preserve the industry; yet, when that theory is appealed to in behalf of other products, it is vehemently denounced as taxing the many for the benefit of the few.

This bill maintains a protective duty of from 59 to 169 per cent on tobacco, and puts cattle, sheep, and meats on the free list. That is, there is maintained for the tobacco growers of Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, North Carolina, Tennessee, and other tobacco-growing States as high a protective duty as has ever been imposed in any tariff bill, while the products of the stock raisers of the North and West are placed on the free list, and they are compelled to meet severe foreign competition in our own market.

The bill puts meats on the free list, but maintains a protective duty of $1.50 a gallon on whisky; and the excuse that was given by Mr. JAMES, of Kentucky, for this discrimination in favor of the American distilleries was that whisky is a luxury and ought to be taxed. I do not agree with him that whisky is a luxury; I believe it to be a curse. I agree with him that it ought to be taxed. We impose an internal-revenue tax of $1.10 per gallon on whisky; but in addition to that there is provided a protective tariff duty of $1.50 a gallon, making the import duty on whisky $2.60 per gallon. Why not impose this entire tax upon the consumption of whisky? Why not, at least, let the distilleries stand alone, without the protective care of the Government? If protection is wrong for the farmer, the sugar producer, and the poultry yard of the housewife, why is it desirable for the distillery? Why make this heroic effort to preserve the American liquor market for the American distillery, and then denounce those of us who seek to preserve the home market for the American farmer?

Free meats, every Kansas farmer knows, is in the interest of the great packing-house combinations. The Packers' Trust controls the meat production of Argentina, and they are preparing now to supply the great eastern cities with meat produced from cattle grown upon the ranches in the Argentine Republic instead of from cattle grown upon the American farm.

It was also declared by Senators JAMES, of Kentucky, and SIMMONS, of North Carolina, that tobacco is a luxury and ought to be taxed. If it is desired to raise large revenue from tobacco, why not increase the internal-revenue tax and levy an additional tax on the products of the Tobacco Trust, as suggested by Senator HITCHCOCK, of Nebraska? But such a policy would not protect the tobacco growers, and therefore it is not adopted.

The Tobacco Trust, the packing houses, and the distilleries are among the special interests that have been given tender regard by this bill.

The measure puts upon the free list the wool that is grown on the American farm and ranch of the North and West, while it places a protective duty on the hair of the Angora goat grown in Texas. While it places wool on the free list, it imposes a duty on every article that is made from that wool. There is a protective duty provided for every process through which the wool passes from the time it leaves the farmer until it disappears from use.

The first act of labor that is applied to wool after it is taken from the sheep's back is to wash and scour the grease out of it; and the manufacturer who does this gets a protective duty of one-fourth cent per pound on the grease which he extracts from this wool. The wool is then combed; and for the process of combing he is allowed a duty of 8 per cent ad valorem. It is then spun into yarns; and for the spinning into yarns there is a duty of 18 per cent ad valorem. Then it goes through the various processes of manufacture, and the protective duties range from 20 to 50 per cent ad valorem on these various manufactured articles. A duty of 35 per cent is imposed upon the ready-made clothing into which woollen cloths are made, and on dress goods the duty in some instances is as high as 40 per cent.

There never was a combination in the production of wool—there can be none, because too many people are engaged in that business. There are about a million farmers who are raising sheep to a greater or less extent. Wool is their product—the result of their labor and toll. They are compelled to compete with the sheep raisers of the world in their own market to supply their own people; while every manufacturer who touches the wool after it leaves the farmer's hands is given a protective duty on the work that he does upon it. Let me ask any fair-minded American who believes in justice if he thinks that such a policy is right.

I am not complaining of the protection given the manufacturer. On the whole the duties are not too high; in some instances they are not high enough. My complaint is directed to the discrimination against the agricultural classes.

The farmer has to work or starve. He can not close his shop. He can not strike for higher wages. He must bear the burdens, whatever they are, that are placed upon him. Why should he have been selected as the victim by these free-trade propagandists?

It is not denied that it costs more to produce a fleece of wool in the United States than it does in competing countries. It is admitted that free wool will be a hardship upon many farming sections of our country. Yet, in the face of these admissions free wool was decreed by Mr. Wilson; and Senators and Congressmen who do not believe in the policy, who recognize its iniquitous and discriminatory character, meekly and subversively acquiesce in this decree. They admit that in so doing they have forsaken the interests of their constituents and forgotten the welfare of their country.

This is alleged to be a tariff for revenue only, yet over $14,000,000 was collected last year on imported wool, while only $12,000,000 was collected on manufactured woolsens. This alleged revenue measure throws that $14,000,000 of revenue that helped the farmer to the winds and retains the millions of duty that helped the manufacturer.

But the greatest economic mistake from the broad, national viewpoint is the free-sugar provision. Every great nation, with one exception, has sought by protective legislation to develop a domestic sugar supply. England, having vast colonial interests in cane-producing tropical islands, has felt that her national welfare would be better subserved by encouraging sugar production in her colonies than at home. This has been the policy of the British Empire. Canada gives a preferential rate to sugar imported from English colonies; so does Australia. But all the great commercial nations of continental Europe have during the last century, by tariffs and bounties, developed sugar production among their people, until to-day Germany, France, Austria, Russia, and many of the smaller countries not only produce a sufficient amount of sugar to supply their home consumption, but many of them export large quantities.

From the day of the great Napoleon to the present time every great European statesman has given the weight of his influence toward legislation that would promote in his country the development of domestic sugar production. France has levied import duties as high as $2.89 per hundred pounds; Germany, $3.24; Russia, $5.71; Austria, $3.68; and other European nations similar duties.

For almost a hundred years we feebly followed the plan of European nations by imposing import duties or bounties to encourage sugar production, with indifferent success. However, in 1897 we began effective efforts for the development of beet-sugar production. The Dingley bill provided a duty of $1.95 per hundred pounds on refined sugar. This duty, as compared with those imposed by European countries, was very low; yet our experience has shown that it was sufficient, for from the passage of that bill beet-sugar production in the United States has developed faster than it ever developed in any other country in the history of the industry.

During the 16 years that have passed since the Dingley bill was enacted the production of beet sugar in the United States has increased from approximately 40,000 tons in 1897 to 698,952 tons in 1913, and the estimated crop for this year is 715,000 tons. If this ruinous legislation could have been defeated, in my humble judgment, within less than 20 years we would be producing within our own borders every pound of sugar which the American people would consume.

This has been the result which every great commercial nation has sought to attain, and we were on the highway to such achievement when our progress was stopped by the narrow-minded statesmanship of the present hour.

I have always advocated reasonable protective duties and reductions in such duties whenever they could safely be made. Believing that the present duties on sugar could be lowered with safety to the industry, I submitted an amendment to the bill reducing the duty by stages from $1.90 per hundred pounds to $1.275, and the duty on Cuban sugar 96° pure, which is the real protective duty our sugar producers have, from $1.34 to 97 cents. It is admitted that these reductions could now safely be made, because we are producing sugar at a less cost than we did 16 years ago when the Dingley bill was enacted.

The most irritating thing about this free-sugar proposition, however, is the pretense that it is legislation against the Sugar Trust, when, in fact, it is legislation directly in the interest of the Sugar Trust. The Sugar Trust refines sugar; it does not produce it. It buys the sugar that is grown in the Tropics, imports it into the United States, refines it, takes its toll for refining, and then puts the refined product upon the American market. The refiners' trust wants free sugar because that will give it free raw material, and with its raw material free this gigantic combination, which but a few years ago robbed the American people of millions of revenue by a system of false weights, will monopolize the American market.

The refining business is controlled by three concerns with headquarters in New York. They cooperate in fixing prices; and when they control the market they fix the price as high as the market will stand regardless of the cost of production to them. Their resources are so tremendous and their financial strength so great that no cane-sugar producer in any country would have the hardihood to fight them in a commercial warfare for the control of our market. So with the beet-sugar producer eliminated they would be supreme in the sugar markets of this country. They will profit more by this legislation than all other interests; for, when the beet-sugar industry is destroyed, then they will raise the price on their refined product as high as they can.

In fact, up to this time the greatest advantage which the beet-sugar producers have been to the people of the United States is in beating down the price of refined sugar. To illustrate: In March of this year heavy quantities of beet sugar were being sold, and the refiners' margin between the raw-sugar duty paid in New York and the wholesale price of refined sugar in New York ranged from 58½ to 68½ cents per 100 pounds. That represented the difference between what the refiners paid for the raw and what they received for the refined. It was the amount of the toll which the refiners took for refining and marketing sugar. During the months of April, May, and June, as the pressure of beet sugar on the market grew less, the price of refined was advanced by the refiners until their margin of profit in July reached 96.8 cents per 100 pounds, an increase of about 40 cents per hundred. There was absolutely no justification for the increase, because the refiners paid no more for their raw sugar in July than they did in March. They increased the price to the American people 40 cents a hundred pounds simply because our domestic beet-sugar supply had been exhausted, and it was within their power to do it. Let me repeat, they sold the refined sugar for 40 cents a hundred more profit, because there was no beet sugar in the market, although they were paying the same for the raw sugar from which this refined was made. This has been their invariable practice. In June of last year they ran the price up until the margin reached as high as $1.176; that is, they took from the American people about 60 cents per 100 pounds more than they could when our markets were supplied with the beet-sugar product.

When you place sugar on the free list you place in the hands of the sugar refiners the weapon with which to destroy their competitor; and having destroyed their competitor they will exploit this market to their heart's content. However worthy may have been the motives of those who voted for free sugar, they in fact voted directly in the interest of the Sugar Refining Trust and for handing over to it for exploitation and pillage the greatest market for refined sugar on the earth.

A further illustration of the power of the sugar refiners over the American market if the beet-sugar industry is destroyed is the difference in the price of American sugar as compared with foreign sugar at the time that our beet-sugar production is being marketed. In March and April this year the refiners sold their refined sugar at from 47.6 cents to 62.3 cents per 100 pounds less than the Hamburg price plus the duty and freight; that is, they were selling at about 60 cents a hundred pounds under the world's parity. During that period it can not be said that the American consumer was paying all the duty, for he was not. In July this year, when the supply of beet sugar had been marketed, the refiners raised their price until they came within 8 cents of the Hamburg price plus duty and freight, demonstrating beyond question that our beet-sugar supply forces down the price, and that during such periods the consumer does not pay the full duty, as is so confidently alleged by those who have not taken the time to study the subject. Indeed, at one time last year, before the beet-sugar crop came upon the market, the refiners put the price of granulated sugar in the United States up as high as 31 cents per 100 pounds above the Hamburg price plus freight and duty. That was in October last year; and when the beet-sugar supply came upon the market the price went down from 31.1 cents above the world's parity to a point 62.3 cents below it, a reduction of almost $1 per 100 pounds. This was the direct result of the pressure on the market of the domestic production.

Yet in the face of this showing men will stand upon the floor of the United States Senate and advocate a policy that will place the American sugar market absolutely in the control of these refiners and unwittingly become the agents of this giant combination in its efforts to monopolize our sugar supply.

The sugar refiners knowing that at times sugar was selling only sixty some cents above the world's price have nevertheless distributed broadcast throughout the country millions of circulars stating that with free sugar the American consumer would be able to buy his supply about 2 cents a pound less than he is now paying. This statement was circulated persistently by men who knew it to be false; by the men who put the price of sugar up as high as the market will stand as soon as the domestic supply is exhausted. In this campaign for free sugar the refiners are just as dishonest in their methods as they were when they robbed the Government Treasury by their system of false weights.

In 1897, when the Dingley bill was passed, we produced about 40,000 tons of beet sugar. Since then there has been a rapid increase in the amount of beet-sugar production. It has grown step by step until now we are producing approximately 700,000 tons per year, an increase in 16 years of 1,650 per cent.

This is an unprecedented increase. You may search the history of the sugar industry in every nation on the earth and you will not find anywhere else such a rapid development of sugar production as there has been in our country within the last 16 years.

This large production of beet sugar has stimulated many other lines of business. It has made a market for millions of dollars' worth of machinery, which has been manufactured in American factories and made by American workmen, who in turn have been fed by the American farmer and gardener. It has produced a market for millions of dollars' worth of lime, an important ingredient in the clarification of the beet juice, and a hundred other items, such as tools for the farmers who grow the beets, machinery for the construction of irrigation ditches, fuel for the factories, bags for the sugar, and labor of many kinds and varieties. It touches our whole industrial life, and stimulates practically every line of American business.

Villages have grown up in the sugar-beet producing regions, farms have been developed for that specific purpose, and men have engaged in various occupations that are necessary for the comfort and happiness of the people who compose the communities that are engaged in the production of this great commodity. These communities were founded and millions of dollars invested in beet-sugar production upon the invitation of the United States Government.

The sugar industry is not a local enterprise. It is nation wide in its influence, and its destruction will be a national calamity.

A reduction of approximately 20 per cent. of the present duty could be made immediately, and additional reductions made later without materially impeding the progress of our sugar development. But instead of making such reductions, which would be just to the sugar producer and fair to the consuming public, it is proposed to abolish the duty, which will not only stop the development of the industry, but will close a majority of the factories that are now in operation. Such a blind and senseless policy has never been followed by any nation in the history of civilized government without disaster. And the astounding thing is that there can be found in the American Congress patriotic men so blind to the interests of their country as to advocate it.

We consume about 3,600,000 tons of sugar per annum. We produced last year about $50,000,000 worth of sugar. This value is based upon the price of raw. If we had not produced the $50,000,000 worth at home, we would have been compelled to send out $50,000,000 more of our resources into foreign lands to purchase the sugar which our people consumed. We would therefore have been $50,000,000 poorer than we are to-day. Our resources would have been impoverished to that amount. It will be said by some that our farmers should have grown corn, wheat, and other crops. But I answer that we now have a full supply or surplus of the cereals. To abandon beet culture and produce more corn, wheat, and potatoes is further to glut our markets with these staple articles. One of the greatest needs of our agricultural life to-day is diversified crops, and for that reason we should encourage the production of beets. We imported something over $115,000,000 worth of sugar last year—that is, we sent out of the country more than $115,000,000 for sugar.

If next year we could ourselves produce the $115,000,000 worth that we imported last year, if we could take out of our own soil and gather from our own atmosphere that amount of additional wealth by the employment of our own labor and the utilization of our rains and sunlight, we would as a nation be approximately $115,000,000 richer than we would otherwise be. Is not it desirable for a nation to develop its own resources, to bring into activity its dormant wealth, to produce the things from its own soil which its people need, and thereby husband its financial and industrial strength? If such a policy is desirable, then the policy proposed in this bill is deplorable. But the statesmen who by accident have been put in temporary control of the affairs of this country, in the face of the facts heretofore presented, propose by this bill to destroy our sugar industry.

Such a policy in France, Austria, or Germany would be regarded as industrial treason; and this is the first time that it has been seriously proposed in our history. But a school of false political economists, unfortunately, are in command here, and from the debates that we have listened to during the last two months we must infer that they have a malignant hatred toward certain American industries and American producers.

They seem to regard the beet-sugar producer and the sheep grower as public enemies. They say that the woolman has been coddled for a century and that he is a failure and deserves no further consideration. They malign him because he has not grown sufficiently while he has been the recipient of public favor; then they turn and denounce the beet-sugar man because he has grown and established a virile and thriving industry. They propose to cripple the woolman because he has not prospered and to kill the beet-sugar man because he has.

But the amazing thing to me is that men who know that this bill is wrong not only acquiesced in its passage but actually supported it. If every Senator had voted his honest judgment on this schedule, it would have been defeated. There are many Senators who believe that free sugar is wrong and not for the best interests of their country; yet they voted for it. They say they did this for the sake of party harmony and regularity. They obeyed the decree of a party caucus against their consciences, the interests of their constituents, and the welfare of their country.

But I have said enough about the sugar tariff. I have been asked to analyze this bill as it relates to Kansas. I can do so no better than by comparing the amount of the products of our State that are dutiable with those of other States, especially the States represented by Democratic members of the Finance Committee.

The following figures are taken from census of 1909, the latest reliable information we have in regard to all the States. That year the total production of Kansas aggregated the sum of $880,771,826. Of that amount this bill places $618,341,065 on the free list and $262,430,761 on the dutiable list, or approximately only 30 per cent of the production of our State under this bill will be dutiable. The production of Oklahoma, the home State of Senator GORE, the same year was $417,761,782, of which $270,727,764 is on the free list and $147,034,018 is dutiable, or 35 per cent dutiable, as against 30 per cent for Kansas. This discrimination, however, is slight as compared with other States. Take Missouri, our neighbor on the east, the home State of Senator W. J. STONE, a member of the Committee on Finance; her total production was $1,218,077,375, of which $653,934,163 is free and $564,143,212 dutiable, or 46 per cent of her products are protected as against 30 per cent of Kansas production. Georgia, the home State of Senator HOKE SMITH, a member of the Committee on Finance; her production was $548,524,357, of which $332,342,690 is free and $216,181,667 dutiable, or 40 per cent dutiable. Indiana, the home State of Senator SHIPLEY, a member of the committee; her production was $1,079,623,340, of which $514,666,370 is free and $564,956,970 dutiable, or 54 per cent of Indiana's production is protected, while Kansas has but 30 per cent of her products on the protected lists. Kentucky, the home State of Senator JAMES, also a member of the committee; her production was $559,702,930, of which $240,575,993 is free and $319,126,937 dutiable, or 58 per cent dutiable. Maine, the home State of Senator JOHNSON, a member of the Committee on Finance; her production was $269,134,572, of which $136,988,601 is free and $132,145,971 dutiable, or 49 per cent dutiable. North Carolina, the home State of Senator SIMMONS, chairman of the committee; her production was $461,269,413, of which $207,873,011 is free and $253,396,402 dutiable, or 55 per cent dutiable.

But the most striking and interesting comparison is with the State of New Jersey, the home State of Senator HUGHES, of the Finance Committee, and of President Wilson. New Jersey's total production was $1,277,643,287, of which $265,965,729 is free and $1,011,677,558 is dutiable, or 80 per cent of New Jersey's products are on the dutiable list, while but 30 per cent of the products of Kansas are so protected.

Of the entire 48 States there are but 5 which have a smaller percentage of their products on the dutiable list than Kansas. These States are Mississippi, New Mexico, Arizona, Wyoming, and Nevada.

Suppose that the Democratic theory of the tariff is correct; that is, that the duty is added to the price of the product. Now, considering the bill from this point of view, suppose that New Jersey should buy from Kansas the things which Kansas produces and Kansas should buy from New Jersey an equivalent amount of the things which New Jersey produces. In such a case Kansas would pay in taxes to New Jersey, because of the duties in this bill, the sum of $176,154,365 on New Jersey's products, while New Jersey would pay to Kansas but $66,057,887 on Kansas products. That is, we would pay to New Jersey on a like value of her products $110,096,478 more than she would pay us on our products.

The total production of the United States in 1909 of manufactures, minerals, and agricultural products was $35,215,689,361, of which, under this bill, 46 per cent is free of duty and 54 per cent dutiable, as against 70 per cent of the products of Kansas free and 30 per cent dutiable.

The foregoing graphically illustrates the discriminating character of this bill. It shows in a most concrete and remarkable manner the discrimination against the agricultural States in favor of the manufacturing States.

In the face of this showing, how can any of my constituents feel that I should have voted for this bill? To have done so, it seems to me, would have been to betray the interests of the people who elected me to represent them; and that I shall never knowingly do while I hold their commission as a Senator of the United States.

I do not agree with the theory upon which this bill is alleged to have been made. I believe in paying good wages to the laboring men of our country. It makes them better citizens. The men who toil and create the wealth of the world are entitled to enjoy a reasonable portion of it. Now, we can not pay higher wages in our great industries in this country and make goods as cheaply as they do in the countries where they pay lower wages. So, in order to maintain a higher standard of wages in this country than is paid in other countries I believe we should impose tariff duties on importations of competing products from other countries, and I believe in making the difference in the cost of production of the articles at home and abroad the basic principle in fixing duties. But our Democratic friends in both Houses declare that they wholly disregarded that theory in writing this bill.

I believe in treating the tariff as a broad, national question more than as a local question; but we have a Senate composed of representatives of the 48 States, and in the forming of great national policies the interests of those individual States must be guarded by their representatives. It is my duty to fight for a "square deal" for Kansas, and that I am striving earnestly to do.

It has been said by some that this measure is a better bill than the Payne-Aldrich law, and therefore it should be supported by those who opposed the Payne-Aldrich bill. I can not agree to such reasoning. Four years ago I criticized with severity the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill and voted against it because I believed the duties were unnecessarily high. I believed that it imposed excessive and exorbitant duties in many instances; and in that view I was right. This year we are considering the Underwood bill—not by comparison with the Payne bill, but on its own merits. It was our duty to amend it if we could; to support it if we thought it just; to oppose it if we thought it unjust. If the Senators who believed the bill wrong had voted their honest convictions, it would have been amended and the greatest iniquities taken out of it. But this was not possible, because of the infamous caucus system which the Democratic organization has adopted.

Believing the bill unjust and grossly discriminatory, I opposed it with all the vigor I could.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the suggestions of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], I think, are very timely and worthy of careful consideration, although it is quite evident that his suggestions will not receive very great consideration here and now.

The other day, in reading the Toronto Globe, of date September 18, 1913, containing the address of Mr. R. S. Gourlay, the retiring president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, which was most carefully prepared and which very well reflects the public sentiment of Canada, this reference to protection is made:

We do not ask, nor do we want, higher duties all along the line. I am aware that such desires are attributed to us and will probably continue to be, despite anything we may profess to the contrary. If it will serve any useful purpose, let me here and now place our association on record once more as being satisfied with the present general level of our tariff, subject to the adjustment of certain defects, such as those I have mentioned. But it should also be made clear and emphatic that we are unalterably opposed to any general lowering of the tariff on goods of a class or kind made or produced in Canada. We will stand firmly by the principle we enunciated in this city 11 years ago, namely, that our tariff should be so framed and consistently maintained as to transfer to the workshops of our Dominion the manufacture of many of the goods we now import from other countries. As a nation we have already made much progress in that direction, and we are still continuing to progress. Every week, every day almost, brings us word of new acquisitions to the ranks of Canadian industry, which but for our tariff would never have been ours. As long as that is the case so long should we hesitate to disturb a situation that is so obviously to our advantage. While on this subject—

And I call the special attention of Senators on the other side of the Chamber to this statement—

While on this subject it is fitting that I should refer briefly to the tariff legislation soon to be adopted by the United States. An examination of the Underwood bill as finally amended confirms me in the belief that Canada made no mistake in rejecting the reciprocity agreement of 1911. In saying this I do not question the value of the market concessions we would have secured thereunder, but whereas then we would have secured these concessions only in return for similar concessions on our part, now we are to secure many and some of the most substantial of them without any embarrassing consideration of any kind. Cattle, swine, pulp, paper worth up to 2½ cents a pound, dressed lumber, staves, and coke will all enter the United States duty free; subject to favorable interpretation, fish, coal, and wheat will also be free; even under the most unfavorable interpretation of which the foodstuff schedule is capable, wheat will be subject to a duty of 10 cents only as against 25 cents at present; while on fruits there will be material reductions. The judgment of those who opposed reciprocity on the ground that sooner or later we would have the wider market as a result of United States tariff conditions is thus vindicated; on the other hand, I am sure that the prospect of an early enjoyment of these privileges will assuage the disappointment of those who gave reciprocity their support.

Mr. President, the remarks of President Gourlay are a sad commentary upon the action of the American Congress in making it easy for our rivals on the North to send their products here and enjoy access to our market without let or hindrance. We have practically abolished the customhouses on this side of our Canadian border. You have made them a present of this great market without so much as an apology to the American people or an argument in favor of it in this Chamber. I am not surprised that Canada now feels that her rejection of American reciprocity but a few short months ago was not only wise on her part, but that they were enabled to count with such certainty upon the Democratic administration of this Government presenting to them this market, the like of which does not exist anywhere on the face of the globe.

The bill that Senators upon the other side of the Chamber are about to pass takes the place of a law which for a little over four years has attracted new and diversified industry to our country, has given employment to millions of American laborers, and has furnished a surplus revenue to meet Government expenses every year since it was enacted into law. The very first year it gave us a surplus of $15,806,324.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. It seems to me that the very interesting remarks of the Senator from Michigan ought to be listened to by a quorum of the Senate, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator is very kind, but the Senators on the other side can not be influenced by argument; their action is dictated by the iron rule of King Caucus.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hughes	Newlands	Simmons
Bacon	Jackson	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	James	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.
Brandeggee	Johnson	Overman	Smith, Md.
Bristow	Jones	Owen	Smith, Mich.
Bryan	Kern	Penrose	Smith, S. C.
Burton	La Follette	Perkins	Swanson
Chamberlain	Lane	Pittman	Thomas
Chilton	Lea	Pomerene	Thompson
Clarke, Ark.	Lewis	Ransdell	Thornton
Colt	McLean	Saulsbury	Tillman
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	Vardaman
Gore	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Walsh
Gronna	Myers	Shields	Weeks
Hollis	Nelson	Shively	Williams

Mr. GRONNA. My colleague [Mr. McCUMBER] is necessarily absent from the city on important business. I wish this announcement to stand for the remainder of the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I notice the chairman of the Committee on Finance in the Chamber. I should like to ask him, if I may, what there was of advantage to Canada in the American reciprocity treaty negotiated by President Taft that has not been given to Canada under this bill without any consideration whatever?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, that is a pretty large question. It would involve some consideration of the treaty and the pending bill. I am not prepared to go into details about the matter. I do not care to go into any discussion of the Canadian reciprocity bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator from North Carolina will listen to this sentence I will not press the matter further upon him.

Mr. SIMMONS. I simply said to the Senator—and I said it courteously—that I do not care to enter upon a discussion of the Canadian reciprocity treaty in considering the question of adopting the conference report on the tariff bill. I could not answer the Senator's question without some investigation and comparison. Therefore I do not care to undertake to make an answer without that sort of a comparison.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association a few days ago said this:

An examination of the Underwood bill as finally amended confirms me in the belief that Canada made no mistake in rejecting the reciprocity agreement of 1911. In saying this I do not question the value of the market concessions we would have secured thereunder; but whereas then we would have secured these concessions only in return for similar concessions on our part, now we are to secure many and some of the most substantial of them without an embarrassing consideration of any kind.

I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina whether he believes the statement of the president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association is founded on fact?

Mr. SIMMONS. Speaking generally, I do not, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In what respect does the Senator from North Carolina differ with him?

Mr. SIMMONS. I said to the Senator that I do not care to go into a discussion of the Canadian reciprocity treaty.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the Senator permit me to enumerate the items?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection to the Senator discussing the matter if he desires to do so.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from North Carolina knows that among the things that made possible a majority of his own party in this Chamber was the very unfortunate reciprocity treaty negotiated between this Government and Canada. If that is true, and if the American farmer repudiated that treaty because he did not consider it advantageous to him or to his country, I should like to know what support you expect from the American farmer when he is not even treated with the slightest consideration in return for the privileges you accord to his competitors in Canada under this bill.

The people of Canada are gloating over the fact that they rejected that treaty and that they now have all the advantages, with none of the disadvantages, growing out of it. If that is good work and commends itself to the American people, I mistake their temper and their judgment.

When the point of no quorum was made, I was saying that the bill which you now propose to repeal has served this country as no similar legislation has ever served it. The very first year it gave us a surplus of over $15,000,000 in revenue. The second year it gave us a surplus of $47,234,000. The third year it gave us a surplus of $37,224,000. In 1913, the present year, while you have been sharpening your knife to destroy it, it has yielded a surplus revenue of $40,083,000.

Contrast, if you will, these actual accomplishments with the prophecy of the leaders of the Democratic Party in the House. When they sent their bill over here, after nearly a year of contemplation, they were to have a surplus under it of $58,000,000, substantially the amount that they are giving to the American Sugar Refining Co. as a present. To-day you are driven to your very wits' end to make your bill produce enough revenue to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government; you have resorted to extraordinary methods of taxation, a privilege heretofore enjoyed by the States, to safeguard your experiment, and there is no limit to the extent to which you may now go in that direction.

Personally I very much regret the necessity of now using this great power of direct taxation in time of peace, when the Treasury is full and the credit of the Government at its highest point, although I voted for the income-tax amendment to the Constitution. I think in ordinary times the States should be permitted to use this medium, if used at all, to relieve the over assessed and burdened taxpayer in the townships, villages, and cities of our country, especially when the money is not needed by the Federal Government.

There is not a man on the other side of the Chamber who can prophesy with the slightest degree of accuracy the revenue that will be derivable under this measure. You have gone recklessly to the point of repealing an act which has furnished the Government all the revenue it needed, and more than enough, and have put forward a measure destined, in my judgment, to result in a deficit in the Treasury of the country. If that is good sense or wisdom or statesmanship, I fail to comprehend it.

I think it is wise to have such authority in the fundamental law as will enable the Government to tax incomes, but a fairly protective bill, safeguarding American industry, would have made this new experiment unnecessary now.

I think the income tax as now devised will be detrimental to our citizenship. The burdens of government should be shared by all in proportion to his strength. I think this bill will divide the country into classes, which I regret, for I believe all are willing to pay their share. Under our present system of protective duties this was wholly unnecessary except in time of war on the part of the Federal Government.

The law which you are now repealing has been successful. It has stimulated industry. It has given employment to labor. It has kept wages higher than they have ever been before. It has given us a larger foreign trade than we have ever enjoyed before. The last month of the existence of that law, the month in which you practically decided upon its repeal, brought us more foreign trade than any previous month during the history of this Republic.

It has been a favorite argument of Democrats and free traders that our tariff tended to exclude us from the markets of the world. Yet every single month of the existing law has enlarged our foreign market for manufactures, as well as other products; and the last month has been the best month, notwithstanding people are holding back on importations, and ships are already heading for our ports bearing the results of foreign genius and labor, and propose to remain on the ocean and lakes until they can put their products upon this market under more favorable conditions than would be permitted by the law under which we are now living.

If the existing law has given us revenue, if it has encouraged enterprise, if it has stimulated industry, if it has encouraged capital, if it has kept wages high, in the name of all that is wise and patriotic, what excuse can be made for its repeal and the substitution of a bill which finds more praise in every foreign country where our rivals are anxiously waiting than it finds at home—or on our border, where they praise it for the opportunities it will give to Canadians?

Mr. President, I realize that it is perfectly useless to occupy the attention of the Senate further at this particular time in the history of this legislation. I realize that I am trespassing upon the good nature of my colleagues to do it. I shall not take the attention of the Senate further, beyond making the simple statement that I believe this legislation is the outgrowth of prejudice. I believe it is sectional in its character. If it does work successfully, I shall be very glad, and shall be the first to acknowledge the fact. But if it works badly, if it does arrest our prosperous development, then, I think, the time will not be remote when Senators sitting on the other side of the Chamber will have to account for their folly.

This is not good legislation. It has not been carefully considered. It has not been worked out in detail. It is the result of the most practical bossism that has been displayed in the making of a tariff bill within my recollection. The bossism is not only here, but comes from a place not far from the Capitol where many Members of the Senate have been forced to accept the edict of the President rather than use their own judgment.

I am proud to record my vote against it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho will please suspend while the Chair makes a statement. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] reserved a point of order as to amendment 87, which should properly be disposed of at this time.

Mr. BURTON. I have already stated the feature of the conference report to which I refer. An article made dutiable under the House bill at 20 per cent was made dutiable under a Senate amendment at 30 per cent. The conference report fixes the duty at 15 per cent. The whole of paragraph 116 was stricken out by Senate amendment numbered 87 and an entirely new paragraph substituted, under which, as I have stated, the rate was 30 per cent. The Senate conferees receded from their amendment and adopted the House paragraph with a single change.

If the House paragraph had been left as it was, of course there could have been no objection. Under that kind of an agreement the Senate would have merely receded. But the Senate conferees did more than recede and accept the House paragraph. They have accepted the House paragraph in its entirety, with a single exception; "20" was changed to "15."

Mr. President, I maintain that was beyond the power of the conference committee. What is the whole theory of a conference between the two Houses? There are two legislative propositions before them—one the proposition put forth by the House and the other the proposition put forth by the Senate. What is the function of the conference committee? One of the legislative bodies must recede entirely or there must be a compromise between the two. They are limited, however, to the action of the two Houses.

On this subject I wish to read briefly from a book of acknowledged authority, Mr. Hinds's Precedents, in which he recognizes that formerly a larger degree of latitude was given to a conference committee. His conclusions—and those conclusions are sustained by numerous authorities—are set forth in paragraphs 6409 and 6417 of volume 5, page 719 and following and page 724 and following.

Paragraph 6409 states the rule:

In the later, but not the earlier, practice the Speaker rules a conference report out of order on a question being raised.

On a question which was presented when Mr. Blaine was Speaker he said:

The point of order lies against the conference report, but during the experience of the Chair on this floor he has never known a conference report ruled out on a point of order. The report of a conference committee is always received as embodying the conclusions of both Houses, or the representatives of both branches of Congress. The Chair will therefore submit the point of order to the House.

In that ruling he expressed the former practice, as it is called by Mr. HINDS in his book on precedents.

What was the result when he left the question to the House?

The point of order—

That is, against the conference report, which would nullify it—being put to the House, was sustained by a vote of 82 ayes and 33 noes.

Showing that they absolutely rejected the old idea that there was any sacredness about a conference report.

In the second clause of paragraph 6409 the digest states as follows:

Under the later practice when a conference report is ruled out of order the Senate is informed by message that the report has been rejected.

While the managers may perfect by germane amendments propositions committed to them, they may not, under the later practice, go beyond the differences of the two Houses in so doing.

There is a clear enunciation of the rule that they can not go beyond or outside the differences between the two Houses.

Paragraph 6417. The managers of a conference must confine themselves to the differences submitted to them.

What was the difference here? The House rate was 20 per cent; the Senate rate was 30 per cent. In passing upon the differences between them in making a report the managers of a conference must confine themselves to the differences submitted to them.

Mr. President, these, it is true, are precedents derived from the House debates, but they are expressive of general parliamentary law.

However, I wish to say just a few words more on the policy of procedure under such circumstances. We could find no better illustration of the danger arising from a violation of the rules than in this very bill. Here are nearly 700 amendments placed upon a House bill by the Senate. It is almost impossible to keep track of all those amendments. They were sent to a conference committee, and there is, I say with the utmost confidence, no Member of the House or Senate who ought not to be able to rely upon the thrashing out of those differences within the limits of the legislation by the two Houses. Otherwise the door is thrown wide open for fraud or imposition, for the "insidious lobby," as it is called, to get in their work and to insert in the bill propositions of legislation which neither House nor Senate have agreed to, and which would when the conference report is under consideration be overlooked.

So, Mr. President, I submit this point of order for decision. It is manifestly contrary to parliamentary law and it makes it possible for the conference committee, limited in number, to usurp to itself the functions which belong to the House and to the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. May I take the liberty to ask the Senator from Ohio a question concerning a matter I now recall in which both he and myself participated? I am very much interested in the parliamentary point raised by him, but I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio does he not recall that in the lower House of Congress, in August, 1897, when a conference report was submitted upon the Dingley bill and there was added in that conference report a recommendation upon a wool schedule suggested by a gentleman by the name of Lawrence to Gen. Grosvenor, who had it inserted, that the point was urged by the Democratic side and maintained by myself, among others, that such insertion was wrong and not admissible, and that it was ruled by Speaker Reed that, though the subject matter was not specifically legislated either by the House or by the Senate, yet if the new matter was upon the same subject, as a compromise, it was within the conference power?

Mr. BURTON. I must say to the Senator from Illinois that I do not recall the instance. I suppose this could be done. If there should be a complete provision treating a certain subject inserted in a bill passed by one House and that was stricken out and no legislation on the subject inserted by the other, there might then be a substitute in conference. Perhaps if a bill should pass one House and should go to the other and all be stricken out except the enacting clause new material could be framed and submitted by the conference committee to the two Houses. I would say that that was very irregular and very objectionable, but I think precedents will be found under which that method has been sustained. I do not deny that there are some old precedents on this subject which maintain a different rule from that which I am asserting.

Mr. LEWIS. I want to invite the attention of my esteemed friend, whose ability I much admire—and I have had occasion often times to do so—to the fact that he voted to sustain that conference report under that ruling of Speaker Reed.

Mr. BURTON. I have no doubt the Senator from Illinois is right about that, though I do not recall the instance.

Mr. LEWIS. I would like to ask my friend for his judgment, that I very much respect, if he sees any difference now between this case and the condition as it then existed, if I am stating the premises correctly?

Mr. BURTON. I think so. I think there must have been this difference: This is a change in a figure—just one word—and that may have been a new treatment of the subject, going into it somewhat elaborately. This is much more dangerous than that.

Mr. LEWIS. With all respect, I do not see any difference between the two.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels constrained to overrule the point of order raised by the Senator from Ohio. He overrules it in conformity with the precedents established by the practice in the Senate.

Mr. BURTON. With the utmost deference, I wish to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will complete his statement.

Mr. BURTON. I beg the Chair's pardon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is quite aware of the fact that in the House a different rule prevails. The precedents read by the Senator from Ohio correctly state the rule applied there. The rule is just the reverse in the Senate. If, in the judgment of the Senate, the conferees have included matter that was not in dispute as between the two Houses, that is a ground for a rejection of the report, but it has not heretofore been treated as a ground for setting the report aside upon the objection of an individual Senator.

The Chair calls attention to the ruling made by Vice President Fairbanks on the 11th of June, 1907, reported in Giffry's Precedents, page 269. When disposing of a similar point of order the then Vice President said:

The Chair is of the opinion, as he has previously held, that under the usual practice of the Senate a point of order will not lie against a conference report. The matter in the report challenged by the point of order interposed by the Senator from Texas may be considered by the Senate itself when it comes to consider the question of agreeing to the report. The only question under the usual practice of the Senate, in the opinion of the Chair, is, Will the Senate agree to the conference report? The Chair holds that the point of order is not well taken, and therefore overrules the point of order.

The present occupant of the chair does nothing more than to follow that precedent when he overrules the point of order raised by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I desire to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Will the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair, the ayes have it. The ayes have it, and the decision of the Chair is sustained.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question or two with reference to a certain provision of the income tax as it comes back from the conference report.

Mr. PENROSE. There is another point of order to be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; but, of course, it could be laid aside by unanimous consent.

Mr. PENROSE. The Chair announced his desire to dispose of the points of order first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; after completing the reading of the report.

Mr. PENROSE. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to page 7 of the report, amendment 241. In this amendment the duty was imposed by the Senate the same as the House—20 per cent on a certain line of articles—and the conferees have reduced it to 10 per cent, when the rate was never in conference. Is the Chair unwilling to rule on that point?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that presents the same question, and his ruling will be the same as was made in the case of the point raised by the Senator from Ohio. It resolves itself into the proposition that where the two Houses have inserted matter that was not in dispute as between the two Houses, under our practice that is not a matter which can be disposed of by a point of order, but constitutes an objection to the adoption of the report when the Senate comes to deal with it as a whole.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I shall be content, Mr. President, to let the record stand as a monument to the ignorance or the indifference of the majority members of the conference as to the parliamentary regulations concerning a conference report. I shall be willing to abide by the judgment of future legislators, and when they point to this record, where a rate in a tariff bill in conference committee which was not in issue was cut in half, they will state that the then majority in Congress were either incompetent or had an effrontery for which there is no precedent in the previous history of the Government.

Mr. President, when I contemplate this action, which leaves the minority in this Chamber absolutely without any protection in legislation of this character, which opens the door to fraud and every sinister influence, when I consider the possible consequence of permitting this extraordinary latitude, I can only feel humiliated that the party in power, supposed to be in charge of the government of a nation of nearly 100,000,000 people, should lend themselves to a practice such as this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can say that in making the ruling he did, it was based upon precedents made by a Republican Senate, and if ignorance and effrontery were exhibited in imposing it, it was done by the Republican Party. The rule of the Senate is simple. The Senator from Idaho is recognized.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I may be in error about a provision of the income tax, and for that reason I desire to ask those in charge of the bill as to some of its provisions. I have had only a few moments since I discovered it to consider it, and therefore am not prepared to speak conclusively.

I read a section:

For the purpose of this additional tax the taxable income of any individual shall embrace the share to which he would be entitled of the gains and profits, if divided or distributed, whether divided or distributed or not, of all companies, whether incorporated or partnership, formed or fraudulently availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of such tax through the medium of permitting such gains and profits to accumulate instead of being divided or distributed; and the fact that any such company or partnership, or that the gains and profits are permitted to accumulate beyond the reasonable needs of the business shall be prima facie evidence of a fraudulent purpose to escape such tax.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is reading from a bill where the printer or somebody left out the language which was subsequently supplied, "a mere holding company." That comes in so as to make sense. In some way or other, either by transcript or down at the Government Printing Office, that language was left out. He will find it now in the conference report.

Mr. PENROSE. That is not the only error that will be found in the bill, either.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is "a mere holding company."

Mr. BORAH. I will read it, then, as suggested by the Senator from Mississippi. I do not understand it. If the Senator will bear with me:

For the purpose of this additional tax the taxable income of any individual shall embrace the share to which he would be entitled of the gains and profits, if divided or distributed, whether divided or distributed or not, of all companies, whether incorporated or partnership, formed or fraudulently availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of such tax through the medium of permitting such gains and profits to accumulate instead of being divided or distributed.

I see; I think there is where the provision should come in and be inserted. It says "in lieu of corporations, joint-stock companies, or associations," and then "a mere holding company."

But now, Mr. President, what I desire to know is this: This clause relates alone to corporations which are formed for the purpose of holding profits and dividends, and so forth, and it does not relate, as I understand, to legitimate corporations or the incomes received upon stock in legitimate corporations, because the provision reads—of all companies, whether incorporated or partnership, formed or fraudulently availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of such tax through the medium of permitting such gains and profits to accumulate instead of being divided or distributed.

I understand if the Secretary of the Treasury comes to the conclusion that a corporation has been organized or formed for the purpose of doing these things here, and, notwithstanding it has not distributed its earnings, he may go into the treasury of the corporation, as it were, and levy the income tax upon that which should have been distributed.

So far as that is concerned, Mr. President, there can be no objection except the objection which might arise in giving the Secretary of the Treasury such power—a very great and unusual power to be thus lodged in one who is acting ex parte. Nevertheless it would enable the Secretary of the Treasury, if he should conclude that it was fraudulent, to enter into the treasury, as it were, and secure the tax.

But what I desire to ask is this: Suppose that a corporation has been legitimately organized and that it can not be said to be fraudulent or formed for the purpose of doing the specific thing of holding property and holding dividends; suppose it is a legitimate corporation and they do not distribute, then is there any way under this bill to tax or get at the dividends which a corporation might hold which has been held to be legitimately organized?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. That is the question which interests me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will give me his attention, this says:

Formed or fraudulently availed of.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So that a corporation which is in existence now, where it shall be "fraudulently availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of such tax," can be treated just as one that was formed for the purpose of fraudulently evading it, with the other limitations which come in connection with the clause to which the Senator referred, which is "and the fact that any such corporation or partnership, or"—by the way, the conferees struck out "partnership" because it is dealt with later on—

Mr. BORAH. I see that.

Mr. WILLIAMS (reading):

Or that the gains and profits are permitted to accumulate beyond the reasonable needs of the business shall be prima facie evidence of a fraudulent purpose to escape such tax; but the fact that the gains and profits are in any case permitted to accumulate and become surplus shall not be construed as evidence of a purpose to escape the said tax in such case unless the Secretary of the Treasury shall certify that in his opinion such accumulation is unreasonable for the purposes of the business.

Now, take a marine insurance company for example. It is compelled to keep a surplus, a very large amount of money, on hand to provide for unseen calamities at sea, great storms which engulf many ships. So they require that the money which is paid in for one year shall be kept there for two additional years, and the contract is that if during that time the losses are abnormal this money is put upon the books to the credit of the marine insurance company. It is to the credit of their policyholders and bears interest; at the same time it is a sort of surplus; it is an accumulation provided for that purpose. Now, a surplus or accumulation which in the case of a marine insurance company would be reasonable might be very unreasonable in the case of some other sort of corporation.

Take the Steel Trust for example, or something of that sort. This clause gave us more trouble than perhaps anything in this bill. The Senator will see that unless we provide for this evil in some way men might escape not the normal tax but escape the additional tax by merely forming themselves, or using a brother, wife, or somebody, or an office boy. Then, while perfectly willing to pay the normal tax as a corporation, they would escape the additional tax by not having their amount distributed by an arrangement so that they could draw upon the corporation, of course, for whatever they needed. Now, it is for the purpose of preventing that sort of thing. Of course, they could have any arrangement with the corporation they chose, because they would be the corporation.

Now, then, it was thought that perhaps some corporation now in existence might lend themselves to things of that sort owing to the fact that men might be liable for the additional tax and would completely control it by owning a majority of the stock. So this was put in for that purpose. It came over from the House, and the House wording was not satisfactory. The Senate committee put in the clause, and upon further investigation it was not satisfactory to the subcommittee. That was changed again upon the floor of the Senate, and I asked that it be recommitted again, and this was finally brought out as the best production that we were capable of to meet the anticipated difficulty.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand the Senator, then, down to the semicolon, on page 191, line 11, the bill provides for one class of corporations; that is, corporations organized for the purpose "formed or fraudulently"—

Mr. WILLIAMS. "Formed or fraudulently availed of for the purpose."

Mr. BORAH. Down to the semicolon in line 11 that class of corporations is provided for, and I understand the Senator to say that the next clause relates to all corporations which might consent to an overaccumulation of profits.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no.

Mr. BORAH. Otherwise the section would seem to be faulty.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. BORAH. If that is not true, then—

Mr. WILLIAMS. The subsequent clause relates back to the first one and can not cover anything beyond what it covers. The subsequent clause merely provides that a certain thing shall be prima facie evidence of the existence of this fraudulent purpose. In the case previously referred to, and when gains and profits are permitted to accumulate beyond a certain reasonable figure, then if it shall be thought to have shown these fraudulent purposes, but it is only when the Secretary of the Treasury shall certify that in his opinion the accumulation was unreasonable.

The first clause reads as follows:

For the purpose of this additional tax the taxable income of any individual shall embrace the share, etc., if divided or distributed, whether divided or distributed or not.

Of what?

Of all companies. The language "whether incorporated or partnership" is stricken out, and after "companies" comes the language "corporations, joint-stock companies, or associations, however created or organized," when—formed or fraudulently availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of such tax through the medium of permitting such gains and profits to accumulate instead of being divided or distributed.

And then follows the language of the next clause:

And the fact that any such company is a mere holding company in such association, corporation, etc., or that the gains and profits are permitted to accumulate beyond the reasonable needs of business—

Shall be what?

shall be prima facie evidence of a fraudulent purpose to escape such tax.

What is the tax? But the following and second clause is even not to be accepted unless the Secretary of the Treasury shall certify that, in his opinion, that is the case. This can not refer to anything except to the sort of corporations referred to in the first clause, and they are corporations formed or fraudulently availed of for the purpose of escaping the tax.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if that is the construction which the Senator desires to put upon this language, let me put this concrete proposition. Suppose we have an automobile company, which I heard something about the other day, formed several years ago, of course, a legitimate corporation, which was not formed for the purpose of doing these things. The statement was to the effect that one individual drew down several million dollars of dividends each year. Suppose they had seen fit not to declare a dividend this year, the question which I desire to put to the Senator is, Could the Secretary of the Treasury tax that dividend which ought to have been distributed?

Mr. WILLIAMS. He must first proceed to consider the question whether that corporation as such has been fraudulently availed of for the purpose of permitting parties to escape this additional tax, and considering that question and deciding upon it himself he would consider whether this surplus were too large for the reasonable purposes of that business. If he concluded that the accumulations were too large for the reasonable purposes of that business, and that the fraudulent intent existed, he would then certify that, in his opinion, such accumulation was unreasonable for the purposes of the business. Whereupon it would become prima facie evidence to the fact that it was being fraudulently availed of to escape the tax, and the internal-revenue commissioner would proceed to assess the property.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator, then, takes the position that the words "availed of" would enable the Secretary of the Treasury to review the conditions of any corporation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Provided that they had accumulations or surplus unreasonable for the character of the business they were carrying on.

Mr. BORAH. Well, if that language should be construed in that way by the court, I presume it would attain the object which the Senator desires to attain, but it seems to me a doubtful construction; but I have not had time to consider it at length.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know that it would attain it perfectly. I say frankly that we did the best we could. It is a very difficult problem, because there is no right to anybody to have a dividend unless the directors declare a dividend. But there is a decision, the style of which I can not now recall, brought to my attention by Representative HULL, of the House, in which it is laid down. There is a distinction between the right of a stockholder to demand that a dividend shall be declared or that he shall receive a distributive share of what would be a fair dividend if declared, which right does not exist as the right of the Government to go upon the premises to determine that such distributive amount ought to be taxed.

Mr. BURTON. While the Senator from Mississippi is on his feet I should like to ask several questions in regard to the provisions on pages 200, 210, 211, and part of 212 of the conference report print. I understand the conferees agreed to make the rent of estate subject to the rule of collection at the source, and also when—

Mr. WILLIAMS. In those cases where the tenant pays to the landlord $3,000 or more.

Mr. BURTON. On that specific piece of property?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. How is that restricted, by the provision as to $3,000 or more?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will read it—

Mr. BURTON. The second paragraph, about the middle of the paragraph.

Mr. WILLIAMS (reading):

All persons, firms, copartnerships, companies, corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, and insurance companies, in whatever capacity acting, including lessees or mortgagors of real or personal property, trustees acting in any trust capacity, executors, administrators, agents, receivers, conservators, employers, and all officers and employees of the United States having the control, receipt, custody, disposal, or payment of interest, rent, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensation, remuneration, emoluments, or other fixed or determinable annual gains, profits, and income of another person, exceeding $3,000 for any taxable year.

Mr. BURTON. That is in the particular lease or the interest on the particular mortgage.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No. Wherever I owe you over $3,000—whether for rent, for interest, or for anything else—that becomes taxable at the source; that is, in the case of a lessee, you understand.

Mr. BURTON. Just one transaction?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Precisely. If it is a corporation, in that case—

Mr. BURTON. A corporation makes its own returns and takes care of itself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A corporation makes its own returns.

Mr. BURTON. Suppose that A leases a piece of property to B for $3,600 per year—$300 per month—how is that to be adjusted?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, this does not adjust it. I suppose such rules and regulations as may be fixed at the Internal Revenue Commissioner's office may determine when that statement must be made and when that tax must be paid. Of course the Senator will see in that case the deduction would be made at the source. Whether the tenant chose to keep back so much each month or whether he chose to make the entire payment during the month when the tax became payable would, I imagine, become a matter of practical business adjustment between him and the landlord. There is only this difficulty about it. Of course, as a matter of fact, the tenant could pay over each month $300, and then when the month for payment came could deduct the entire tax, because the entire tax could never amount to over what one month's rent would be under that sort of an arrangement. In fact, the tax would amount to only 1 per cent, and the other would be about 8 per cent—one month's rent, one-twelfth of the amount.

It is subject to this difficulty, which will have to be left to the rules and regulations of the Treasury. Possibly a tenant might go on, say, 10 months and pay his rent and then break, and maybe in the meantime he had withheld nothing; but in that case the Government would lose nothing, because the original obligor, the landlord, is liable all the same. Whenever these taxes are not paid at the source in behalf of any person that person is liable.

Mr. BURTON. Is there any way of doing away with the necessity that the tenant withhold that amount by the filing of a writing, or anything of that kind?

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is for this year. If the Senator will turn to that part of the bill, he will find that we have done away with a good deal of the payment at the source for this year, because we thought they would hardly have time to get everything ready for the tax; but in other cases there is not, because we thought that if we gave way and made this payment-at-the-source principle too elastic it would give room for a good deal of fraud upon the revenue. The Senator from Ohio is doubtless aware of the fact that during one year in its history Great Britain, without changing the rate of income taxation at all, merely changed from the old plan to the payment-at-the-source plan and got about 30 per cent more revenue that year. We have made it inelastic upon that point, except for this first year.

Mr. BURTON. One further point, though I believe the Senator from Mississippi has already answered it. This is not intended to apply to any lease where the aggregate rental is less than $3,000 a year?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; it is not. That would have hampered and pestered and worried and bothered the citizen unnecessarily.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the report of the committee of conference?

Mr. SIMMONS rose.

Mr. BURTON. Now, that the Senator from North Carolina is on his feet, I should like to ask him a question. It is a question which applies to quite a number of instances, but I will select one with which I have some familiarity. Paragraph 84, amendment numbered 49, relates to carbons. Two kinds of carbons were made dutiable in the bill as it passed the other House. They are "carbons for electric lighting, wholly or partly finished, made entirely from petroleum coke," and those composed of lamp black or retort carbons. There is on the first class a specific duty of 15 cents per hundred feet.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio to what part of the bill he is now addressing himself?

Mr. BURTON. I am referring to page 23 of the bill as it comes here after the conference report, paragraph 84, amendment numbered 49. Carbons made of petroleum coke are made dutiable at 15 cents a hundred feet, and those composed chiefly of lampblack or retort carbon are taxed 40 cents per hundred feet. To that the Senate added this amendment:

Carbons for flaming-arc lamps, not specially provided for.

To that the conferees have added the words "in this section." What do those words mean? Those carbons not specially provided for in this section? Can that refer to petroleum carbons or lampblack carbons? They are specially provided for in this section. What is meant by that language?

Mr. SIMMONS. By the word "section"?

Mr. BURTON. By the addition of the words "in this section."

Mr. SIMMONS. That means anywhere in the dutiable paragraphs of the schedules of the bill or in the free list. There is but one section covering all those things in the bill.

Mr. BURTON. The section containing duties?

Mr. SIMMONS. Section 1 goes down to the income tax.

Mr. BURTON. I am aware of that; but I do not recall any other place in the bill, except in this paragraph, where there is any reference to carbons for electric lighting. That does not mean that the petroleum carbons or the lampblack carbons are specially provided for in this section, does it?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I will say, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], that in this very paragraph carbons for electric lighting, made from petroleum coke, are given a duty, as are also carbons for flaming-arc lamps not specially provided for, and filter tubes and carbons not specially provided for in this section, which are nowhere provided for in the dutiable list; and that language has been used all through the bill in describing the dutiable articles.

Mr. BURTON. That is not specially provided for. The provision added by the Senate amendment is made more definite by adding in a plurality of cases the words "in this section"?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Well, the Senator from Maine does not understand that the flaming-arc carbons, if made of coke or of lampblack, would be specially provided for in this section, does he?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know. No nomine carbon for flaming-arc lamps are provided for here, but out of caution if there is any provision for carbons anywhere else, it was intended that this provision should not apply to them.

Mr. BURTON. I do not think there is; but I fear that these words introduced some little element of ambiguity, because the carbons for flaming-arc lamps may be made of petroleum coke, or made of lampblack, but are distinguished from them by the liberal use of chemicals.

Mr. JOHNSON. It seems to me, Mr. President, that carbons prepared especially for flaming-arc lamps fall under this designation here. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. BURTON. Then it is the understanding of the Senator from Maine that carbons for flaming arc lamps make a distinct class and that there is no ambiguity about it?

Mr. JOHNSON. I so understand.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I see the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is absent, but I want to ask one more question with reference to the income-tax provision. Upon page 228 of the bill there is a provision which says:

Provided further, That there shall not be taxed under this section any income derived from any public utility—

What is a "public utility"? That would exclude several corporations, some of which are very prevalent here in this District, that I should not want to be excluded under any law.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, in the consideration of this part of the bill there were brought to the attention of the subcommittee several cases wherein it seemed that there are derived from public utilities and going to municipalities certain incomes that should be exempt. Such income is not derived in the usual course of taxation, and without some provision of this kind it would not be exempt from the tax. For instance, many years ago there was a public-land grant made by the Federal Government to the State of Illinois. The State of Illinois in turn made a grant from that land to the Illinois Central Railroad Co. The Illinois Central Railroad Co., in consideration of the grant, entered into covenants by which it should perpetually pay into the State treasury 7 per cent of its gross income. That was one case. Without some provision of this kind that revenue to the State of Illinois might become subject to tax.

Mr. BORAH. I understand the force of that argument and the necessity of providing for such a case, but in doing so, has not the provision of the bill gone so far as to exempt, for instance, a gas corporation, or an electric-light corporation, or a telegraph corporation, or a railroad corporation? They are all public utilities.

Mr. SHIVELY. They are all public utilities for the purposes of this exemption in so far as the public acquires a beneficial interest in them. If the municipality acquires a beneficial interest in their income, this provision will apply; that is to say, suppose it were a lighting utility, and a certain portion of the proceeds were to go to the municipality; to that extent this provision would apply, and the part of the income going to the municipality would be exempt from the tax.

Mr. BORAH. What provision does the Senator from Indiana refer to as a limitation upon the public utility to which it would apply?

Mr. SHIVELY. On page 228 it is provided:

Provided further, That there shall not be taxed under this section any income derived from any public utility or from the exercise of any essential governmental function—

Now, mark you—
accruing—

That is, income accruing—

to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of the State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, nor any income accruing to the government of the Philippine Islands or Porto Rico, or of any political subdivision of the Philippine Islands or Porto Rico.

It seems to me, as the text refers to income and then says "accruing," that it can exempt only such income as goes to the municipality and can exempt nothing else.

Mr. BORAH. Is that the only provision the Senator has reference to as a limitation? It reads:

Provided further, That there shall not be taxed under this section any income derived from any public utility or from the exercise of any essential governmental function accruing to any State—

Mr. SHIVELY. Yes; that is true.

Mr. BORAH. The word "or" might make doubtful, it seems to me, the construction or the limitation which the Senator puts upon it. I am sure that the committee did not intend to exempt all public utilities.

Mr. SHIVELY. The real fact is that the question presented a good many difficulties. We did not care to appear, so far as the taxing authority could do so, to authorize the State or municipality to go into all kinds of private business and have their income exempted. The words "essential governmental function" were used as a limitation.

Mr. BORAH. That would be true if the word "or" was not used in that sentence; but the committee has provided for two classes of corporations. As to the first class, you may stop with the word "utility." Suppose you did stop with the word "utility" and say, "There shall not be taxed under this section any income derived from any public utility." You may stop there under a legal construction of the sentence; and if you do, what would be the effect of the provision upon all public-utility corporations?

Mr. NORRIS. They would not pay any income tax.

Mr. BORAH. I feel that the wrong word is used there, although I am frank to say that I am discussing these matters without having had very much time to consider them. I am seeking more to call attention to possible ambiguities than to assert a construction.

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator will observe the concluding clause of that paragraph, which reads:

But this provision is not intended to confer upon such person or corporation any financial gain or exemption or to relieve such person or corporation from the payment of a tax, as provided for in this section, upon the part or portion of the said income to which such person or corporation shall be entitled under such contract.

The fact is that we were trying to draw the line sharply between the revenue derived by the corporation from its business and the revenue derived by the Government from the corporation.

Mr. BURTON. If the Senator from Indiana will yield for a question, I will say that I have only examined this language very superficially. How does the Senator from Indiana meet the contention of the Senator from Idaho that the first portion of the proviso can stand by itself? I refer to that portion reading:

Provided further, That there shall not be taxed under this section any income derived from any public utility.

Why does not that stand by itself as an exemption?

The proviso proceeds:

Or from the exercise of any essential governmental function.

Going on to something distinct and different.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It reads:

Accruing to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia—

And so forth.

Mr. BURTON. Yes; but that is another class. It reads:

Or from the exercise of any essential governmental function accruing to any State, * * * nor any income accruing—

And so forth.

Mr. SHIVELY. It seems to me, if the Senator will allow me, that would be read:

That there shall not be taxed under this section any income derived from any public utility—

Mr. BURTON. That is, the word "or" connects the words "any public utility" and the words "from the exercise of any essential governmental function."

Mr. SHIVELY. Yes; "and from the exercise of any essential governmental function." The word "accruing" relates back, of course, to income.

Mr. BORAH. It relates back to what, did the Senator say?

Mr. SHIVELY. To the word "income."

Mr. BURTON. Well, I fancy a court would use all its power to interpret that language not to mean that the first clause stood by itself, but it seems to me there is some ambiguity. Does the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] desire to ask a question? If so, I will yield to him.

Mr. BORAH. I desire a little more light, if I can get it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This proviso is all in one sentence:

There shall not be taxed under this section any income—

Of what sort?

derived from any public utility or from the exercise of any essential governmental function accruing—

To whom?

to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia.

I do not see how there could be any trouble about that language. There is not even a comma in there.

Mr. BORAH. I know there is not a comma in there, but suppose some printer should make a mistake and put in a comma, where would you be?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I know there is not a comma there now, but you can not control the legal meaning of a sentence exclusively by punctuation. A court will repunctuate a sentence sometimes in order to make it plain and clear.

Mr. SHIVELY. Only where there is a manifest ambiguity.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The reason there is no comma preceding the word "or" is to make sure that it is all one and refers to the income derived by the political subdivisions mentioned.

Mr. BORAH. I will read the proviso again, interpolating the words "any income" after the word "or":

That there shall not be taxed under this section any income derived from any public utility or any income from the exercise of any essential governmental function accruing to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, nor any income accruing to the government of the Philippine Islands—

And so forth.

If you insert the words "any income" after the word "or," you will get what might, in my judgment, come to be the final legal construction of the sentence—"that there shall not be taxed under this section any income derived from any public utility or any income derived from the exercise of any essential governmental function."

Mr. SHIVELY. That is to say, the courts would construe the provision leaving out the word "accruing" entirely?

Mr. BORAH. No. I take it the Senator feels safe under the rule of reason.

Mr. SHIVELY. I have not any question but that the word "accruing" relates back to the word "income," and relates to all between the two words.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose that if the Supreme Court of the United States should construe this provision to exempt public utilities it would be another powerful argument in favor of the recall of judges because we did not make the law plain.

Mr. SHIVELY. It might be a powerful argument for the recall of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. I think it would be, but we do not agonize to have the recall applied to Senators; only judges.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to ask another question. The paragraph further provides:

No tax shall be levied under the provisions of this act upon the income derived from the operation of such public utility, so far as the payment thereof will impose a loss or burden upon such State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or a political subdivision of a State or Territory.

Suppose there is an arrangement under which a public utility, a street railway or a gas company, is to fix its rates so that it can make 6 per cent interest on its investment, and no more. To take a concrete case, a street railway company operates under a 3-cent fare, and if by charging a 3-cent fare the income of the street railway company is brought down below 6 per cent by the imposition of a tax, does the language which I have read mean that the tax is not to be paid?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; it does not mean that.

Mr. BURTON. But it says:

So far as the payment thereof would impose a loss or burden upon such State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or a political subdivision of a State or Territory.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That would not impose a burden upon any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia; it would merely reduce the dividend of the company. To explain this, the State of Illinois, for example, receives 7 per cent from the Illinois Central Railroad; the city of Baltimore receives 9 per cent upon the gross earnings of all its street railways, or used to do so, and does so yet, I think; the city of New York has a contract whereby a certain amount of money was raised and it has a contract whereby it undertakes to hold harmless some of the street railways from all taxes, and then at the end of a certain period the railways become the property of the city of New York or the city has a right to go in and purchase them under certain circumstances. In that case New York gets half, and the street railway gets half. The object is to exempt New York's half, and, therefore, the language was put in below:

But this provision is not intended to confer upon such person or corporation any financial gain or exemption or to relieve such person or corporation from the payment of a tax as provided for in this section upon the part or portion of the said income to which such person or corporation shall be entitled under such contract.

Mr. BURTON. It is a different class of cases from those mentioned by the Senator from Mississippi to which I am referring. I am referring to cases which are becoming somewhat frequent now, where the value of the public utility owned by a private corporation is capitalized and a certain rate fixed, say 60 cents per thousand cubic feet for gas, or 3 cents for fare in the case of street railroads, and those rates continue so long as the corporation can earn 5 or 6 per cent or whatever rate is agreed upon. Suppose the imposition of an income tax on the corporation brings down its earnings below 6 per cent, then the price for gas would have to go above 60 cents or for the street-car fare above 3 cents. Does this provision apply in such a case?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, does not the Senator see that, even if the fare had to go above 3 cents or the price of gas had to go above a certain figure, it would not be the city that would be burdened; it would be the users of the gas and the travelers upon the street railway?

Mr. BURTON. Is there not an identity between the city and the street-car users.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This does not undertake to protect the people from all burdens. We can not do that because every income tax puts burdens upon the people, although somebody else may pay them. All taxes, as the Senator is aware, are shifted more or less.

Mr. BURTON. Take the case where a large share of the gas is used by the city itself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As the city can not be taxed at all that would merely reduce the income which the city derives; but it would not be a contract with that corporation whereby certain moneys were to accrue to the city.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the conference report?

Mr. SIMMONS and Mr. PENROSE addressed the Chair.

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Pennsylvania wishes to speak—

Mr. PENROSE. I have nothing to say at this time. I wanted to hear what the chairman of the committee had to say in explanation of the conference report.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was going to make a motion.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not hear the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. I say I was going to make a motion, if the Senator will pardon me; but if the Senator wants to speak I will not make it.

Mr. PENROSE. What is the Senator's motion.

Mr. SIMMONS. Simply a motion to concur.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator not intend to address the Senate?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not intend to address the Senate, if we can get a vote now.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, it would seem to me, Mr. President, that the minority are at least entitled to an explanation from the chairman as to the report and some of the reasons that led to certain important actions. We are waiting with great interest to hear from the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator desires that I shall make the very brief statement that I propose to make—I am not going into any extensive discussion—I would as soon make it now, but I will yield to the Senator if he wishes to speak. He advised me that he expected to speak.

Mr. PENROSE. I think the minority would prefer to hear the chairman of the committee, because his remarks may be so illuminating that we may not speak as long as we would otherwise, if we were laboring in the dark.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am afraid the Senator from Pennsylvania has become very much infatuated with the word "illuminating."

Mr. President, I have a few brief remarks, largely in the nature of a statement, which I propose to submit, and I presume I might as well submit them now as at any other time.

The House bill, as passed by the Senate, carried 676 different amendments. The House conferees agreed right out to 427 of these amendments, and agreed, with amendments, to 97 of them. The Senate conferees receded from 151 of the Senate amendments. There was a total disagreement between the two Houses as to only one amendment.

The Senate placed upon the free list 61 different items which, in the House bill, were upon the dutiable list. Of the 61 items placed upon the free list by the Senate all were retained there by the conferees except 5, the conferees having agreed to 56 of these amendments.

Without reading the 56 items placed upon the free list by the Senate and agreed to by the conference committee, I submit a statement of them and ask that it may be incorporated as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ARTICLES TRANSFERRED TO THE FREE LIST BY THE SENATE AND AGREED TO BY THE HOUSE.

Burlaps for making bags and sacks.
Roman, Portland, and other hydraulic cement.
Creosote oil, anthracene and anthracene oil.
Synthetic cryolite.
Glaziers' and engravers' diamonds, unset, and miners' diamonds.
Eggs.
Crude artificial abrasives.
Flax and tow of flax, hemp and tow of hemp.
Fulminates and fulminating powders.
Furs and fur skins, undressed.
Amber, in chips, valued at not more than 50 cents a pound.
Gunpowder and all explosive substances used for mining, blasting, and artillery purposes.
Dyes obtained from Indigo.
Pig iron, kettledge, spelgeisen, scrap iron and steel, ferromanganese, iron in slabs, blooms, loops, or other forms less finished than bars, steel ingots, blooms and slabs, die blocks, billets, and cogged ingots.
Limestone, rock asphalt, asphaltum, and bitumen.
Lard compounds and lard substitutes.
Horseshoe-nail rods.
Photographic and moving-picture films, not exposed or developed.
Cyanide of potassium.
Steel engraved forms for bonds and engraved steel plates suitable for printing bonds.

Cattle.
Sheep.
Wheat.
Cedar lumber.
Rag pulp.
Machinery for the manufacture of sugar.
Sand blast machines and sludge machines.
Alazarin, natural or synthetic, and dyes obtained from alazarin, anthracene, and carbazol.
Antimony ore and stibnite containing antimony.
Steel boxes, previously exported filled with American products.
Text books used in schools and other educational institutions.
Braille tablets, cubarithmes, special apparatus and objects to teach the blind, printing apparatus, machines, presses, and types for the use and benefit of the blind.
Needles for shoe machines.
Palm nuts and palm-nut kernels.
Perilla oil.
Cyanide of soda.
Hoop poles.
Spanish cedar.
Paper twine for binding wool.
Perchlorate of ammonia.
Fruit boxes, made from shooks exported from the United States.
Mother bulbs for propagating purposes.
Harness, saddles and saddlery, composed of other material than leather.

Mr. SIMMONS. Five articles were transferred from the free list to the dutiable list by the Senate, and agreed to in conference. I shall not read those items, but ask that they may be printed as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ARTICLES TRANSFERRED FROM THE FREE LIST TO THE DUTIALE LIST BY THE SENATE AND AGREED TO IN CONFERENCE.

Crude meerschaum.
Oatmeal and rolled oats.
Persian berries, extract of.
Nutmalls, extract of.
Sumac bark, extract of.

Mr. SIMMONS. The articles transferred from the free list to the dutiable list by the Senate and restored to the free list in conference number only four. I ask that a statement of those may be incorporated in my remarks without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ARTICLES TRANSFERRED FROM THE FREE LIST TO THE DUTIALE LIST BY THE SENATE AND RESTORED TO THE FREE LIST IN CONFERENCE.

Press cloth for oil-milling purposes.
Marine coral, uncut and unmanufactured.
White glass enamel for watch and clock dials.
Terra alba.

Mr. SIMMONS. The articles transferred to the free list by the Senate, but restored to the dutiable list by the conferees, number five. I shall not read those, but ask that they may be incorporated as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ARTICLES TRANSFERRED TO THE FREE LIST BY THE SENATE, BUT RESTORED TO THE DUTIALE LIST BY THE CONFERENCE.

Blankets, valued at less than 40 cents per pound.
Cast-iron pipe.
Diamond dust.
Chlorate of potash.
Hair of the Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals.

Mr. SIMMONS. I submit, and ask that it may be incorporated as part of my remarks without reading, an enumeration of the items upon which the principal reductions were made by the conferees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PRINCIPAL REDUCTIONS MADE BY CONFERENCE OVER HOUSE BILL, NOT INCLUDING ARTICLES FREE LISTED.

SCHEDULE A.

No. 37. Chiclé, from 20 cents to 15 cents per pound.
No. 46. Linseed oil, from 12 cents to 10 cents per gallon.
No. 67. Soap, perfumed toilet, from 40 per cent to 30 per cent; medicinal soap, from 30 per cent to 20 per cent.

SCHEDULE B.

No. 79. Mica, from 30 per cent to 25 per cent.
No. 96. Surgical instruments, telescopes, microscopes, etc., from 30 per cent to 25 per cent.

SCHEDULE C.

No. 105. Iron bars, etc., from 8 per cent to 5 per cent.
No. 106. Architectural iron, from 12 per cent to 10 per cent.
No. 107. Boiler and other plate iron or steel, from 15 per cent to 12 per cent.
No. 108. Anchors and forgings, from 15 per cent to 12 per cent.
No. 109. Hoop, band, etc., iron and barrel hoops, from 12 per cent to 10 per cent.
No. 111. Sheets, plates, or strips of iron or steel, coated, galvanized, or tinned, from 20 per cent to 15 per cent.
No. 116. Wire and manufactures, from 20 per cent to 15 per cent.

No. 122. Motorcycles, from 40 per cent to 25 per cent.
 No. 125. Nuts, or nut blanks and washers, from 15 per cent to 5 per cent; bolts and hinges, from 15 per cent to 10 per cent.
 No. 121. Automobiles, valued at less than $2,000, from 45 per cent to 30 per cent.
 No. 126. Card clothing, from 40 per cent to 35 per cent.
 No. 127. Cast-iron pipe, from 12 per cent to 10 per cent.
 No. 137. Needles for sewing machines and knitting, from 25 per cent to 20 per cent.
 No. 145. Aluminum, from 25 per cent to 2½ cents or 3½ cents per pound.
 No. 152. Tinsel wire, etc., from 10 per cent to 6 per cent; metal threads, etc., from 30 per cent to 25 per cent.
 No. 169. Manufactures of metals, including machines, etc., not specially provided for, from 25 per cent to 20 per cent.

SCHEDULE G.

No. 196. Oats, from 10 cents per bushel to 6 cents per bushel.
 No. 200. Butter, from 3 cents to 2½ cents per pound.
 No. 208. Eggs, frozen, from 2½ cents to 2 cents per pound.
 No. 216. Greenhouse stock, from 25 per cent to 15 per cent.
 No. 223. Zante currants, from 2 cents to 1½ cents per pound.
 No. 233. Extracts of meat, not specially provided for, from 15 cents to 10 cents per pound; extract fluid, not specially provided for, from 7 cents to 5 cents per pound.

SCHEDULE I.

No. 260. Cotton handkerchiefs, not hemmed, from 30 per cent to 25 per cent.
 No. 265. Hosiery, valued over 70 cents nor more than $1.20 per dozen, from 50 per cent to 40 per cent.

SCHEDULE J.

No. 278. Thread, twine, or cords of flax, hemp, or ramie, from 25 per cent and 30 per cent to 20 per cent and 25 per cent.
 No. 279. Single yarns of flax, hemp, ramie, or a mixture of them, from 15 per cent and 25 per cent to 12 per cent and 20 per cent.
 No. 280. Gill netting, from 30 per cent to 25 per cent.
 No. 281. Floor matting, from 2½ cents to 2 cents per yard.
 No. 282. Carpets, etc., of flax, hemp, jute, etc., from 35 per cent to 30 per cent.
 No. 284. Tapes, from 25 per cent to 20 per cent.
 No. 287. Wearing apparel of flax, hemp, etc., from 50 per cent to 40 per cent.
 No. 288. Dyed, colored, etc., burlaps, from 20 per cent to 10 per cent.
 No. 289. Manufactures of flax, etc., not specially provided for, from 45 per cent to 40 per cent.
 No. 290. Bags or sacks, etc., from 25 per cent to 10 per cent.
 No. 246. Fabrics of flax, hemp, etc., from 35 per cent to 30 per cent.

SCHEDULE K.

No. 295. Tops, from 15 per cent to 8 per cent.
 No. 296. Yarns, from 20 per cent to 18 per cent.
 No. 298. Flannels, from 35 per cent to 30 per cent.
 No. 314. Mohair, from 20 per cent to 15 per cent.
 No. 315. Mohair tops, from 25 per cent to 20 per cent.
 No. 316. Mohair yarns, from 30 per cent to 25 per cent.
 No. 318. Mohair pile fabrics, from 50 per cent to 45 per cent.
 No. 318½. Time of going into effect postponed to January 1, next.

SCHEDULE M.

No. 328. Box board, from 25 per cent to 5 per cent; pulp board, from 25 per cent to 5 per cent.
 No. 332. Plain basic paper for albuminizing, sensitizing, baryta coating, or for photographic or solar printing processes, from 25 per cent to 15 per cent.

SCHEDULE N.

No. 347. Buttons of vegetable ivory, 36 lines and over in size, from 40 per cent to 35 per cent; buttons of shell and paste, 26 lines and larger in size, from 40 per cent to 25 per cent; buttons, agate and shoe buttons, from 40 per cent to 15 per cent.
 No. 358. Plates and mats of dog and goat skins, from 40 per cent to 10 per cent.
 No. 376. Strings for musical instruments of gut, from 35 per cent to 20 per cent.
 No. 390. Moving-picture films, positive, from 1½ cents to 1 cent per linear foot.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator object to an interruption?

Mr. SIMMONS. Not at all.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to ask the Senator from North Carolina, the chairman of the Finance Committee, a question for information. Speaking of the number of items transferred to the free list, I desire to know if the 61 items referred to constitute the total, or if those are only the additional items added to the free list?

Mr. SIMMONS. There were 61 items added to the free list by the Senate. The conferees retained upon the free list all of those items except 5, I think.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will pardon a further interruption, can he tell us how many of those 61 items are taken from the agricultural schedule?

Mr. SIMMONS. I could if I were to stop and examine them. I will read them if the Senator requires it.

Mr. GRONNA. No; the Senator does not require it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not made any calculations for the purpose of ascertaining that.

I also ask to file as a part of my remarks, without reading, a statement as to the changes in amendments made by the conferees upon the administrative sections of the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not wish to appear to be discourteous to the Senator, but if he would enable the minority to hear his statement it would be a great comfort to us.

Mr. SIMMONS. I stated that I also desired, without reading, to incorporate in my remarks a statement of the principal changes made by the conferees relating to the administrative sections of the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Is it the Senator's idea to let the bill go over until to-morrow, so that we can read this statement?

Mr. SIMMONS. Not at all. If the Senator desires me to read it, I will do so.

Mr. PENROSE. No; I do not desire to put the Senator to any inconvenience. Let the matter take its natural course, and let the record be made for future consideration. The statements are being inserted in the Record without any information on the part of the minority as to what is contained therein.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator object to my printing, without reading, a statement of the amendments relating to the administrative sections?

Mr. PENROSE. I have been so chastened by defeat that I do not object to anything.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think it necessary to take the time of the Senate to read all those amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the matter referred to may be printed as requested.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ADMINISTRATIVE FEATURES—CHANGES MADE BY CONFERENCE.

For statistical purposes the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce are authorized to establish from time to time a list of enumerated articles in detail of all goods, wares, and merchandise imported into the United States.

The changes make unlawful agreements for a contingent fee in respect to recovery or refund under protest. If such agreement is made, the protest is rendered invalid and a penalty is imposed.

Instead of excluding merchandise from entry for failure or refusal of the foreign exporter or domestic importer to submit books, etc., to inspection it is made dutiable at an advance of 15 per cent ad valorem.

The establishment of a registry of commissionaires or purchasing agents in each United States consulate, provided for by the House bill, is stricken out.

The retaliatory provisions as relating to foreign discrimination are stricken out.

Article 8 of the Cuban reciprocity treaty is repealed. The article containing provisions covering imports from the Philippine Islands partly composed of foreign material is changed as to the percentage of foreign material contained from 50 per cent to 20 per cent of the total value.

Women's wearing apparel imported by manufacturers for use as models are added to the list of articles that can be imported free of duty if reexported within six months.

The provisions allowing a discount of 5 per cent on duties on goods imported in vessels of United States register are modified so as not to apply to nations having treaties providing for equal treatment of imports in vessels of both countries.

The conference report provided that the waste from rice cleaned in bonded warehouses can be withdrawn into consumption upon payment of the regular customs duties upon such products.

A change provides for the withdrawal of cigars made of imported tobacco in bonded warehouses.

The "dumping clause" is stricken from the bill. The present excise tax law for the first two months of the calendar year 1913 is changed by abolishing the $5,000 exemption.

Changes are made in the provisions relating to smelting or refining metals in bonded warehouses.

An amendment provides for extending and modifying the present denatured alcohol law.

An amendment provides that if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act is declared to be invalid by any court of competent jurisdiction the remainder of said act shall not be invalidated.

Mr. SIMMONS. I also desire to insert as a part of my remarks, without reading, a statement of the changes made by the conferees in the income-tax provision of the House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

INCOME-TAX SECTION.

CHANGES MADE BY CONFERENCE REPORT FROM HOUSE BILL.

Very many minor changes were made so as to render the provision more effective, explicit, and definite, less ambiguous, and more easily put into operation. Principal changes are as follows:

The additional tax upon incomes from $75,000 to $100,000 was increased from 2 per cent to 3 per cent; $100,000 to $250,000 was increased from 3 per cent to 4 per cent; $250,000 to $500,000 was increased from 3 per cent to 5 per cent; over $500,000 was increased from 3 per cent to 6 per cent.

The limit for the allowance for exhaustion in case of mines was fixed so as not to exceed 5 per cent of the gross value at the mine for the output for the year.

The exemption for persons not married and for married persons not living with their husband or wife was reduced to $3,000.

For the year 1913 the income-tax law was fixed to apply to the 10 months ending December 31 instead of the full year. Also the new law as to the excise tax covers the same period.

In this connection the provisions of the present excise-tax law are modified by the conference report so as to make it conform with the proposed law so far as the abolition of the $5,000 exemption is concerned.

The conference appropriates $500,000 for carrying this law into effect, providing rental quarters, purchasing of supplies, payment of salaries, etc. It provides for the appointment of an additional deputy collector of internal revenue, two heads of division, and such additional clerks, messengers, and other employees as may be necessary. It also fixes certain compensations and allows the appointment outside of the civil-service rules for two years following the passage of this act of all such employees except the clerical force below chiefs of division employed in Washington, D. C.

Mr. SIMMONS. I also submit, and wish to incorporate in my remarks, an estimate of the amount that may be expected to be derived from the income-tax provisions of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Estimated income tax for the year 1915.

Incomes.	Number of incomes.	Rates.	Tax.
$3,000 to $4,000.....	75,000	1 per cent.....	$375,000
$4,000 to $5,000.....	125,000	do.....	625,000
$5,000 to $10,000.....	175,000	do.....	875,000
$10,000 to $15,000.....	53,000	do.....	530,000
$15,000 to $20,000.....	24,500	do.....	367,500
$20,000 to $25,000.....	10,500	1 and 2 per cent.....	2,100,000
$25,000 to $50,000.....	21,000	do.....	9,660,000
$50,000 to $75,000.....	6,100	1, 2, and 3 per cent.....	6,832,000
$75,000 to $100,000.....	2,400	1, 2, 3, and 4 per cent.....	4,776,000
$100,000 to $250,000.....	2,500	1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 per cent.....	13,775,000
$250,000 to $500,000.....	550	1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 per cent.....	8,905,500
$500,000 to $1,000,000.....	350	1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 per cent.....	13,653,500
Over $1,000,000.....	100	do.....	9,301,000
Total.....	500,000		$2,673,000

Total income tax, $2,673,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Finance Committee and the conference committee alike have been alive to the importance of providing adequate revenues to run the Government. The bill as agreed to in conference, your committee is confident, will provide ample revenue for this purpose and will leave a comfortable surplus in the Treasury.

I present, and will read if the Senator from Pennsylvania desires it, a statement prepared by the expert of the Treasury Department assigned to assist the Finance Committee, and who had been previously assigned to do the same work for the Ways and Means Committee. I think he is the same expert who performed a similar office for the Finance Committee in making up the Payne-Aldrich bill. I may be mistaken about that. I am sure, however, whether I am mistaken about that or not, that this expert has for years prepared these statements for the two committees of Congress having charge of tariff legislation. I have, personally, and I think every member of the Finance Committee has, complete confidence in his competency and in the accuracy of his estimates.

From this table it will appear that the total receipts that we may reasonably expect during the fiscal year 1914 will amount to $1,029,000,000, and that the expenditures in that year will amount to $1,013,000,000, leaving a surplus for the first year under the new law of $16,000,000.

During the fiscal year 1915, when all the provisions of the bill will be in force, it is estimated that the total receipts will amount to $1,026,000,000 and that the expenditures will amount to $1,008,000,000, leaving a surplus of $18,000,000.

Upon an examination of this statement it will be found that for the present fiscal year, 1914, the amount estimated to be derived from customs duties is $270,000,000, as against $249,000,000 for the year 1915. The difference, of course, as will be readily seen, is attributable to the fact, as I stated before, that in 1915 all the provisions of the bill will be in effect, and as the duties are lower the estimated revenues are less.

The statement also estimates the internal-revenue receipts for the present year and for the next year at $305,000,000. That is somewhat in excess of an estimate heretofore made by me, in a report filed by me on the 19th day of July. That is due to the fact that at that time we did not know what would be the internal-revenue receipts for the quarter which has just ended. It was known, however, that during the last several years there has been a progressive increase in the internal-revenue receipts of the Government. That progressive increase continued during the quarter which has just ended, there being an increased revenue from this source as compared with the corresponding quarters of the fiscal years 1913 and 1912. Pursuing the usual methods of calculation in the department, the expert has estimated that the revenues from this source will be $305,000,000.

During the first year in which this bill will be in effect, the fiscal year 1914, the expert estimates that we will receive from the income tax $66,000,000, while he estimates that from the same source in 1915 we will receive $83,000,000. That is due to the fact that the bill provides that the income tax shall be collected for the calendar year, as distinguished from the fiscal year; and as the Senate changed the House provision so as to provide that the assessment should not begin until the 1st day of March, the receipts this year will represent only five-sixths of a full year.

It is also estimated that the excise tax during this year will amount to $38,000,000 and next year to $39,000,000.

Considering the rather remarkable increase in the receipts from this source during the past year, it was thought conservative to estimate that there would be an increase in revenue from this source of $1,000,000. Customs receipts for the fiscal year 1914 are estimated to be considerably in excess of those for the fiscal year 1915 because of the temporary continuation of the duty on sugar and wool and because during the first quarter, which has already passed, the higher duties of the existing law were in operation, yielding a correspondingly large revenue.

The receipts from the ordinary internal-revenue collections are running much higher than in the year 1912. They increased in 1913 over 1912 about $16,500,000, and for the quarter just ended they were $2,500,000 in excess of the corresponding quarter in 1913. They are running so high now as to promise about the amount I have indicated, $305,000,000.

The present estimate of receipts from the income tax is greater than I formerly made, because since that time the Senate, by amendments, increased the rates of from 1 per cent to 4 per cent on large fortunes to from 1 per cent to 7 per cent, and because the exemption is reduced from $4,000 to $3,000, and the exemption for children is abolished, and that for husband and wife is now allowed to only one, not to both.

I ask to incorporate in my remarks, without reading, an estimate of the receipts and expenditures for the year 1914 and 1915.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Estimates of receipts and expenditures, 1914.

RECEIPTS.
Customs.....	$270,000,000
Internal revenue (ordinary).....	305,000,000
Internal excise tax.....	38,000,000
Internal income tax.....	66,000,000
Sale of public lands.....	5,000,000
Miscellaneous.....	55,000,000
Postal revenue.....	290,000,000
Total.....	$1,029,000,000
EXPENDITURES.
Civil and miscellaneous.....	$175,000,000
War Department.....	178,000,000
Navy Department.....	147,000,000
Indian service.....	20,000,000
Pensions.....	180,000,000
Interest on public debt.....	23,000,000
Postal service.....	290,000,000
Total.....	1,013,000,000
Surplus.....	16,000,000

Estimates of receipts and expenditures, 1915.

RECEIPTS.
Customs.....	$249,000,000
Internal revenue (ordinary).....	305,000,000
Internal excise tax.....	39,000,000
Internal income tax.....	83,000,000
Sale of public lands.....	5,000,000
Miscellaneous.....	55,000,000
Postal service.....	290,000,000
Total.....	$1,026,000,000
EXPENDITURES.
Civil and miscellaneous.....	$175,000,000
War Department.....	175,000,000
Navy Department.....	145,000,000
Indian service.....	20,000,000
Pensions.....	180,000,000
Interest on public debt.....	23,000,000
Postal service.....	290,000,000
Total.....	1,008,000,000
Surplus.....	18,000,000

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the amendments made by the Senate to the House bill reduced the House rate from an ad valorem average of 27.84 per cent to an ad valorem average of 26.67 per cent, a reduction of 4.22 per cent. The conferees have reduced some duties below the Senate rates and raised some above the Senate rates, the aggregate result being an increase over the Senate amendment rates of about 0.61 per cent. The bill as agreed upon by the Senate and conferees is the lowest tariff measure passed since the Civil War, and it is the first tariff bill ever passed by Congress in which the rates fixed by the Senate were lower than those fixed in the House bill.

The representatives of special interests have long regarded the Senate as the bulwark of protection. When the House has made a rate unsatisfactory to these interests they have followed the bill to the Senate with the confident expectation of securing satisfactory amendments, and heretofore they have generally not been disappointed in their expectation.

This year these interests have made their usual efforts in this regard. They were, of course, given a courteous hearing by the committee, but all of their efforts to have the Senate convert the revenue bill of the House into a protective measure have been vain and futile. Having failed in their efforts to secure special privilege from the committee and the Senate, some of these interests did not despair, but made a final effort when the bill went to conference, but with no better result.

Mr. President, within a few hours—certainly to-morrow or next day—this bill will become the law of the land. It will carry the lowest average rate of duty carried by any tariff bill ever passed by Congress except the Walker bill, and the passage of that bill was followed by an era of prosperity not surpassed in our history. It will be recognized by the country, whatever may be said of it by its opponents, as an honest effort on the part of the party in power to relieve the people from the unequal conditions and unjust burdens existing through the present tariff law, without inflicting injury upon anyone, except in so far as injury may be incidental to remedying admitted wrongs and correcting inequalities and inequities in our tariff legislation by abolishing legislative privilege and favoritism.

The large free list which this bill carries and the heavy reductions it makes on the necessities of life will carry its benefits more directly and more surely to the people than any other tariff bill ever enacted by Congress. It untaxes many of the raw materials of the manufacturer, but it simultaneously and correspondingly reduces the tariff on the manufacturer's finished products, so as to compel him to share the resulting lessened cost of production with the domestic purchaser of his products.

The bill recognizes the fact that the maintenance and the further development and expansion of our industrial activities depend largely on our foreign trade. It recognizes the fact that we can not successfully sell abroad unless we also buy abroad, and it seeks in every possible and feasible way to encourage our foreign commerce. To that end, by its reductions, it opens the door for larger importations, and by reducing the taxes on the necessities of life and by untaxing the raw materials of the manufacturer it reduces the cost of production and provides a way for an enlarged exportation of our products.

Mr. President, this bill remits to the masses one-third of the tax they now pay to the Government through customs duties by transferring that much of their present burdens to the incomes of the rich. This is fair and just, because the masses pay many times their share of these customs taxes under our tariff system, which is a tax upon consumption; and as the poor man and the man of moderate means must eat, must wear clothes, must have a home in which to reside as well as the rich man, the amount of taxes which the poor and the well do to pay under a tax on consumption is altogether out of harmony with the amount which the rich have to pay.

With a view of equalizing this condition, in the inauguration of the income tax we have sought to remedy—and we believe we have in a large measure, though not altogether, remedied—that inequality by exempting from the income tax all incomes under $3,000. So that while the millions of this country pay practically all of the customs taxes—the consumption taxes—they will be relieved from the income tax, and this tax has to be paid only by the rich or moderately rich whose incomes exceed $3,000.

It is estimated that of the ninety-odd million people of this country this income tax will have to be paid by only about 500,000 individuals. So we have a system, brought about through this bill, equalizing the burdens of taxation between the rich and the poor by relieving the man whose income is less than $3,000 from all income tax and requiring those who have more than a competency and who do not pay their share of customs taxes to pay all of this tax on wealth.

But, Mr. President, of far greater importance to the people than relieving them of the one-third of the customs tax that is now transferred to the swollen fortunes of the rich—for that could not amount to more than a lessening of their burdens to the extent, probably, of $100,000,000 a year—of more, yes, of transcendently more importance to the people than this is the fact that the reductions made in this bill remit to the masses millions piled upon millions annually collected from them through the provisions of existing law, not for the Government, not to fill the coffers of the Treasury, but to swell the bloated fortunes of beneficiaries of the protective system of taxation.

Mr. President, this bill has been highly praised and it has been severely criticised. So have all of its predecessors. But neither the commendations of the advocates nor the condemnations of the opponents of an untried tariff bill signify much. In this case, as in every case, the merits of the bill will have to be determined by its practical workings.

The Democratic Party, responsible for this legislation, awaits with absolute confidence the result of this supreme test of its efficiency in carrying out the policies and principles upon which it was framed, and the efficacy of these principles, thus applied, to remedy admitted evils and reform admitted abuses in the interest of the welfare and the prosperity and the happiness of the people. As Democrats we have an abiding faith that it will expand and not contract our industrial activities.

We believe that it will open more factories and will not close those that are already in operation. We believe that it will increase and not curtail the opportunities of employment to labor and that it will make more instead of lessening the number of shops open to the American workmen. We have an abiding faith that it will bring prosperity and not disaster.

Whatever may be said of this bill, either by its friends or opponents, no one can gainsay the fact that it is a clean bill. No one can gainsay the fact that no sinister taint or suspicion attaches to its making. No one can say that it was inspired or written by the hands of selfishness or of greed. All will admit that the representatives of the interests came here to the Capitol, as has been their wont whenever tariff legislation is about to be enacted, to influence and dictate legislation to serve their special selfish interests. But they went away, Mr. President, empty handed. They went away dazed by the fact, which they discovered, that again in this country the people rule and God Almighty reigns. They went away impressed by the fact that at last it has come to pass in this Republic, thank God, that the people who pay the taxes levy the taxes they pay, and not the special interests, for whom so long taxes have been levied by the Republican Party and paid by the people.

No one will deny that this bill represents an honest effort by the party in power to carry out the pledges and promises upon which it was elected and upon which we Members of this Congress were elected and commissioned to act, and to act at once.

This bill is a part of a legislative program of reform which will help the people and hit the trusts. It is a part of the legislative program that will with one hand cut down the cost of living and with the other hand cut down the unjust and unfair profits of monopoly and special privilege.

Mr. President, when the full Democratic program of reform has been written, as it will be written in the statutes within a short time by the Democratic Party, let us hope, as I believe will be the case, that there will be an end in this country to that greatest menace to our institutions—in working out the great schemes of freedom and equality for which they were ordained and established—namely, law-created wealth and law-created privilege.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am about through, if the Senator will wait.

Mr. JONES. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have just a minute further.

Mr. President, there has been talk here and elsewhere about the methods pursued in the framing of this bill, especially about the caucus. Ours is a government of parties. The party in power is responsible for legislation. The tariff is and always has been, and I think always will be, a party question. These bills must be made by the party in power, if that party is to carry out its party pledges and party promises with reference to this party question. This has been recognized by all parties in the framing of all our tariff bills.

The caucus is an extension of the method pursued heretofore, but the purposes are the same. Heretofore the members of the Finance Committee of the party responsible for the legislation have framed the bill both in the committee and in the conference. In the passage of the last bill no minority Senator on the Finance Committee was permitted in the councils of that committee when it was framing the bill, and after the bill was framed they were allowed only a few minutes to consider it before the final vote was taken on it in committee. In the meetings of the conference committee upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon that bill no member of the minority was permitted to be present, and it was claimed at the time that the report was actually made and signed without the minority members ever having been called into the meetings of the committee at all.

The caucus, I say, simply carries this practice a little further. Instead of securing party unity and party consent through the committee, it was sought to secure a more general and thorough agreement through the caucus.

As the result of these caucus conferences of the majority it can be truthfully said that this is the first tariff bill ever passed in this country that was framed by the whole body of the party responsible for the legislation instead of a small coterie of the two Houses.

Mr. President, it has been a long-drawn-out struggle. We have been here for months—but that has been the way with all our general revisions of the tariff. There has been criticism of the time consumed in the committee and caucus investigations and discussions and in the debates in the Senate. But I think it has been time well spent. I do not think it has been time wasted. If we had taken less time the bill might not have been as good a bill as it is. I am sure the country will agree that the interests involved were too great, too all-embracing, affecting in some way indirectly or remotely everything we buy or sell, for hasty and immature consideration and action.

I congratulate the Congress and the country that the long, protracted struggle is at length about to end. I want especially, as chairman of the committee in charge of this legislation, to express my personal appreciation of the kindness and the courtesy that has been shown me, not only by my colleagues on this side of the Chamber, but by my colleagues on the other side of the Chamber. I want also to express my gratification, too, that during this long debate, where strong men struggled with each other over their convictions, there has been so little of bitterness and so little of the heat of debate in the things that have been said and in the things that have been done.

Now, Mr. President, in conclusion, let me say that I shall ever remember with a feeling of pride and satisfaction the pleasant relations that I have sustained throughout this whole contest with every single Member of the Senate, both upon this side of the Chamber and upon the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, a few days ago I took occasion to make some remarks upon the subject of the tax upon wine spirits. I had hoped that something might be done whereby some provision could be made in the pending bill to restore the tax upon wine spirits so as to place all producers and users of that product upon an equal footing and to compel each one, without favor to any, to bear his fair portion of the Government's burdens. I realize that we have had a long session and a tiresome one. I had hoped that my colleagues on this side of the Chamber yesterday might see fit to adopt some procedure which would ultimately lead to some relief in this behalf in this bill. It was their judgment, however, because of the position taken by the other conferees, that that could not be done at this session; and I shall acquiesce in their judgment; but at the same time I feel that it is due to me, due to my own State, and due to the country at large that I place, perhaps a little more fully in some particulars, the facts in the Record in connection with the legislation now upon the statute books of the United States about which I enter complaint.

At the risk of repetition, if the Senate will indulge me, permit me to say that prior to 1890 there was an internal-revenue tax upon wine spirits as well as on all other spirits of 90 cents per gallon. Some years later, during the Spanish-American War, that tax was made $1.10 per gallon. In 1890 Congress included in the tariff law which was passed in that year a few sections, perfectly innocent and harmless in and of themselves as they seemed at first blush, which gave to certain producers of pure sweet wine the privilege of taking and using wine spirits at 3 cents per gallon for which others were compelled to pay this tax of 90 cents per gallon and later $1.10 tax per gallon.

This was not intended as an encouragement to all producers of pure sweet wine because the statute was so framed that it gave the privilege only to those producers of pure sweet wines "who were also distillers of wine spirits." Later there was a provision in another section whereby the producers of sweet wines as defined in the statute were to be granted the privilege to take it out of bond; but there was another "joker" in that law which provided to this effect, that only those producers of pure sweet wine could have this privilege who had their wineries at the vineyard where the grapes were crushed and the juice expressed. The result of this was that in many of the Eastern States, where the wineries were in the town and the vineyards were on the farms or upon the islands of the lake, as in my own State, they were obliged to pay $1.10 per gallon for the wine spirits which they might use or for neutral spirits which at times they used instead.

The effect of this statute was, first, that it gave to certain wine producers as defined in that law the privilege, as against all other producers of pure sweet wines, to have the wine spirits which they used in the fortification of their product at 3 cents a gallon when others were obliged to pay $1.10 per gallon. Further than that, it was a discrimination against all other users of wine spirits in that they were compelled to pay $1.10 per gallon. It seems to me that the proposition needs only to be stated to convince every fair-minded man that this was a gross discrimination, which ought not to be permitted in a country such as ours.

What was the reason for this? We have had a splendid delegation of gentlemen here who have said to us that they have come here representing the grape producers, the farmers on the mountain sides of California, and that they could not continue their vineyards unless they had this privilege.

I was interested in ascertaining who these farmers were and what their conditions were, and I find that the wine producers pay from $5 to $10 a ton for the grapes which the dear farmer produces; and this year I believe they are paying $12 a ton. In Ohio, in Missouri, and in the Eastern States the wineries are obliged to pay from $30 to $50 per ton for grapes that they produce upon their farms.

Now, what is the situation? In the year 1912 the tax remitted to these so-called farmers amounted to $6,954,534.29; that is to say, if they had paid $1.10 per gallon for the use of these wine spirits, instead of 3 cents a gallon, they would have paid to the Federal Government $6,954,534.29. But did the farmer get the benefit of this? On yesterday the Senate, upon my motion, passed a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish a list of the men who had the privilege of drawing wine spirits from bond and of using them at the rate of 3 cents a gallon. I find that there are just 107 persons in all these United States who had this privilege during the last fiscal year. In the State of California there were 82 who had this privilege, in New Jersey 1, in New York 22, in North Carolina 1, and in Virginia 1.

Bearing in mind the amount of the tax which was remitted, as I pointed out a moment ago, and dividing that by the number of 107 who have this privilege, we find that upon the average this Government has been giving to each of these wine producers $64,995.65 per year, assuming that there was the same amount used in each year.

Who are some of these farmers? Mr. President, I have here a copy of the report which has been sent to the Senate by the Secretary of the Treasury, which gives the names and addresses of each of these wine producers during the last five years, with the number of gallons which each one has used during all of these years.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. POMERENE. I will.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator know whether or not the gentlemen who came here from California in opposition to the Senator's tax proposition were genuine bona fide wine growers?

Mr. POMERENE. I am going to touch upon that in just a moment.

Mr. PENROSE. I am very much interested in that point and intended to bring it up myself.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask to have this table appended to my remarks as a part thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have culled from this report the names of all of those farmers who used more than 100,000 gallons of this brandy during the last year at 3 cents a gallon. The Woodbridge Vineyard of California last year used 171,277.1 gallons; the La Paloma Winery and Distilleries, 165,681.6 gallons; the California Wine Co., 574,141.8 gallons; George West & Son, 765,621.3 gallons; the Fresno Vineyard Co., 121,168.8 gallons; the Barton Vineyard Co., 138,198.3 gallons; A. Mattie, 177,595.2 gallons; the Italian Swiss Colony, 505,805.7 gallons; the Great Western Vineyard Co., 259,504.4 gallons; and the trustees of the Leland Stanford Junior University, 223,903.2 gallons. Another dear farmer was up here from the State of Virginia, and he used during last year 88,206.04 gallons.

All of this $6,954,534.29 has been distributed among 107 farmers, and the great delegation of farmers from California, fine, fat, sleek-looking fellows, shedding crocodile tears on behalf of the grape growers of California, come here and want this privilege continued. If the sensory and motor nerves of those gentlemen went to and from their brains instead of to and from their pocketbooks, they would come in here and ask that this money be voted directly to the farmers of California, to whom they pay a pittance of from five to ten dollars per ton for their product.

Mr. President, this privilege has been going on ever since the year 1890—23 years. When, a few weeks ago, the matter was first called to my attention I did not believe it. A brief was sent to me. I took it up with the Internal Revenue Bureau, and not until I heard from their own lips that this thing was going on under the Stars and Stripes did I believe it possible that such a condition could exist under the laws of this country.

Mr. President, perhaps if I had been content with that party "peace which passeth all understanding," I would have kept silent and let this matter pass by, but I believed that it was my duty to call it to the attention of Congress in order that during the coming session there might be some relief from this kind of legislative iniquity. When I make this statement I want to say, in all frankness, that I absolve the Senate conferees from the responsibility of striking this provision out of the bill. The responsibility must rest where it belongs.

The excuse is given that there are some pure-food provisions in section 254½ which ought not to be there. I grant that to be so, but I want to call the attention of Senators to the fact that the amendment as originally submitted provided for the repeal of this privilege alone, and was so framed that it could not interfere with any of the so-called pure-food provisions which it is alleged are contained in the original act of October 1, 1890. As to the other provisions, they could have been eliminated. The Government could have had the tax which I sought and, so far as the pure-food provisions are concerned, they would be, after the passage of that repealing provision, just where they have been all these years, with the Agricultural Department.

Mr. President, when this matter came up there were some criminations and recriminations as between the wine producers. The Californians said that those in my own State and elsewhere in the East were producing certain adulterated wines, and I shall assume for the sake of the argument that that is true; but I will say also, at the same time, so far as my own State is concerned, that these matters have been standardized. On the other hand, the eastern wine producers were saying that the Californians were producing an adulterated product.

I have before me a copy of the Wholesalers' and Retailers' Review of October, 1913, in which there is an article written by Mr. Charles A. Wetmore, of the State of California, who, I am told, has both a practical and a theoretical knowledge of the subject. He says upon this subject:

Let it be admitted without apology that all our California dry-wine makers who are competent use water to reduce their grape juice when it contains an excess of sugar. Of course they do, and they are right in doing it. Dr. Wiley or other pragmatists to the contrary ignored. Let it be admitted also that all our best wine makers also add tartaric acid, the natural acid of the grape, when it is deficient in the must. The addition of water and tartaric acid to correct natural deficiencies is common practice in California and should not be misrepresented.

In the West—I mean in California—their grapes have often too much sugar and too little acid; in the East, at times, they have too much acid and too little sugar, and the juice from both must be to a certain extent corrected. But it is not necessary to go into that feature of the proposition. I simply wanted to call the attention of the Senate to these facts, in the hope that in the near future there may be some corrective legislation, which will place all of the users of wine spirits or grape brandy upon an equal footing under the law and compel them to pay the tax they have escaped for so many years.

APPENDIX.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, October 2, 1913.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington.

SIR: In compliance with the resolution of the Senate adopted on the 1st instant, calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for a statement containing the names and addresses of manufacturers of sweet wine who use wine spirits or grape brandy in the fortification of sweet wine, together with the number of gallons of wine spirits or grape brandy so used during each of the five preceding fiscal years, also a statement showing the amount of revenue received during each of said years from the wine spirits or grape brandy so used, I have the honor to transmit herewith statements containing the information called for.

Respectfully,

W. G. McADOO, Secretary.

Statement showing quantity of grape brandy or wine spirits used in the fortification of sweet wines by the various wine makers in the United States during each of the fiscal years 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, and 1913.

District.	Year ending June 30—
	1909	1910	1911	1912	1913
DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.
Fruiturst Wine Co.	Gallons. 179.4	Gallons.	Gallons.	Gallons.	Gallons.
FIRST DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.
Cordilla Winery.					326.4
Da Rosa, J. L.					35,572.6
Nagawawa, K.					529.9
Sacramento Valley Winery.					6,604.4
Frasinetti, J.					726.3
Elk Grove Vineyard Association.					49,461.9
Peikovich, J.					1,791.8
Rogers, E. B.	29,914.1	41,715.1	37,654.8	25,327.0	20,637.3
Armbrust, H.	889.7	790.0	1,321.2	1,441.1	1,871.3
Roessler, F. M.	36,950.4	31,107.4	42,055.7	40,549.5	33,457.7
Pereria, J. M.	1,378.0	1,801.6	2,455.5	2,540.8	2,363.4
Woodbridge Vineyard.	48,404.9	82,264.7	212,999.7	177,330.5	171,277.1
Joyce, Lawrence.	814.9	1,258.2	1,848.6	1,729.6	1,796.0
Giovanni, F.		14,257.3	21,969.2	13,959.0	12,284.3
La Paloma Wineries and Distilleries.			96,338.4	127,910.7	165,681.6
Vieth, Wm. A.	35,045.0	49,718.9	51,405.8	89,651.4	36,061.9
Bradford Sons.					90,326.4
California Winery.					15,247.3
California Wine Co.	281,327.6	399,095.2	241,451.8	502,886.4	574,141.8
Geo. West & Son.	759,180.4	493,061.8	885,800.6	1,125,279.4	765,621.3
Fresno Vineyard Co.	81,700.0	112,730.2	73,289.5	106,243.4	121,168.8
Eisen Vineyard Co.			98,041.9	8,842.1	97,145.9
Granz, Herman.	26,974.3	24,982.9	38,439.7	33,124.7	14,205.5
Granz, Emil H.	22,849.8	58,185.6	38,273.6	11,070.2
Schell, H. R.		2,441.9	1,987.1		1,748.5
Barton Vineyard Co.	187,116.2	200,644.5	144,305.2	207,632.5	138,138.3
Mattie, A.	111,188.9	192,342.6	161,724.8	187,553.2	177,595.2
Italian Swiss Colony.	505,385.9	494,605.5	383,923.4	554,737.1	506,805.7
Ruschup, H. T. W.	13,206.8	25,927.4	15,637.6	11,727.9	15,073.4
Great Western Vineyard Co.	171,712.6	327,190.8	329,613.4	373,127.0	259,404.4
Las Palms Wineries & Distilleries.	33,376.7	157,505.5	187,800.1	96,074.3	76,375.7
Lodi Cooperative Winery Co.		256,626.6	289,814.1	307,100.1	63,910.9
San Gabriel Vineyard Co.	7,165.4
Vache, E., & Co.	18,622.7
Placer County Wine Co.					35,244.3
Kuchel, Geo. C.	1,401.7
Mesnage, L. C.	2,171.2
Ritter, J. G.	234.8
Etienne Bros.	21,196.9
Baker, J. S.	3,102.7
Golden Gate Fruit Co.	5,700.3
Daneri, E.	1,029.7
Sandoz & Guichan.	1,370.8
Cucamonga Winery.	87,445.8
Esplan, Pierre.	900.2
Stern, Alfred.	120,284.1
Southern California Wine Co.	16,384.9
Lafourcade, Jack.	3,045.8
Rust, Chas. Otto.	4,710.5
Baldwin Distillery.	2,847.3
Giovanni, Piuma.	4,087.9
Downey Vintage Co.	2,977.5
Sierra Madre Vintage Co.	59,579.8
Boega, Z. F.	1,452.6
Delphy, Jules J.	1,485.0
Randisi & Sons.	1,378.6
Demaitin, P., and Laughlin, A.	556.9
Engler, German.	203.4
Kans, John.	3,370.3
Giovanni, Gai.	4,806.6
West Glendale Wine Co.	13,853.4
Celano, Peter.	443.9
Artesia Vineyard Co.	24,496.1
Yung, Lanie.	429.8
Ardans, John.	214.9
Samuel, Paul.	130,553.6		77,007.0		1,622.3
Mazal, J. C.					481.6
Azevedo, M. J., & Co.					2,553.6
Welsch, A.	354.6	347.1	244.4	273.1	390.0
Kaufman, Marcus.		92,263.2
Fresno National Wine Co.	115,179.2	29,907.4		21,263.9
Fresno Mutual Wine Co.		20,653.1	23,200.5
Laid Vineyard Co.	2,651.9	3,474.5	3,714.2
Anderson, C. G.	1,723.8	4,047.6	3,553.1	4,424.1
Buhach Producing and Manufacturing Co.	16,954.4	22,236.2	14,090.1	25,391.6
Padista, E. P.		707.8
St. George Vineyard.	13,462.1	7,739.2		6,695.4
Lint, Franklin Peter.			1,363.9
Olson Winery Co.			15,622.7	14,310.7
Farmers' Mutual Winery Co.	11,350.8		15,863.5

Statement showing quantity of grape brandy or wine spirits used in the fortification of sweet wines, etc.—Continued.

District.	Year ending June 30—
	1909	1910	1911	1912	1913
FIRST DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA—continued.
Sumida, Hookchi.			2,740.4	3,076.0
Armonia Winery & Distillery Co.	31,804.8			55,141.5
Italian Vineyard Co.	119,430.6			25,700.3
Hughes, Jules.	1,687.8
Seinturier, Jean.	5,434.1
Krebs, Richard.	2,361.0
McClure, John.	21,954.8
Jannegui, Pierre.	1,438.5
Brechtel, Henry.	346.5
Used and not included in the above.	75,371.4	140,913.4	1,940.0	98,016.2	0.5
FOURTH DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.
Azevedo, M. J., & Co.	10,589.9	19,733.6	8,806.7	8,821.1	(1)
Bradford & Sons, J. B.	43,012.8	68,565.7	85,899.3	89,829.4
California Winery.	103,709.3	122,181.3	141,255.3	75,209.4
Cordelia Winery.	36,120.8	31,722.2	51,509.7	28,170.4
California Wine Association	52,042.9	95,431.1	45,384.1	62,768.4
Da Rosa, J. L.	36,907.3	57,352.1	46,051.4	53,637.2
Fasnetti, James.	973.0	768.7	265.9	1,795.4
Gundlach, Charles.	3,179.6
Italian Swiss colony.
Korbal & Bros., F.	2,206.6			581.1
Mangels, Louis.	508.4		509.9
Mazel, John C.	1,125.0		2,056.6
Moulton Hill Vineyard Co.	2,703.5
Nagasawa, K.	4,022.6	3,236.3	4,822.9	5,581.8
Pioneer Winery.	8,887.9
Placer County Winery Co.	24,587.8	74,650.2	70,627.3	74,146.9
Red Bank Wine Co.	635.0
Sink, W. D.	713.4	650.1	2,677.7
Silver, Joseph.	573.6	1,548.9	630.6	734.7
Board of Trustees, Leland Stanford University.	120,620.2	160,488.6	112,302.9	223,963.2
Elk Grove Vineyard Association.		60,043.8	70,743.4	82,680.8
de Latour, G.			1,757.4	1,781.9
Kostuma, Louis.			371.0
Pethovich, John.			277.3
Sacramento Valley Winery.			30,775.4	37,580.4
Zimini Bros.			147.4
Silva Bros.				3,734.2
Used and not included in the above.				18,000.0
SIXTH DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.²
Cucamonga Vintage Co.		55,669.9	95,983.0	181,349.7	132,673.3
Italian Vineyard Co.		145,800.3	160,473.6	229,283.6	156,139.6
Baldwin Distilling Co.		4,329.9	5,081.8	3,288.8
Giovanni Pienma.		3,652.5		2,943.9	2,506.2
Serra Madre Vintage Co.		57,791.7	64,364.4	65,513.0	45,289.8
Timin J. F. Boege.		2,483.4
Delpy, J. J.		1,817.4	2,366.9
San Gabriel Vineyard.		11,292.0	16,627.4	13,304.3	4,084.1
Vacheco, E.		17,812.9	19,674.3	24,207.0	17,028.7
Kuehn, Geo.		2,115.9	2,097.5	2,120.9	3,288.1
Eloimne Bros.		23,120.8	21,061.8	29,016.9	5,692.6
Baker, J. S.		3,165.7	2,640.8	2,632.1
Saren, E.		1,379.2
Sandoz & Ginechon.		1,485.4	2,113.6
Cucamonga Winery.		81,383.8	48,732.8	114,715.6	61,380.9
Esplan, P.		507.6		506.6
Stern & Son, Chas.		160,703.3	91,499.5	201,835.5	257,227.4
Southern California Wine Co.		13,859.5	11,540.0	8,444.3	9,313.6
Lafourcade, J. B.		1,680.5		1,717.6	1,513.6
Rust, C. O.		3,261.3	5,740.9	1,404.8	1,447.7
Gai, G.		6,383.1	6,604.1	10,571.3	5,360.2
Hart, J.		444.4	352.6	405.3	607.9
West Glendale Wine Co.		7,903.2	21,950.3	23,231.3	6,642.5
Caleno, P.		422.4
Artesia Vineyard Co.		18,526.1	31,042.8	16,749.3	1,266.2
Young, Louie.		1,266.2
Hughes, J. J.		1,229.1
Pellissier, A.		4,456.3	2,976.2	7,641.0	6,371.8
McClure, John.		23,781.5	27,603.2	21,009.6	17,753.6
Brechtel, H.		413.3	430.8	2,506.9	1,082.9
Bandisi & Sons.		930.1		1,423.8	386.8
Nebbia, G.		1,933.5
Davin, E.			1,111.7	5,553.4
Downey Vintage Co.			5,902.1		1,872.9
Mission Vineyard.			69,289.9	123,849.7
Mesnager, L. C.			3,820.4
Golden Gate Fruit Co.			1,737.6
Doueri, E.			1,368.8	1,422.5	685.2
Ardaus, J.			560.6
Krebs, R.			1,599.6
Jamazy, P.			1,628.7
Garret & Co.					75,780.8
Meyer, H. E.				717.1	541.8
Smith, O.					4,854.0
Bidart, J.					267.9
Ritter, J. G.				737.6

¹ Merged with first California.

² Constituted a collection district July 1, 1903.

Statement showing quantity of grape brandy or wine spirits used in the fortification of sweet wines, etc.—Continued.

District.	Year ending June 30—
	1909	1910	1911	1912	1913
HAWAII.
Hauptakua Wine & Liquor Co. (Ltd.).	4,704.5	7,569.6	8,746.1	9,512.6
Jose Gomes Serrao.		644.4	1,444.1	7,086.3	7,776.3
TWENTY-EIGHTH DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.
Irondequoit Wine Co.	9,701.5	10,019.2	12,592.1	8,675.8	8,030.4
Taylor Wine Co.	713.9	920.6	975.0	1,527.6	2,665.2
Hammondsport Wine Co.	9,219.2	19,434.2	704.2	4,904.3	11,737.6
Le Roy McCorn.	1,392.0	1,232.9	1,627.2	1,954.8	2,751.9
Germania Wine Cellars.	10,696.8	11,820.8	14,340.6	13,575.9	10,823.4
Pultney Wine Cellars.					549.8
Pultney Vintage Co.	182.8	180.6	181.2	276.9	276.9
Hammondsport Vintage Co.	6,210.5	6,435.2	4,991.2	6,609.9	7,611.4
Fee Bros.	5,949.8	6,161.9	5,262.2	4,592.4	4,125.4
J. S. Hubbs.	10,726.9	10,063.4	5,880.1		20,630.0
E. J. Mulvaney.					1,781.8
Lake View Wine Co.	2,757.3	4,547.4	6,221.1	7,155.4	10,626.8
D. H. Maxfield.	9,098.4	9,145.1	14,638.2	6,806.1	14,295.5
Vine City Wine Cellars.					2,923.3
Empire State Wine Co.	8,966.5	11,318.1	8,779.8	6,160.9	8,648.0
Frudell Wine Co.	2,237.6	2,230.6		1,880.5	555.6
Pleasant Valley Wine Co.	16,029.8	9,034.3	17,766.6	36,141.7	13,345.3
Urbana Wine Co.	14,403.3	14,909.9	15,343.3	19,149.4	19,428.7
J. J. Widner.	3,656.6	9,293.6	12,626.8	9,443.2	9,429.1
Henry Card & Co.	889.4	917.1	912.3	2,654.7	3,721.7
John Cushing.	2,718.9	2,637.5	3,407.1	3,211.1
E. G. Ryckman Wine Co.	4,640.2	1,899.7		6,394.8
Lake Ontario Wine Co.	1,643.0	713.4
Lake Keuka Vintage Co.	3,635.3	3,721.1
J. S. Foster.		271.9
Francis M. Acker.		364.2
M. L. Taylor & Son.	203.6	428.0	137.5	230.1
Antonio April.		383.8
Rutonio D'Angelo.		252.0
Wm. N. Wise.		969.0	6,167.4
Dubelbeis Wine Co.	1,570.1		561.2
Geo. Graff.	1,370.6			1,341.4
Rheims Wine & Vineyard Co.	455.4
Raymond Raymond.			226.3	735.9
FIRST DISTRICT OF NEW JERSEY.
Dewey & Sons.		1,632.0	459.0	1,329.6	977.9
FOURTH DISTRICT OF NORTH CAROLINA.
Sol Bear & Son.	1,354.9	4,570.1	5,834.4		17,115.8
SECOND DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA.
Garrett & Co.		31,924.9			88,206.4

The amount of revenue (3 cents per gallon) so far derived from the spirits so used is as follows:

During the fiscal year—

1909.	$115,876.37
1910.	145,697.25
1911.	152,389.37
1912.	189,292.11
1913.	148,056.36
Total.	751,311.40

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.
The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hughes	O'Gorman	Smith, Ariz.
Bacon	James	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Johnson	Penrose	Smith, Md.
Borah	Jones	Perkins	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	Kern	Pittman	Smith, S. C.
Bristow	La Follette	Pointexter	Swanson
Bryan	Lane	Pomeroy	Thomas
Burton	Lea	Ransdell	Thompson
Chamberlain	Lewis	Reed	Thornton
Chilton	McLean	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Clarke, Ark.	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	Walsh
Cole	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Weeks
Gronna	Nelson	Shields	Williams
Hitchcock	Newlands	Shively
Hollis	Norris	Simmons

Mr. REED. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. STONE]. He is paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD a statement and brief on behalf of the wine growers of California.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF MR. M. F. TARPEY, OF FRESNO, CAL.

Mr. TARPEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the gentleman who presented the case on the part of the eastern wine growers yesterday told you whom he represented, etc. I come here in representation of the grape growers in California in distinction from the wine makers. I live in the central part of the State of California and in the center of the sweet-wine-growing district of that State. I listened with some satisfaction to the eulogies the gentleman paid to the indigenous grape of the country, the wild grape of the United States, and the aspersions which it more or less conveyed of that vagrant grape from Europe which we have succeeded in domesticating in California, and which has been the admitted wine-producing grape of the world for centuries. I do not believe there is any idea lingering in the minds of the gentlemen of this committee that California has had any advantage over any other portion of the United States in relation to the wine bills of the past, with the exception of the advantage that God gave it in climate, soil, latitude, etc.

When the wine bill of 1890 was passed it was the first pure-food enactment of this Government. The pure-food enactments have taken the attention of the people of the United States, and I doubt to-day if the gentlemen of this committee, or any lawmakers in this country, are disposed to contravene the laws that have already been passed, but, on the contrary, they are disposed to make more specific and impose more drastic provisions upon persons who make what we call spurious articles of food.

Senator SMITH. Does the law require them to be labeled to show that they are artificially made and spurious?

Mr. TARPEY. The law of 1890 does not, but I hold in my hand a decision rendered by Dr. Wiley, F. L. Dunlap, and George B. McCabe, of the Board of Food and Drug Inspection, which was approved by Mr. W. M. Hays, Acting Secretary of Agriculture. It is dated Washington, D. C., August 21, 1909, and is entitled "Food Inspection Decision 109. The Labeling of Wines."

(The decision referred to reads as follows:)

"On June 30, 1909, a hearing was held before the Secretary of Agriculture and the Board of Food and Drug Inspection on the labeling of Ohio and Missouri wines. After giving full consideration to the data submitted, the board is of the opinion that the term 'wine' without modification is an appropriate name solely for the product made from the normal alcoholic fermentation of the juice of sound ripe grapes, without addition or abstraction, either prior or subsequent to fermentation, except as such may occur in the usual cellar treatment for clarifying and aging. The addition of water or sugar, or both, to the must prior to fermentation is considered improper, and a product so treated should not be called 'wine' without further characterizing it. A fermented beverage prepared from grape must by addition of sugar would properly be called a 'sugar wine,' or the product may be labeled in such a fashion as to clearly indicate that it is not made from the untreated grape must, but with the addition of sugar. The consumer is, under the food and drugs act, entitled to know the character of the product he buys."

Senator SMITH. You do not contend that the addition of water and sugar makes it a drug wine?

Mr. TARPEY. We say that it is not entitled to the name of wine as expressed in the rulings of the Department of Agriculture; that it ought to be specified what kind of wine it is.

Senator SMITH. Have they not made wines that they put real drugs in?

Mr. TARPEY. Yes; all kinds of wines have been made. We of California who are grape growers are particularly interested in having wine made from grapes. Our people have been following that industry for years. The gentleman who previously spoke said that they have been 50 or 60 years engaged in that enterprise. It is only necessary to recall to the minds of you gentlemen that since the time of the advent of the missionaries, 200 years ago, they have been growing grapes in California. We have the wild grape in California as well as they have in this part of the country, and the missionaries found, before our time, that good wine could not be made from it. They sent abroad, and went to tremendous labor in time and great expense, and eventually they found grapevines that were proper for producing sound wine in California. They domesticated those vines in California, and they have been there from that day to this. We do not pretend to make any use of the wild grapes for wine making.

The decision to which I previously referred continues as follows:

"Evidence was offered on the preparation of 'wine' from the marc. In these cases it appeared customary to add both water and sugar to the marc and sometimes to use saccharin, coloring matter, preservatives, etc., to make a salable article."

"In the opinion of the board no beverage can be made from the marc of grapes which is entitled to be called 'wine,' however further characterized, unless it be by the word 'imitation.' The words 'pomace wine' are not satisfactory, since the product is not a wine in any sense, but only an 'imitation wine,' and should be so labeled."

Senator SMITH. Was not that order or decision set aside by another order that allowed them to be simply called Ohio wines and Missouri wines?

Mr. TARPEY. In what is known as the circular of the three Secretaries—the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Secretary of the Treasury—a ruling was made which we hold and contend was absolutely in contravention of the pure-food act, and we are going to take up that matter before the department here before we leave and request a rehearing, with the expectation of having a decision that will comply with the pure-food regulations as they are written into the statute.

I do not think that we of California have any excuse to make to the gentlemen of the East because we produce a better grade than they do. As Senator Smith very justly said yesterday when Mr. Lannen was speaking, that was a natural, God-given benefit, which you do not want to take away from them, do you? And I thought it was extremely pertinent and to the point. Our method of making wine differs somewhat from theirs, as I will explain to you as briefly as possible. They tell you that their grapes in the first instance do not contain sufficient sugar to enable them to make any wine, dry or sweet, and when they crush their grapes, in order to ferment them at all, they are obliged to add sugar immediately to the must. That is No. 1. Now, you gentlemen will take into consideration that every unit of sugar means a half unit of alcohol, and every unit of sugar they use means a half unit of alcohol they are using, and they have been paying no tax upon it. They then ferment down the solution of grape juice and sugar.

In his opening statement yesterday the gentleman from Chicago stated—I am going to use his language, because I can not as graphically describe it as he did himself—"In order to explain the amendment, which we suggest to the committee, to the law in question, I want to say that wines to suit the American trade can not be too sour. They can not, in fact, be too sour anywhere." Now, they say, "Our wines, even after the introduction of the sugar, are too high in acid, and we must add water in order to reduce the acid contents," and so they then add water.

Senator HUGHES. He meant they must not be too sour, not that they could not be too sour. The impression that he made on me was that the wine must not be too sour.

Mr. TARPEY. Of course it must not be too sour. It can not be too sour, or it will not be potable.

Senator HUGHES. I did not understand the gentleman to state that the wine could not be too sour. He said that it must not be too sour or it would not suit the trade.

Mr. TARPEY. Perhaps I took the wrong view of it. In any event, they always have the sugar barrel at one side of the vat, and they have the hose at the other side of the vat.

Senator SMITH. That does not make an impure wine. It does not make a wine that hurts the system if you drink it. It may not make as good a wine as you make, but it is not anything that the law ought to stop if the people like part water, part sugar, and part grape juice.

Mr. TARPEY. Dr. Wiley has expressed himself upon that subject, and I presume he receives credit from the people of America for his talents and capacity to decide such questions as that, and he holds the view that they are unwholesome and injurious.

The CHAIRMAN. That putting water in the wine makes it unwholesome?

Mr. TARPEY. Yes, sir; and injurious.

Senator SMITH. Some people think if you do not have anything but the water and the sugar in it, it would be more wholesome.

Mr. TARPEY. In any event, they now have that so-called wine, as I have just described it, and they are fermenting it. By the way, they get this alcohol into the wine through that sugar. I want to impress that upon you gentlemen. The manner in which that alcohol is in that wine after it is fermented is through the sugar that they have put in it having undergone fermentation. The sugar thus is converted into alcohol, and they say we now have a dry wine with 13 per cent of alcohol. We have reached that stage and then there is a landing. Then they say they desire to turn that dry wine into sweet wine, and in order to turn it into sweet wine they again use further sugar to bring it up to a condition which will meet the taste of the consumer as to sweetness.

The CHAIRMAN. Before that sugar was put in, how much alcohol was there in the grapes?

Mr. TARPEY. If the gentlemen from Ohio will tell us what their grape contains in saccharine when they crush it, we can immediately determine that. I think their grapes contain 14 per cent sugar at the time of crushing, do they not, gentlemen?

(Addressing the gentlemen from Ohio; there was no reply.)

Mr. TARPEY. I think we are entitled to an answer.

Mr. LANNEN. Twenty per cent; that is the maximum.

Mr. TARPEY. Here they say 20 per cent. When they are talking to us they say about 12 per cent, and that they require from 20 to 40 per cent more sugar for the purpose of amelioration to provide for the lack of sugar in their grapes.

Senator HUGHES. Is the sugar content the only thing that contains alcohol?

Mr. TARPEY. Yes, sir. Supposing they had 20 per cent sugar in the grapes, they could produce at the outside but 10 per cent alcohol by fermentation, so at the very lowest estimate—and I think the gentlemen are giving themselves fully as good a reputation for their grapes as they can—when they say 20 per cent, I have very serious doubt; but that does not concern any of us here at present. They have certainly added to it at the very least 3 per cent alcohol on which they have been paying no tax. We think they have been adding 5 to 7 per cent alcohol, but they have certainly added 3 per cent, according to their own admission.

The CHAIRMAN. By the use of sugar?

Mr. TARPEY. By the use of sugar. They are paying no tax upon that. As I said before, we are at the landing, and we desire to change this dry wine—

The CHAIRMAN. But you would not then contend that alcohol was subject to any tax under any law in the world?

Mr. TARPEY. We are not permitted to put one pound of sugar in ours unless we turn it into a commercial product and pay a tax.

Senator SMITH. Any act that we adopt with reference to sugar would apply to you just as much as it would to them, and you would have the same right as to sugar and water that they would have, but you do not need as much. You have a grape that does not require anything like as much sugar.

Mr. TARPEY. I do not know whether we quite understand it alike. For instance, if we put sugar or water into our wines through the hose, or in any other way—any kind of sugar—we can use it only for distilling purposes; for the purpose of making wine. When we add water to our grape juice for further fermentation—we never to my knowledge add sugar—the material produced therefrom can only be used for distillation. The Government official is standing there. He is in charge all the time. We have not had a word with the Government officials in years while this matter has been under Government control, and while it is under Government control we have no annoyance or bother whatever. Everybody is made to respect the laws, and that is what we desire. As grape growers we do not want any man conducting a winery anywhere to be able to do things outside of that law, because if he does he disturbs the whole foundation of the business.

They say that they then take that wine and sweeten it. They sweeten it up to so much per cent, whatever per cent it is, and they want now to make this 13 per cent of dry wine into sweet wine. They want to add additional sugar enough to make that sweet wine so that it will become palatable and the people can use it. When they do that—that is, again add sugar—they are again adding brandy, and every pound of sugar that is used in making wine should just as well pay a brandy tax as every unit of brandy, because every unit of sugar will make a half unit of brandy, and sugar ought to pay accordingly.

Senator SMITH. It is your contention that the alcohol in the wine is produced artificially by the use of outside products?

Mr. TARPEY. Yes, sir. They say that we of California have an advantage. The chairman of the committee very properly said yesterday that the committee could not make laws to meet the demands of the people east of the Rocky Mountains alone; that the committee is making laws for the Nation; that the laws under which we are all now working were made for the Nation.

Senator SMITH. But in making them we ought to make them for the whole country?

Mr. TARPEY. Yes, sir.

Senator THOMAS. You are stating that as a theory. In the past it has often been observed as much in the breach as in the observance.

Mr. TARPEY. I am endeavoring to confine myself to the fundamentals, as nearly as I can. We of California have had our hardships. I assure you. I was astounded yesterday when the gentleman told you that their so-called wines sold for 60 cents to $1 a gallon. Their wine—and I have a tremendous question mark after that word "wine"—and we are selling our pure product, and have been distributing it to the people of America, pure and from the juice of the grape, at less than 30 cents a gallon, including every dollar's worth of wine that was sold in bottles. Our bulk wines have been selling certainly for not above 20 cents a gallon, and then to compete we have to pay freight of 7½ cents per gallon to this part of the country.

I believe that the pure-food requirement is a grave charge upon the Government; that it is the duty of the Government to see that the housewife or laboring man or wage earner gets a dollar's worth of honest goods in weight, in quality, and in purity for every dollar he expends for food. Who has any opportunity of testing the foods that he buys? Why, it is only through the chemistry department of this Government that we are able to reach any idea of what is being done. The health of the citizen is the wealth of the Nation, and while the Nation guards its money with the most zealous care, while there is the most tremendous penalty for counterfeiting that money, and while there is also a tremendous penalty for a man getting another man's property by forgery, why is it not equally reprehensible for a man to get the people's money under false pretense that he is selling an article that is not fit, or at least is not honest, is not what it is represented to be? I stand upon the result of the inquiry and study made by the gentlemen of the pure-food bureau, and we of California beg you to adhere as closely as possible to the pure-food laws, because they are the greatest safeguard of both our health and our wealth.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Tarpey, I am afraid that you are getting off a little on lines that are not quite pertinent to the purposes of this inquiry. We want to get at facts.

Originally, as I understand it—and if I am not correct I wish you would correct me—this law with reference to the use of brandy wines for fortification purposes allowed any producer of sweet wine to use this brandy for purposes of fortification without paying tax, did it not?

Mr. TARPEY. Yes, sir; it did and it does.

The CHAIRMAN. Then it was changed so as to require the distillery to be at the vineyard, was it not?

Mr. TARPEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you tell me who did that and what it was done for? Originally anybody producing sweet wines in this country was permitted to use this brandy wine to fortify them without paying a tax; then somebody came here and got that law amended so that nobody could use that brandy wine for fortifying sweet wines unless the distillery was at the vineyard.

Mr. TARPEY. No; that is not exactly the law. It said only vineyardists.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, who got that changed and what was the purpose of that change?

Mr. TARPEY. I do not know who got the change, but the purpose is very plain. We were struggling against what we understand and call and what is generally known as the "brick vineyard."

Mr. WETMORE. The gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Ohio know that they made misstatements when they said that these eastern people could not legally use this California brandy free of tax.

Senator SMITH. I make the point that no witness has a right to say that another knows he made a mistake. He can correct the statement and give us the facts, and we will be glad to have them. I would not allow them to say, Mr. Wetmore, that you had intentionally made a mistake.

Mr. WETMORE. I stand corrected. I would like to ask Mr. Hil-dreth this question: If D. H. Maxfield, of Naples, N. Y., did not withdraw brandy directly from special bonded warehouse No. 3, in the first district of California, and ship it to Naples, N. Y., and fortify wine with it, free of tax, except for the charge of 3 cents a gallon; also if approximately 1,000 barrels of high-proof California grape brandy were not shipped to special bonded warehouse No. 2, at Rhelmis, in the twenty-eighth district of New York, and withdrawn from there by wine makers of New York State and used in the fortification of wine, free of tax, except for the charge of 3 cents?

Mr. TARPEY. You gentlemen of the wine side of the matter have had your time for argument, and if you will be kind enough to allow me, a poor grape grower, to finish my statement, I would appreciate it.

The chairman asked the question as to why the law was changed. The reason was that they were making wine, though not from grapes, in what we call the "brick vineyard." That was the vineyard that those gentlemen established in the cities; brick vineyards, where they did not require any grapes.

A formula of the Ohio wine-makers' methods of making wine can be found filed in the office of the internal-revenue department here. The formula was brought out through a lawsuit and is unquestioned. The formula is as follows:

They first take a mass of the old grape skins, resulting from repeated fermentations and containing nothing but the skin of the grape, which they press into a cake to prevent it entirely rotting, and which they denominate as a cheese; and they dump 450 pounds of that into a vat and then throw in 1,250 pounds of sugar and then add 650 gallons of water, and that mass they ferment down, and the resultant liquid they dignify with the name of "wine." This process they continued indefinitely, and it was because of this process and this "brick vineyard" that it became necessary to have the Congress of the United States make that alteration in the law, because the law was originally made to protect the producer of grapes.

Senator SMITH. You add the term "vineyard" as a matter of sarcasm; it is not a vineyard at all?

Mr. TARPEY. Certainly not; they had a brick house, and they made more wine in a brick house than we could raise in vineyards extending as far as the eye could reach.

I am here endeavoring to convince you gentlemen that it is the industry of the tiller of the soil that should be entitled to protection before all the wine manufacturers in the world. We have introduced immigration to California from all over the world. Small families have settled there. They have small holdings of land. They have a small patch on which they raise a few chickens and support a cow, and the balance of the land is devoted to vine culture, which lands are cultivated intensively. They are settlers located there, and they are good American citizens, raising families, and enriching the Commonwealth, and they are entitled to the first consideration of this body before any "brick vineyard" institution.

Senator SMITH. What I would like to hear from you is whether or not it would be proper for us to tax all kinds of artificial brandy that goes into wine? That is the real question.

Mr. TARPEY. We think so. We think all artificial brandy should be taxed and all artificial food of every character should be taxed.

Senator SMITH. Why is not wine brandy an artificial stimulant just as well as any other alcohol that goes into wine?

Mr. TARPEY. Wine brandy is a natural stimulant; and, as I have the greatest respect for the discernment and wisdom of the gentlemen of this committee, I believe that when they finally determine this matter, if they impose any tax at all on natural brandy, it will be such a moderate tax as will bring the Government a revenue, which this proposed tax most certainly will not bring, and at the same time will not wipe out the grape-growing industry. I have convincing hope and faith that you gentlemen will do that.

Senator THOMAS. I assumed, perhaps erroneously, that you gentlemen were opposing that part of the paragraph that proposed to repeal the act of 1890?

Mr. TARPEY. We are most certainly opposing it; but as I am admonished that my time has elapsed, Mr. Bell will answer that. We of California, I think, without any difference of opinion whatever, favor the law of 1890.

[By permission of the committee, Monday, August 18.]

When my remarks were brought to an end on Saturday by the rising of the committee, I was endeavoring to show how the Ohioans made their wine, and I will now resume that part of my argument.

From the opening statement of Mr. Lannen, representative of the eastern wine makers, I extract the following language:

"The way we deal with this matter (of making wines) in this country is this: When we take our grape juice, we test it to see how much acid it has when it comes in in the fall from the farmer. After ascertaining the amount of acid that there is there, we add enough water to cut that acid down to about five parts in a thousand * * * and then add enough sugar to bring the alcohol contents up to about 13 per cent."

From this it plainly appears that their grapes are unfitted to make wine at all, and the amount of water they add to cut the acid and the amount of sugar they add to produce 13 per cent of alcohol they do not disclose; but it is plainly evident that without the addition of the water and the sugar they could not make any of their so-called wine.

It requires no argument to show that if a sugar barrel and a hose may be employed in making wine, the necessity for growing grapes becomes a nonessential, or at least inconsequential as to the quantity of grapes produced, for with a small amount of grapes, by the addition of water and sugar, the juice of a few grapes may be stretched to such an extent that any attempted competition with such a "brick vineyard" by the farmers of the country who produce grapes would become and be a ghastly joke.

The original sweet-wine bill of 1890—the first pure-food enactment of the Government—was passed in the interests of the farmer, the producer of grapes, and the grape farmer to-day bears the same relation to the "brick-vineyard" producer as does the honest butter producer to the oleomargarine manufacturer, and it was only after lengthy consideration by Congress and repeated rehearings comprehending a close fundamental study of the matter that the oleomargarine producers were brought within the scope of the law and their product placed under the supervision of the Internal Revenue Department.

The cases of the grape growers and the butter producers are analogous, and even aside from the consideration of the moral aspect of the subject or the necessity for supervision over spurious and unhealthful products, the tiller of the soil should be and, I believe, is first in consideration of the lawmakers of the country. The cry is "back to the land," but the tendency of modern life is to center in cities, and to induce people to enter into the production of raw products is the problem of the day and surely that problem can not be advanced or benefited by enabling spurious products to be produced by sophistication and spurious manufacture where the raw product, healthful and honest, may be raised from the land.

As to the argument advanced by Mr. Lannen upon behalf of his clients that they can not procure grape brandy for the fortification of their wines, refraining from using a harsher term, I state that that is not a fact. The fact is that the California grape grower and distiller has always made all of the pure grape brandy necessary to fortify all the pure sweet wine of the East, whenever the same was ordered from or their requirements made known to the California distiller. Every year pure grape brandy is made in California for eastern customers, who receive the same in bond, and if, under the law, they are making really pure wines, they may use that brandy to fortify their wines without the payment of any other tax than the 3 cents per gallon which the Government exacts to repay it for supervision, and which the California grape grower and distiller is obliged to pay equally with everybody else.

The records of the Internal Revenue Department will prove the truth of this statement, as will the records of two internal-revenue bonded warehouses in New York, the internal-revenue bonded warehouse at Rhelmis, N. Y., Sibley's internal-revenue bonded warehouse in Chicago, and others; and as a further proof of the fact I state that I myself, through the company of which I am president, the La Paloma Winery & Distillery, sold to Garrett & Co., of Norfolk, Va., in 1912, 500 barrels of pure California grape brandy, containing some 46,000 or 47,000 gallons, and that the same was shipped to destination in bond, and that it is assumed the same was used in the fortification of wine, and that if the wine to be fortified thereby was pure sweet wine as denominated in the statute, all of the said brandy was used without the payment of any other tax than the 3 cents per gallon which we of California, as well as everybody else, have to pay.

Respecting the clause in the Pomerene bill now before this committee permitting the use of pure neutral alcohol, I state positively that if permission be granted to use such spirits no pure grape brandy will be made, because pure neutral alcohol can be made so much more cheaply from a multitude of other things much less costly than grapes; for instance, can be made from the cannery refuse, from the sugarhouse refuse, from the refuse of pineapples from the Sandwich Islands, of which a large, if not unlimited, quantity may be landed upon the Pacific coast at a very low cost, and even from sawdust and shavings, for, as you know, the distillation of wood alcohol has been so advanced that latterly potable alcohol, acceptable as such to the pure food department of the Government, has been made from refuse wood products, sawdust, shavings, slabs, etc., and that there already are in the country several factories producing that product commercially.

Therefore, the result of the adoption of that clause in the bill would be to induce all wine makers to use that character of pure neutral alcohol, which can be produced for some 6 to 8 cents per proof gallon, as against about 40 cents per proof gallon, the cost of pure brandy distilled from grapes in the place where grapes are most cheaply produced, namely, California.

I therefore submit that it would be a misfortune to adopt those words allowing the use of "pure neutral alcohol" in the bill, as the result would be to induce everybody to make spurious wines.

So there may be no misunderstanding of the term "proof gallon" as adopted by the Government, permit me to state that according to Government standards absolute alcohol is 200° proof, and that the Government's "proof gallon" is alcohol of 100° proof, and therefore the Government gallon of proof alcohol or spirits is 50 per cent alcohol and 50 per cent water. Sugar produces one-half a unit of absolute alcohol for every whole unit of sugar, and therefore, according to Government standards of one-half alcohol and one-half water, every pound of sugar will produce 1 pound of 100° proof alcohol, and therefore every pound of sugar used in the manufacture of so-called wines produces 1 pound of proof alcohol and should pay the same tax as brandy or spirits of the same proof.

Upon the revenue phase of the matter I desire to state that the revenue of $1.10 per proof gallon proposed to be taxed upon the user of pure grape brandy, and expected to produce a revenue of $5,000,000 to $7,000,000 annually to the Government, would prove destructive of the grape industry of California and would not—and upon this point I am positive, absolutely so—produce the revenue expected, nor any material revenue, because, first, the grower of grapes and the manufacturer of wines therefrom could not pay that revenue; they could not raise the money in any way, for the sum would be so out of proportion to the value of their vineyards and their wineries as to make the borrowing of money impossible. As an example, I will state that, for instance, a man paid, under the 3-cent tax under which we have been operating, $5,000. Under the Pomerene bill he would be obliged to pay $185,000, which would be several times the total value of his vineyard and his winery and all of its belongings. Furthermore, the banks and monetary institutions would not loan money on wine because of its unstable character as a commodity, as they do not know what day local or State or national laws may be passed declaring that product either as contraband or not constituting property. The instance above cited of the $5,000 previous tax and $185,000 proposed tax operates in ratio up and down to the few large producers and the multitude of small producers, and the effect is the same upon all in ratio to their holdings and productions.

Second, the imposition of that $1.10 tax would impel all producers to seek every known and ascertainable means of producing wines without the addition of grape brandy, and those methods would be adopted by all producers and would tend to absolutely wipe out the production of really pure wine as it is made in California to-day.

The California representative of the grape and wine industry of California now in Washington prepared a brief upon this whole subject matter, which I now take pleasure in filing with this statement as an elucidation of the subject, and I hope that brief will receive the serious consideration of the gentlemen of this committee.

The modification of the sweet-wine law of 1890, that was mentioned during my appearance before you on Saturday last and which is known as "The Three Secretaries' Decision," was an administrative repeal of a certain extremely important section of the pure-food law, and was promulgated without the knowledge of any of our people and presumably without the knowledge of the people concerned in pure-food regulations. It is regrettable that administrative departments should take upon themselves legislative or legal interpretation of statute requirements, and therefore, as I stated on Saturday last, that "Three Secretaries' promulgation will be formally taken up with the Secretaries of the three departments which issued it under a former administration for the purpose of having it recalled and permitting the statute law to obtain in its pristine purity.

I thank you, gentlemen, for the kind attention which has been given and the courtesies extended to us during the present hearing, and beg to announce that we shall be very glad indeed to be of any further service to the committee that we may be able to render.

PROTEST AND BRIEF OF THE GRAPE GROWERS AND WINE MAKERS OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA AGAINST PROPOSED TAX UPON GRAPE SPIRITS USED IN FORTIFYING PURE SWEET WINES, AS CONTAINED IN SENATE COMMITTEE AMENDMENT (SEC. 2541) TO PENDING TARIFF BILL.

THE GRAPE INDUSTRY OF CALIFORNIA.

	Acres.
Wine grapes exclusively.....	168,500
Raisin grapes.....	110,500
Table grapes.....	61,000
Total.....	340,000

About one-third of the raisin and table grapes go to the wineries and distilleries. This affords a market to the growers of raisin and table grapes for their by-products, the pure grape brandies obtained therefrom being afterwards used in the fortification of pure sweet wines. The average vineyard contains less than 25 acres.

	Gallons.
Pure dry wines.....	24,000,000
Pure sweet wines.....	17,797,718
Pure commercial grape brandy.....	1,700,000
Total.....	43,497,718

Amount grape brandy used in making pure sweet wines, 4,648,842 gallons.

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN DRY AND SWEET WINES.

Pure dry wines are made by allowing all of the sugar in the pure grape juice to ferment into alcohol, 2 degrees of sugar making 1 degree of alcohol.

Pure sweet wines are made by arresting the fermentation through the addition of pure grape brandy, which acts also as a preservative. No pure sweet wine can be made any other way, for the simple reason that pure sweet wine contains nothing but the pure juice of the grape.

Total investment in vineyards and wineries.....	$150,000,000
Number of families engaged in grape growing.....	15,000
Cost of producing 1 acre bearing vines.....	$300
Total production sweet wines, 1912:
United States.....	gallons..... 18,547,718
California.....	do..... 17,797,718
Produced outside of California, 1912.....	do..... 750,000
Production pure sweet wines in California, 1890.....	do..... 1,083,274
Production pure sweet wines in California, 1912.....	do..... 17,797,718
Increase under operation 1890 sweet-wine law.....	do..... 16,714,444

This tremendous increase in the production of pure sweet wines in California was due to the 1890 law permitting the use of pure grape spirits free; since 1906 a payment of 3 cents per proof gallon has been paid on the brandy so used to reimburse the Government for the cost of supervision in the making of pure sweet wine.

THIS 3-CENT CHARGE HAS NEVER BEEN REGARDED AS A TAX.

Under the provisions of the act of 1890 these pure sweet wines can not contain more than 24 per cent alcohol, which is the dividing line between wines and spirits, according to our tariff laws, as well as the act of 1890. It logically follows that inasmuch as these pure sweet wines can not be classified as spirits, the wine maker is not enjoying any special privilege, but to the contrary, he is working in harmony with the wise governmental policy that encourages the cultivation of the soil in small holdings and the production of a pure food product. Nor can it be claimed that favoritism has been shown to the California wine makers, for the provisions of the 1890 law are equally open to all wine growers in the United States.

The pure-wine law of 1890 was the first pure-food legislation in America, and its fruits have more than justified the hopes of its advocates. In 23 years there has never been a criticism of this law, nor any material changes proposed; furthermore, it has served as a model for other pure-food enactments. Once annul or interrupt the good effects of this law, and the distinct line between pure wines and counterfeit wines in this country will be wiped out, to the irreparable damage of the grape growers and producers of sweet wines and to the certain injury of the consumers of wines.

COST OF PRODUCTION, ETC.

Average cost of producing 1 gallon pure sweet wine, 20 cents. This includes payment to grower of an average of $11 per ton for his grapes.

Average selling price in bulk per gallon, 29½ cents. Increase in cost of producing 1 gallon pure sweet wine under present methods, which are the best, should a $1.10 tax on the grape spirits be imposed, 30 cents, bringing the original cost of producing a gallon of pure sweet wine to 50 cents.

As an example of how the proposed tax will operate we submit the following instance, which applies in the same ratio to every other producer of pure sweet wines in California: In 1912 the Bradford Winery in Sacramento County, an independent concern owned and operated by the Bradford Bros., who buy 10,000 tons of grapes annually from neighboring farms, used 150,000 gallons of grape spirits in the fortification of pure sweet wines, paying 3 cents per gallon to the Government, or $4,500. Figured at $1.10 per proof gallon, this one firm would be taxed $165,000.

It thus appears that if the $1.10 tax be imposed the cost of production will be increased 50 per cent and the selling price 100 per cent. It is the common people that are now consuming the California pure sweet wines, because the present price is within their reach; but they can not afford to buy it at any material increase. An increased tax means a decrease in the use of pure wines. The market can just about take care of the present production of grapes in California, and a diminished market simply means that the grape growers will not be able to sell their crops, either for wine or brandy purposes. The grapes will be left to rot on the vines for a season until the farmer has time to pull up his vines, which pulling up will impose a cost of some $15 per acre.

REVENUE.

Those who figure that the revenue received from the imposition of a $1.10 tax upon grape brandies used in the fortification of pure sweet wines will yield many millions of dollars are laboring under a serious misapprehension. If we assume that the same amount of pure sweet wines will be made and marketed, and then further assume that the same amount of grape spirits will be so used, then of course it resolves itself into a matter of simple multiplication; but unfortunately for any sound fiscal calculations there are too many "assumptions" here. In the first place, the sale of pure sweet wine will fall off tremendously; nobody can say exactly how much, but certainly it will not amount to one-fourth of the present consumption. The present steady market that has been created for pure California wines by years of education and hard work will certainly become badly demoralized, and that condition will surely be further demoralized by the undoubted production of sweet wines (?) preserved by neutral spirits, chemicals, and what not. Secondly, the man who makes a sweet wine, if compelled to pay a tax on his spirits, is certainly going to do two things, i. e., use as little alcohol as possible and buy that alcohol as cheaply as he can. In doing this he can not be criticized, for the prudent, economical management of his business will demand it.

Let us now see how this will work out. Instead of arresting fermentation at a point of high saccharine strength, he will let the fermentation proceed until nearly all the natural grape sugar has been converted into alcohol, for every degree of alcohol that he can obtain through the natural fermentation of the grape juice will save him just so much money in the purchase of taxed spirits. For example, the average amount of sugar in sweet-wine grapes is 26°, which is equivalent to 13° of alcohol, if the juice be fermented dry. The amount of alcohol in ports and other types of sweet wines ranges from 20° to 23°. Under present methods the sweet wines are fermented until about 71° alcohol is shown. To this wine is then added about 12½° grape spirits. Taking advantage of the provisions of the pending Pomerene amendment, the wine maker may add 20° sugar, and thus be able to produce 15° of alcohol through natural fermentation, leaving 16 per cent of sugar for the taste of the consumer. He can then rest content with his 15° of alcohol and market his wine under the claim that it is a pure sweet wine without adding a single drop of taxed alcohol, substituting as a preservative benzoate of soda or other permitted chemicals. But suppose he does wish to raise the alcoholic strength of his sweet wines to 20°. This will require him to add only 5° of taxed alcohol, where he now uses 12½° of grape brandy, thus cutting down the amount of alcohol or brandy used 60 per cent. It follows that even if the total amount of sweet wines consumed can be maintained at the present volume the above change of methods alone will reduce the amount of spirits used 60 per cent, and therefore three-fifths of the contemplated revenue must be deducted for this reason. If the wine maker is required to pay a tax on his alcohol, he will naturally buy that which is cheapest. The use of neutral alcohol is permitted by the pending measure. This kind of alcohol can be made from "black strap," cannery refuse, pineapple refuse from the Hawaiian Islands, potatoes, and even from sawdust and shavings, and will be obtainable by the California wine maker at the cost of from 8 to 10 cents per proof gallon.

Pure grape brandy costs about 40 cents per proof gallon when grapes are selling at $11 per ton. The use of cheaper spirits will spell the destruction of five-sixths of the brandy making in California, thereby destroying the market for 137,500 tons of grapes annually. The use of untaxed preservatives will be resorted to in preference to the use of taxed spirits, which further renders it problematical whether the Government will obtain any considerable revenue from tax upon grape spirits used in the making of pure sweet wines; but whether the revenue be large or small, it can not possibly justify the wholesale destruction of the grape-growing industry that is bound to follow the levy of any tax upon the grape spirits so used.

SUMMARY.

1. The imposition of a tax on grape spirits used in fortifying pure sweet wines will utterly destroy millions of dollars' worth of property that is now devoted wholly to viticultural purposes in California.

2. The small grape grower will be hurt the most, for he and his family are entirely dependent upon the annual crop of his vineyard, and if the wineries and distilleries can not take his grapes, he will be deprived of the sole market for his product.

3. It is the custom of the grape growers and the wine makers to enter into contracts for a term of years at fixed prices for grapes, and the contracts now in force invariably provide that in the event of adverse legislation the wine maker, at his option, may cancel his contract.

4. The imposition of a tax upon a pure sweet wine is in contravention of the announced policy of our Government, backed by strong public sentiment, in favor of purity in foods, drugs, and beverages of all kinds.

5. The imposition of such a tax will inevitably lead to the breaking down of the barriers between pure wine and its many imitations, causing confusion and difficulty in securing a pure article, and leading to temptations to market cheaper adulterated brands in the place of genuine wines, thereby undermining the public health through concealment and fraud practiced upon the consumer.

6. The imposition of the proposed tax will not produce any material increase of revenue. The claims of its proponents will not be realized; but, worse than this, the attempt to raise additional revenue in this manner will bring disaster to thousands of men and women of high character and good citizenship, thrifty, patriotic, and temperate, who are now engaged in various branches of the grape industry.

7. It is contrary to our avowed policy of encouraging the intensive cultivation of the soil in small holdings and rendering the pursuits of the soil profitable and inviting.

8. California's vineyards are of imported stocks, and that State alone is able to give the people of this country a pure delectable wine in competition with the imported brands.

9. A curtailment of the market for sweet wines will result in an overproduction of dry wines, and such overproduction means that tens of thousands of tons of grapes will not be worth marketing.

10. California's present viticulture is the result of a hundred years of experimentation and development, and the work of a century should not be nullified by the imposition of the proposed tax. It is the traditional policy of all governments to foster and upbuild this industry.

11. A ton of grapes being used for making the brandy that is now required to fortify the juice of a ton of sweet-wine grapes, it is apparent that a tax on such grape brandy will destroy the market for five-sixths of the grapes that now go to the distilleries.

12. The 15,000 heads of families who are now engaged in grape culture and wine making in California earnestly protest against taxing any of the interrelated branches of the grape industry.

Respectfully submitted.

M. F. TARPEY, Fresno, Cal.,
THEODORE A. BELL, San Francisco, Cal.,
L. W. JUILLIARD, Santa Rosa, Cal.,
LOUIS S. WETMORE, Stockton, Cal.,
J. C. NEEDHAM, Modesto, Cal.,
J. A. BARLOTTI, Los Angeles, Cal.,
G. E. LAWRENCE, Lodi, Cal.,
LOUIS LANDSBERGER, Berkeley, Cal.,
PERLEY K. BRADFORD, Sacramento, Cal.,
EDWARD L. DA ROZA, Elk Grove, Cal.,
Committee.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 1, 1913.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, does the Senator from North Carolina desire to press the conference report to-day, or would it be agreeable to him to agree to an hour to-morrow at which to vote upon it? There is absolutely no desire to delay the report, but there are several Senators on the minority side who desire to be heard upon it at some length.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, it is almost the unanimous desire of Senators on this side of the Chamber that we shall try to have a vote to-night. After talking with all of those that I have been advised are to speak, I do not think we will be here very late to-night, and I would rather that we should go on to-night. Of course it involves a sacrifice; it is inconvenient to all of us; but Senators who have engagements expected to finish the matter before this time.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate at this time by a discussion of the report. There are other Senators on the minority side who desire to be heard at some length and I shall yield to them. While I am on my feet, however, I desire to call the attention of the Senate and of the manufacturing and laboring people interested to the fact that in my opinion the conference report on hosiery will not relieve the situation, but will leave the industry in a lamentable situation.

I am convinced, after careful investigation, that compared with other rates of duty written in the Underwood bill those applied to hosiery may be considered high. In fact, if I am not mistaken, they are the highest in the bill on articles of common use. But high as they are, they fail to come anywhere near covering the difference in wages paid in this country and in Germany.

Hosiery manufacturers in Pennsylvania tell me that while they will give the Underwood law a fair test, they can see nothing ahead but very dull times, unless wages are reduced to the German level.

Samples of hose have already appeared here which sell in Germany for 60 cents per dozen pairs, fine gauge, full-fashioned. They are fully as fine as the 240-needle hose produced in this country and are made of fairly good cotton yarn. Such hose entering this market under a duty of 30 per cent will be absolutely ruinous to manufacturers of the grade of hose retailing in our markets for 25 cents per pair.

Under the Wilson-Gorman law the hosiery interest languished. Under the Dingley law conditions were slightly better, but were never prosperous. Under the Payne law the slight increase in duty made competition more even, so that our hosiery mills have been prosperous, while German manufacturers have found no difficulty in sending their goods here freely. The Underwood law will reduce the rates of duty much below the rates in the Wilson-Gorman law. Consequently hosiery manufacturers see no reason why the hosiery trade should not be worse off than under the Wilson-Gorman law.

A trade paper published in Chemnitz, Germany, says, under date of September 11, the following—I have the paper here; it is in the German language, but the translation of the item is:

Should the expectations which reductions in duty on the part of the United States justify for cotton and woolen hosiery soon become true our domestic industry can surely look forward to very good times for next year.

Mr. President, protectionists claim that a heavy reduction in rates of duty always results in the transfer of business to foreign manufacturers, who divide with the importer, jobber, and retailer the added profit, thus depriving the consumer of any advantage in price and inflicting all of the damage on the American producer and operative. That the above statement is true beyond contradiction is proven by official statistics covering imports of hosiery.

The average landing value of all hosiery imported during the year ending June 30, 1913, was $2.17 per dozen pairs, while the average for the month of August, 1913, was $2.60 per dozen pairs, or a clear gain of 43 cents per dozen pairs to be divided among the foreign manufacturers and American distributors, which is a profit never dreamed of by American manufacturers of hosiery. A careful examination of the advertisements of retail dealers in hosiery fails to disclose any change in retail prices during the month of August or since.

Mr. President, I have listened with great interest particularly to the eloquent closing periods of the chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. SIMMONS]. The familiar phrases regarding "a mandate from the people" and "the predatory interests" and "the relief from a generation of tariff abuse" did not affect me, perhaps, as they should, because I have grown callous in witnessing the difference between pretensions and performance.

While this cyclone of reform was driving along this propaganda throughout the country, ruthlessly sweeping its devastating course through many northern States, the Angora goat stood unterrified on the southern border of Texas. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly. I am glad to see a friend of the Angora goat on his hind legs. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHEPPARD. I could compare the Senator from Pennsylvania to another celebrated animal, but for the sake of propriety in debate I will not do so.

Mr. PENROSE. I did not say the Senator was an Angora goat. I said he was a friend of the Angora goat. I would not be so discourteous to the Senator as to make a remark such as he seems to infer.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Then I misunderstood the Senator. I rose to say that the Senator will acquit me of any complicity in the matter of putting the hair of the Angora goat on the dutiable list. I am in favor of placing goat hair on the free list, along with sheep wool.

Mr. PENROSE. I have not noted any heated or violent opposition to the duty on the part of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I made my opposition at what I considered the proper place and time, and my colleagues on this side know that I have expressed myself fully and emphatically on this subject.

Mr. PENROSE. After the villainy is perpetrated it is safe to condemn the villain. The fact remains that in the House there was placed on the hair of this inoffensive ruminant a duty fully equivalent in its ad valorem value to the paternal protection of the Dingley bill and the Payne bill. In reading the debates in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I was impressed by the fact that this instance of the Democratic idea of carrying out an aroused and incensed public sentiment for tariff revision by maintaining at the Dingley and Payne rates the duty on Angora hair aroused applause on the Democratic side of the Chamber when the chairman of the committee informed the House that that duty had been retained. Notwithstanding the strenuous opposition of the Senator from Texas, the duty comes out of the conference committee at 15 per cent ad valorem, a reduction from 20 per cent, as provided in the House bill. While the Wyoming ram is invited to face the inclemencies of the approaching winter unprotected by any duty, the Texas goat, living in a more tropical and beneficent climate, has thrown around him the blessings of the Republican protective rates.

I can sympathize, Mr. President, with the lover of the goat. He is one of the most ancient animals, as I understand, to be subjugated by the white races. Long before the horse or the ox was tamed to the will of man the goat and the Angora goat were found in close proximity to his habitation. He appears at the dawn of civilization.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. PENROSE. With pleasure, Mr. President.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I beg to say just at this juncture that we are flattered in the thought that we have the Republican goat at this time.

Mr. PENROSE. The hills in the suburbs of the cities of New Jersey are covered with goats.

They are there in the vicinity of tin cans and ash piles and shacks and other suburban adornments. I have no doubt that the Senator from New Jersey thinks that perhaps the Jersey goat will secure some advantage from the protection extended to the Angora goat, but I want to assure the Senator that as meritorious as are the attainments of the New Jersey goat it can not compete with the Texas goat.

The goat is a useful animal. One of the earliest friends of man is thus protected amidst a cyclone of reform. Why is it? I do not want to embarrass the chairman of the Finance Committee or any member of his committee by asking the question. I shall address the question to the vacant air and leave another generation to answer.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator does not embarrass me at all.

Mr. PENROSE. I did not know the Senator was in the room. The Senator's melting tones as he closed his speech so impressed me that I would not make any unkind remarks even about the Angora goat if I knew he was in the Chamber.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator made no unkind remark about me so far as I know.

Mr. PENROSE. But I thought maybe the Senator might resent any reflection on the Angora goat.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not come to the defense of the Angora goat. I was with the committee that put the hair of the Angora goat on the free list, and I am inclined to think it ought to be on the free list, but the conferees of the House did not quite agree with me about that. If the Senator wants me to give the argument upon which they chiefly relied, it was to differentiate—

Mr. PENROSE. I will cheerfully yield to the Senator for the argument.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has heard the argument made here repeatedly in connection with wool that mutton is the chief product of the sheep and wool the by-product, and so on, and that the mutton value of the sheep in many cases, especially of certain breeds, paid the entire expense of the wool and left wool absolutely free of cost to the producer. In other cases it very greatly reduced the cost of producing wool. The argument was made by the conferees on the part of the House and insisted upon that the Angora goat was not valuable at all for food purposes.

Mr. PENROSE. It is an edible article, I think, however, and cheese is extensively made of its milk.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know about the Angora goat. It is not raised in my part of the country, and I have never eaten any of it.

Mr. PENROSE. It is taxation upon the consumer who may like to eat it.

Mr. SIMMONS. My understanding is that the Angora goat is not a good foodstuff; but I merely state to the Senator the argument. As he knows, the committee reported in favor of putting its hair upon the free list. The Senate so voted. The conferees of the House did not agree with us, and that was one of the chief reasons assigned. We secured a reduction of 5 per cent.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not understand yet the reason of it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I desire to ask the chairman of the Finance Committee if he seriously tells us that this old-fashioned, worn-out, threadbare Republican argument of protection was made by the House conferees?

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not mean to say that it was made in the way of protection, but I stated that they differentiated the case of the wool of the sheep from the hair of the Angora goat.

Mr. PENROSE. I am glad another member of the conference committee on the part of the Senate rises to his feet to plead not guilty upon this oppressive act to the consumer of retaining Republican rates on the Angora goat. I suppose if the other conferees were present in the Chamber they would likewise rise to give themselves an alibi, at least upon this particular duty. Blame it on the House! The country will blame it on the Democratic Party. When the people come to consider this case they will be able to gauge the measure of the Democratic statesmanship which slaughtered the Wyoming ram and pampered the Texas goat.

I did not quite understand the explanation of the chairman of the Finance Committee as to why this duty has been imposed. The fact of the matter is, Mr. President, the chairman and his associates have been whispering in dark corners so much all winter that they have lost the art of audible debate, and this most unfortunate habit should be stopped, it seems to me, when the currency bill is pressed for consideration.

I suppose that perhaps the hair of the Angora goat, the Texan ruminant, has been retained on the dutiable list at rates approximating the iniquitous Republican rate in order to produce those tremendous revenues that the chairman of the committee stated that it was going to give us. I was impressed with the rosy view he gave of the Federal Treasury; and while he was talking, it is true, I had visions of millions spent in building armor-plate factories, and many millions to be paid to railroads for carrying the parcel post, and millions of dollars to be expended under the ambitious régime of the present administration, and I could picture to myself awful chasms of deficits opening up before me in the next two years, as far as the Federal Government is concerned. Yet I can now see that the Senator's confidence as to revenue is sustained by the duty on the hair of the Angora goat. There must have been some reason like that, because the authorities on natural history say that this ruminant quadruped is about the same as the domestic sheep, so closely allied to it as to have no real difference, although frequently widely different in appearance. Why, then, if it is, the same as the sheep, a genus of ruminant quadrupeds of the family Bovidae, should this difference be made in an American tariff law? It is no more difficult to ruminate in Texas than it is in Wyoming.

The encyclopædia says:

One of the most marked of the distinguishing characters is that the horns of goats, present in both sexes, but smaller in the females, are long and directed upward, backward, and outward, while those of the sheep are more or less spirally twisted.

That would not surely furnish a logical difference for a 15 per cent ad valorem duty upon the Texas goat. I want the Senate to understand that a vicious female sheep can butt with any kind of a horn. But there is another difference. I quote again:

Other characteristics are the beard on the chin of the male goats, which is wanting in the sheep.

Has the Democracy still retained the regard for the unshaven aspect that the comic papers credit to it? Are they absorbed in profound veneration for the beard of the male goat, and do they retain the duty provided for under Republican administrations for this by no means backward animal?

It further appears that the goat "has a straight line in the face as compared with the arched line in sheep." As you often have to look backward to see a goat the writer of this article was a keen observer. [Laughter.] But this difference does not constitute a valid reason for the difference in duty.

We read further this:

The tail of goats is also much shorter than that of sheep.

Did these considerations enter into the conference when the Senator from Texas was engaged in his violent repudiation of the duty and the Senator from North Carolina had thrown up his hands in helpless despair? It may be this was not the reason.

A constant mark of distinction is the absence in goats of a small pit between the toes of the hind feet (in some cases of all four feet) producing a fatty secretion, which exists in sheep.

That is too trivial a difference for anyone to think for a moment that the Democratic conferees gave any consideration to it. It would have taken a very strong, insidious lobby to have made that argument. But here, this may have been the reason.

Still another difference has been noted:

And another constant mark which is absent in sheep is the strong smell of goats.

[Laughter.]

But I abandon further efforts to penetrate the secrets of the Democratic caucus as to why the Angora goat of Texas is provided for and the ram of Wyoming is left to his fate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to discuss the particular items in this conference report, but it is rather because this affords the last opportunity for an expression of opinion upon this bill as a whole that I have addressed the Chair.

Naturally many inquiries are made, especially among a Senator's own constituents, as to the reason for his vote upon this bill. The inquiry is made as to the effect the new tariff act as reported from the conference between the two Houses of Congress will have upon business in general, upon wages, and the cost of living, and especially with reference, so far as I am concerned, to my own State.

In the first place, I desire to say that in the consideration of the bill in the Senate I spoke and voted against many of its provisions, although upon its final passage I voted for it as a whole in preference to the existing law. I especially urged that there should be a reasonable tariff upon shingles, while conceding that the rates should be reduced. I believe that the bill is wrong in immediately reducing wool and sugar from a high tariff to the free list.

I am inclined to think it is right in putting a tax of 15 cents on the hair of the Angora goat. I voted for various amendments for moderate tariffs upon those articles. I also opposed and voted against the entire removal of the tariff upon wheat. In these, as well as in many other respects, the bill does not accord, in my judgment, with the tariff policy which either the Progressive, the Republican, or the Democratic Parties have advocated in platforms and in campaigns. Strange as it may seem, all three of these parties in their most solemn and authoritative declarations upon the subject, in which they have gone before the people of the country for support, have formally declared in favor of practically the same tariff rule or policy, and the same measure of rates, namely—without quoting the platforms, and stating it only in general terms—that the tariff rates should compensate the American producer or manufacturer for the difference in the cost of production in this country and abroad, or, as sometimes stated, the difference in wages in America and in foreign countries, the intention being, in whatever form stated by those various parties, that the American producer or manufacturer should be protected against lower cost of production or lower wages prevailing in foreign countries. During the tariff debate I stated specifically the platform declarations of the various parties upon which I base the foregoing statement.

In my opinion the bill about to become a law is not well balanced in this respect, in that it discriminates against the producers of some of the great staple products in the class of so-called raw materials or products, such as lumber and shingles, of the lower class of manufactures. I regret that in conference some of these discriminations were not modified by the adoption of the House rates as opposed to the Senate rates, as, for instance, in the case of wheat, covered in the House bill by a tariff of 10 cents per bushel, but put upon the free list in the Senate bill, and so reported by the conference committee.

Taking the bill as a whole, however, and especially regarding its effects upon the country as a whole rather than upon any particular locality in the country, my opinion is that it will not in any way impair business activity or prosperity, so far as the rates of the bill itself are concerned. Continued tariff agitation and uncertainty, and particularly when that agitation involves complete recasting of the entire tariff law, as in this case, necessarily has a deterrent effect upon not only manufactures, but commercial enterprises and material development of all kinds. Taking for granted that the bill aims to protect American industries as the pending bill demonstrably does, the thing of paramount importance is not the particular classifications and the rates of the various schedules, but that the question should be settled upon some certain basis, that the agitation in regard to details, at least, should be suspended, and that the country should have at least a reasonable opportunity to plan, project, and execute its business enterprises upon known conditions.

Upon this question my opinion is that this bill will have little or no direct effect upon wages, but will in the aggregate reduce the cost of living. Whatever effect it may have upon either of these conditions will depend in part upon the answer to the first proposition, namely, what effect the bill will have upon the volume and activity of the business of the country, including all of its various forms. Knowing as we do that this is affected by multitudinous circumstances, many of them of the most complex nature, many of them purely fortuitous, many of them constantly changing from month to month and year to year, it is impossible for anyone to predict with certainty what effect upon commercial enterprises, manufactures, or material development any such change in the fiscal policy of the Government might have. We have had hard times and good times under Democratic tariffs and under Republican tariffs; but it is to be observed that in all the changing conditions of business the influences which have most affected us have generally likewise at the same time affected the entire civilized world; in other words, that the most pronounced fluctuations in business activity and financial prosperity have been brought about by world-wide influences rather than by local laws or circumstances.

The effect of excessive and, in many instances, prohibitive rates in our tariff has been in many instances, as in the wool pulp and paper manufactures, to demoralize methods of manufacture and to put an incubus upon enterprise and progress, resulting in obsolete methods and machinery being employed. In the most comprehensive and elaborate investigation made by the late Tariff Board into certain manufactures, as, for instance, wool, it was demonstrated from the information collected that so far as the cost of production is concerned, it was lowest in those institutions paying the highest wages. A pampering, undue tariff, especially where it is, as is so often the case, accompanied by domestic monopoly, removes the spur and incentive which competition so well supplies for economy and scientific methods. Inefficient methods naturally tend to low wages and high costs, and upon this theory the facts disclosed by the Tariff Board's investigation may be explained, and that rule is applicable to the entire field of manufactures. Excessive rates and prohibitive rates which encourage private monopoly and shut out reasonable foreign competition are not justified upon any considerations of the public welfare and are utterly opposed to the solemn pledges of all of the great political parties in this country.

In determining the important question of a vote in the Senate for or against the pending measure it is absolutely necessary to a correct conclusion to study the pending bill in the light of the tariff policy desired. Aside from the individual opinions of Senators and the interests of their constituents a just conclusion can be reached only after carefully weighing the formal campaign declarations of the various political parties upon which the present Congress was chosen. As stated above, these declarations of all political parties, not always, but at one time or another, have been substantially the same, and the effect of the declarations is that it is evidently the consensus of public opinion in this country that the tariff should be fixed at such a rate as would be a "competitive" tariff, as it is called; that is, that the American manufacturer and his foreign competitor should meet upon fairly equal competitive conditions in the American market. In my opinion, this is the just view, as well as the party promise. Of course, there are many public men, as well as private citizens, who go to the extremes; very different from this policy. On the one hand, there are those who would write a tariff bill in one line, and that would be that no foreign articles which can be produced in this country should be imported; in other words, a prohibitive tariff. On the other hand, there are those who would abolish all tariffs and, to use their figure of speech, would tear down the customhouses. Neither of these extreme views, however, can prevail; neither of them have been declared by any political party.

Measuring the pending bill by the American rule and the accepted platform declarations, in my judgment the rates upon manufactures are, with very few exceptions, sufficiently high and in some cases are still entirely too high.

There is much evidence that the profits of lead and zinc mine owners and the price of zinc and lead to the consuming public is absolutely under control of the Smelting Trust; also that the producers of lead ores do not get the benefit of existing tariffs. However, the Senate raised the duty upon lead ores from one-half cent per pound in the House bill to three-fourths of 1 cent per pound, to what was considered a competitive basis, and this was retained in conference. It is extremely doubtful, however, whether any change, either raising or lowering the tariff upon lead, under the present conditions of the smelting industry in this country will have any appreciable effect either upon the price paid to the producer of lead ore or by the user of lead. Pig iron can be produced in this country as cheaply, if not more cheaply, than anywhere in the world and was properly placed upon the free list. In some portions of the country, as on the Pacific coast, this will be a very great advantage to manufacturers of iron products. Coal is placed upon the free list, and properly so, in my judgment, since the American public as a whole is paying an exorbitant annual tribute to the Coal Trust and the great transportation companies which constitute a part of it, and any possible relief which can be granted to the consumers of this necessary article is not only justifiable but is demanded by common justice. In the city of Spokane, Wash., which I mention because it is my home, and the so-called great inland empire, as well as to the entire Northwest, this will be a benefit by making accessible to them the coal deposits of British Columbia, and can not interfere with any legitimate profits of coal operators anywhere in the United States. The rates of duty retained upon manufactures of steel and iron, while substantially reduced, are in most cases more than enough to comply with the rule of protection as stated above. On cotton cloth the rate under the Wilson tariff, reduced to ad valorem, was 41.62 per cent; under the Dingley Act, 38.54 per cent; under the Payne-Aldrich tariff, 42.75 per cent; under the pending bill as agreed upon in conference it is estimated to equal 27.15 per cent. On woolen cloths and knit fabrics under the Wilson tariff the rate equaled 47.88 per cent ad valorem; under the Dingley tariff, 95.34 per cent; under the Payne-Aldrich tariff in 1910, 97.20 per cent; under the pending bill as agreed upon in conference, 44 per cent. These rates retained in the present bill, without attempting in this statement to go into detail, are, generally speaking, far higher than is justified by the party declarations of any political party.

The rates of the Payne-Aldrich bill, which these rates supplant, were unjustified by any tariff policy ever advocated by a political party. The rates in Schedule K, as demonstrated by the report of the late Tariff Board, as set forth in a message to Congress by President Taft, were prohibitive as to the medium grades of woolen goods, and resulted in increasing the price of such goods in this country 66 per cent over the price in foreign countries, with the result that foreigners are better clothed than Americans, and that many Americans, in fact, the large mass of them, are wholly deprived of good woolen clothes.

As between the East and the West, whatever losses, imaginary or otherwise, the West may possibly suffer from reduced rates on certain of its productions will be compensated a thousand times over by the relief which the West will immediately receive from the reduction to a reasonable and legitimate point of the tariff rates upon woolen and cotton goods, iron and steel manufactures, and a thousand and one articles which the West buys from the East. For a generation the West has been paying an unconscionable tribute to eastern manufacturers, made possible by exorbitant tariff rates upon the manufactures mentioned, and hundreds not mentioned. There should be an immediate and direct reduction of the cost of living by reducing to our consumers to, at least, the same prices at which our American manufacturers sell their products abroad, the cost of iron and steel utensils, structural iron, cotton and woolen cloth, and shoes, which are placed on the free list. The Payne-Aldrich bill put hides on the free list and retained a duty upon shoes. This discrimination against the West is equalized in the pending bill by placing shoes on the free list, and millions of dollars will be saved to that section by this one item alone. It is not contended with any seriousness that the American shoe manufacturers stand in need of tariff protection; the fact is they have successfully invaded the European market in many lines of shoes. The people of the State of Washington will be benefited from twenty to thirty millions of dollars annually by these reductions in all of the long line of articles of clothing, food, shelter, and the implements of agriculture and the trades; while their loss, if any, from the reduction in the tariff upon wheat, wool, and sugar will be negligible in comparison. In fact, they will be benefited by placing sugar on the free list, because, notwithstanding the tariff, and notwithstanding a bounty granted by the State legislature, the effort to produce beet sugar in the State of Washington has, so far, not been successful; although from a broader and national standpoint I favor the retention of a just and moderate duty upon that great staple, for reasons not necessary to go into here.

I have a statement from a lumberman in the State, of as much experience and as much success as any lumberman in the State, to the effect that the lumber manufacturers in Washington do not need the protection of a tariff upon lumber. This is probably true, and if true, notwithstanding our apprehensions, the same thing is possibly true to a greater or less extent of the shingle manufacturers, although I was opposed to placing shingles upon the free list, though favoring a substantial reduction in this rate. Our farmers will be benefited by the reduction in the tariff upon grain sacks from 33 per cent ad valorem under the present law to 10 per cent under the Senate bill as reported from conference; and I might add by the placing of jute bagging, out of which grain sacks are made, upon the free list, while the removal of the tariff upon wheat will probably have no effect whatever upon the price of wheat in that State, although it may in some of the other border States to a limited degree. The farmers of the State of Washington, and consequently all the people of the State of Washington, will derive more benefit from the provisions in the pending bill, which places agricultural implements on the free list and thus saves them many millions of dollars each year from the excessive prices of the Farm Machinery Trust, than the State can possibly lose from the removal of the tariff on wool. The entire removal of the tariff on fencing wire, saddles, harness, and leather will be a substantial benefit to the entire West.

Wages in the protected industries can not be affected by this bill, for the reason that they are already at the lowest possible point at which labor can be obtained, or, where labor is plentiful, at the lowest possible point at which labor can do the work and live. I visited the woolen mills at Lawrence, Mass. American labor was first displaced by Canadian and English labor, and this, in turn, by a lower class and lower-paid labor from Portugal and other Mediterranean countries, some twenty-odd different languages being represented among the operatives in those mills.

The labor in the cotton mills is largely child labor and poorly paid. It could not be reduced to a lower point. The labor in the steel industry, particularly the common labor, is poorly paid and overworked—tens of thousands of the employees in this industry working 12 hours a day, some of them 7 days a week, and many of them 16 hours a day. While under certain conditions and in certain industries the tariff does affect wages to a limited extent, it does not in general. The most highly protected industries in many instances pay the lowest wages to their employees; while, as pointed out above, the industries employing the highest priced labor frequently have the lowest cost of production, consequently needing lower rates of protection.

While the conditions stated above will directly and indirectly affect the cost of living, yet the effect of the tariff upon this great question is small compared to the influence of other problems with which the tariff is only collaterally concerned. Monopoly of transportation—and all the consequent abuses of inefficiency, extravagance, destruction of life—and excessive and discriminatory rates have a much more extensive effect upon the cost of living. Another essential element which enters into this question and which must be dealt with before it is settled is overcapitalization of industrial and transportation companies, by which device the mass of the people is taxed to the extent of billions to build up in a few years the swollen fortunes of a few. Another element is the monopoly of the necessities of life, which question reaches far beyond the tariff; and perhaps equally important is the problem of good roads as bearing upon all of the conditions of country and city life.

More than all other influences, however, tending on the one hand to increase the cost of living and on the other hand to deprive the masses of the people of means to meet this cost is the unnatural and dangerous power which has been gradually centered in the hands of that small group of men who control the supply of money and, directly or indirectly, regulate the rates of interest and the expansion or restriction of credits. That such insidious and insupportable concentration of power does actually exist was demonstrated in the recent investigation by the Pujo committee in the House of Representatives. By means of this centralized money power in private hands, operated for selfish purposes, the resources of the people are periodically squeezed to satisfy the inordinate avarice of this small group of manipulators.

Many of those who ostensibly have been especially grieved over my vote for this bill and who claim to be greatly exercised as to the evil consequences which will follow its enactment are, as a matter of fact, really but little interested in the tariff schedules of the bill. That feature of the bill which really arouses their bitter hostility, although they are curiously silent upon it, is not the tariff at all, but the income tax. As a rule those who are in favor of prohibitory or excessive tariff rates are opposed to a properly graduated income tax. Some of this class have been compelled by force of public opinion to favor an income tax, but in reality oppose it under the guise of opposition to the tariff reductions in the pending bill. This bill, so far as it modifies the existing law, shifts to that extent the burden of taxation from the poor consumer to the rich possessors of great incomes. Its tendency is to lighten the taxes upon mere sufficiency and increase them upon superfluity. This has been the policy and theory of every wise system of taxation in the most enlightened civilizations. The graduation of the income tax in the pending bill is not perfect, just as the schedules of tariff rates are imperfect, but no law formulated out of the conflicting interests and complex opinions and judgments of a vast Nation such as this can meet in all aspects the wishes or the opinions of anyone. We must take it as a whole and determine upon its final analysis and total effect whether it is a beneficial or injurious change in the existing law.

For a generation the liberal elements in our politics have been striving for a graduated income tax. Through the great progressive movement of recent years, operating not only in the Progressive Party, but both directly and indirectly compelling action of all parties, the opportunity is now presented of obtaining through the passage of this bill a fair and progressive scheme of income taxation whereby the incomes of the poor are exempt and the rate of taxation upon the incomes of the rich increases with the increasing wealth. In other words, it places a somewhat larger share of the direct financial burdens of government upon those who can carry it with the greatest ease and who at the same time require and receive more of the care and expense of government and who are most concerned in the maintenance of the laws. If we reject this opportunity and defeat this bill, as both the open and secret opponents of an income tax desire, whether they are frankly avowing the real cause of their opposition or are concealing it in an outcry against tariff reductions, another generation may pass by in the uncertainties and complexities of political warfare before this just measure could be enacted into law.

Mr. President, I desire to say, in addition to what I have just said in regard to the income tax, that the strictures which I have directed at some of those who are opposing this bill are not intended in any way to apply to any Member of the Senate. I have in view certain objectors and critics in my own State.

My vote for this bill has been attacked by certain newspapers as a vote for free trade and as a vote for a Democratic tariff. These are both regarded in certain quarters as offensive epithets. It seems to be claimed that because this bill puts upon the free list certain items it is a free-trade bill. If that is the test of free trade, then every tariff bill ever enacted in this country was a free-trade bill, because every one contained an extensive free list. It has never been contended by any political party in this country that every article of commerce should be subject to a customs duty, and neither has it ever been contended by any political party that every item should be free.

In the framing of every tariff bill in the history of such legislation in this country what should be upon the free list has been the subject of dispute both between opposing political parties and between members and factions of the same party. This has always been the case and always will be the case. War has been waged, for instance, over hides. Under the McKinley bill they were free. In the Democratic Wilson bill they were free. In the Republican Dingley tariff they bore a rate of 15 per cent ad valorem. Under the reactionary Payne-Aldrich tariff they are free, notwithstanding the protests of the West, and under the pending bill they remain free. Under the Democratic Wilson bill shoes were taxed in the tariff rates 20 per cent ad valorem, under the reactionary Payne-Aldrich bill 15 per cent, and under the pending Democratic bill they are placed upon the free list. Does the placing of shoes upon the free list make this bill a free-trade bill? It does as to shoes, assuredly, but assuredly not as to the other thousands of items upon which tariffs, ranging all the way from a mere nominal rate up to 169 per cent ad valorem, are placed. Does the placing of shoes upon the free list violate the campaign pledges of the Progressive Party or, for that matter, of the Republican Party? Apparently so from the standpoint of some critics of my vote upon this bill, because they cite the declaration of the Progressive platform:

We believe in a protective tariff * * * both for the farmer and the manufacturer and which shall maintain for labor an adequate standard of living.

Does this mean that there shall be no free list, or does it mean that any particular article shall not be placed upon the free list, such as agricultural machinery, saddles, harness, fencing wire, sugar, or wool? Does it mean that the rates of the Payne-Aldrich bill shall be maintained and that the rates in the pending bill shall not be substituted for them? Assuredly not. It is not a declaration for any particular schedules any more than the Republican platform of 1896, which expressly declared:

We are not pledged to any particular schedules.

If the placing of the articles mentioned upon the free list makes the bill a free-trade bill, then assuredly the Payne-Aldrich bill must be a free-trade bill, because under it, in 1912, $881,512,987 of merchandise were imported entirely free of duty, while only $759,209,915 of imports were dutiable.

There has been no subject in American politics about which there has been as much misinformation, as much campaign buncombe, as much sophistry, as the tariff. As a matter of fact, the supposed warfare between free trade and protection has been and is purely an imaginary one. In 1840 there was imported into this country, free of duty, merchandise to the value of $42,110,829, while in the same year merchandise subject to duty was admitted to the value of $44,139,506. In 1842, long before the Republican Party had been born into the world, there was imported into the United States, free of duty, merchandise to the value of $23,346,171, while that which was imported in that year subject to duty amounted to $64,650,147. In 1892, under the Republican McKinley bill, there was admitted, duty free, merchandise to the value of $448,771,192, while that admitted subject to duty was to the value of $355,526,741. On the other hand, in 1896, under the Democratic Wilson bill, $386,897,523 of imports were free, while the much larger amount of $390,796,561 were subject to duty. This difference was due in part to the different theories and classes of articles upon which the respective tariffs were levied, but, nevertheless, in 1830, under Democratic rule, the average ad valorem rate of duty upon dutiable imports was 44.88 per cent; in 1840, it was 30.37 per cent; in 1850, it was 25.85 per cent; in 1855, it was 26.82 per cent. Under Republican rule in 1864, it was 36.69 per cent; in 1870, it was 47.08 per cent; in 1880, 43.46 per cent; in 1890, 44.39 per cent; in 1893, under the McKinley bill, 49.56 per cent; in 1895, under Democratic law, the average ad valorem rate on dutiable imports was 41.75 per cent; in 1900, under the Dingley law, it was 49.24 per cent; in 1912, under the Payne-Aldrich law, it was 40.12 per cent; and as nearly as I can make an approximation of the bill as reported from the conference committee, the average ad valorem rate will be very close to 31.75 per cent upon all dutiable articles.

These figures are cited to show that throughout our growth as a nation we have, under all parties, lived under a protective tariff. Both the Democratic and Republican Parties, as heretofore stated, have often declared that the tariff policy should be that duties levied to obtain revenues for the support of the Government should be so placed as to encourage American industry; both Democratic and Republican Parties have likewise repeatedly declared that the measure of tariff duties should be the difference in the cost of production or the difference in wages between this country and Europe. The people have been induced oftentimes to neglect the most vital and important social and political problems and to be lured off into a sham war over the tariff when both parties were in agreement, as demonstrated by their platform declarations, as to tariff policies. This is demonstrated not only by platform declarations in times past but by the action of both parties at the present time, including the specific declarations of the framers of the pending bill in this Congress. The fact that the tariff deals with a multitude of articles entering into the most intimate uses and necessities of domestic life has afforded an opportunity for politicians to secure the attention of the people in political campaigns to discussions, promises, and denunciations in regard to tariff rates. In this way, and because no adequate agency was provided for the framing of scientific classifications of articles and the accurate ascertainment of rates to comply with the measure of protection declared by all parties, the tariff has been kept constantly an issue in politics. It was largely a sham issue. The controversy, whatever may have been the opposing views of individuals, between the great political parties has been one about particular rates and schedules enacted into statutes by their political opponents and affording lodgment for the arrows of political ridicule and sarcasm, and not in regard to measures and rules and policies of tariff legislation.

The pending bill is not a free-trade bill, although its rates are lower than those of the existing law. The question is, Do these rates measure up to the rule laid down in Progressive, Republican, and Democratic platforms? That question is seldom discussed by the critics of those outside of the Democratic Party who have voted for this measure.

As indicated above, the average ad valorem rate of duty on dutiable articles under the pending bill as reported from conference is 31.75. Although this includes all merely revenue rates, still, being considerably more than one-quarter of the entire value of the articles, it may be safely assumed to represent in general the difference between this country and others in the cost of production of the same. But this is not an adequate test, because it includes a number of low and nonprotective rates. The average ad valorem rate upon 51 protected articles from the principal schedules of the bill, typical of American manufactures, is 32.15 per cent, leaving out exceedingly high rates, as on tobacco, and merely revenue rates, which is far more than the measure of tariff protection advocated in the party platforms.

In citing the paragraphs quoted above from the Progressive platform, the measure of tariff protection demanded by that platform is overlooked by the critics referred to. That measure is stated as follows:

We believe in a protective tariff which shall equalize conditions of competition between the United States and foreign countries.

Furthermore, the platform declares:

We declare that no industry deserves protection which is unfair to labor or which is operating in violation of Federal law. We believe that the presumption is always in favor of the consuming public.

We demand tariff revision because the present tariff is unjust to the people of the United States. Fair dealing toward the people requires an immediate downward revision of those schedules wherein duties are shown to be unjust or oppressive. * * * We condemn the Payne-Aldrich bill as unjust to the people.

Even the Republican platform in 1912 declared—

We hold that the import duties should be high enough, while yielding a sufficient revenue, to protect adequately American industries and wages. Some of the existing import duties are too high and should be reduced. Readjustment should be made from time to time to conform to changed conditions and to reduce excessive rates—thus furnishing the only example of a political party which, after having repudiated its platform pledges and having enacted a tariff law in violation of its campaign promises, in the first succeeding presidential campaign admitted that the rates it had so lately fixed were too high and should be reduced.

The party treachery which the Payne-Aldrich tariff represents was the most potent factor in the downfall of the Republican Party. The attacks which are being made upon those who vote to repeal it now are identical with the opposition to those who voted against it in 1909. For four years we have denounced it before the country. It was on trial in 1910 and again in 1912, and was repudiated in both elections by the most scathing verdict by which a people ever rebuked a faithless party. Where are its chief authors? Four years ago they were in the seats of power and controlled every branch of the Government of the United States. They arrogantly defied the instructions of the people and forswore their own party platform. They had declared to the people throughout the campaign that if elected they would revise the tariff to a rate equal to the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad with a reasonable profit to the manufacturer. Given power on this promise they laughed at their campaign promises and in their greed took two or three times as much as had been proposed. One of them was Speaker of the House; one was President of the United States; one was leader of the Senate and chairman of its Finance Committee; one was chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House; one, while Speaker, controlled every committee of the House, because he had the power to appoint them all. They were all his creatures. These "iron dukes of American politics" had behind them a supple and obedient majority. They enacted the Payne-Aldrich bill, went before the country on it, and out of the ruck and turmoil of their fight for it they emerged with the electoral votes of Utah and Vermont. Protesting against the recall, they were recalled. Their memory is already growing dim in the places that knew them so long. Now we are asked to approve their work and to retain the tariff which was the very essence of their condemnation.

The Payne-Aldrich law is no better to-day than when it was enacted. If it represented broken promises and party perfidy then, it does so now. Some people seem to think that it is all right to make tariff rates higher than the platform calls for, but that under no circumstances should they be made lower. The truth is that it is just as much a breach of party faith to exceed the measure authorized as it is to go under it. It is worse, in fact, because in the nature of things the principal benefit of the tariff is received by the private beneficiary, and if for the general welfare the people vote to allow him a certain rate it is an imposition upon them for Congress to allow him more. The people must bear the excess.

It seems to be argued by those critics that this declaration of the Progressive Party calls for a tariff upon every article and opposes a reduction of the tariff upon any article. Obviously this is not the case. It is not proposed either by the Progressive platform or by the Republican platform of 1908 or any other year that a tariff should be placed upon any article unless there is some difference between this country and foreign countries in the cost of production or in the wages employed in its production; unless there is some advantage which the foreigner has, of cheap production, against which the American manufacturer needs and is entitled to protection. It is not a violation of these platforms to place shoes on the free list, because it has been demonstrated that shoes can be manufactured in this country as cheaply as they can be manufactured abroad, largely by reason of the patent monopoly of improved shoe machinery, and there is no need for the protection which has heretofore been placed upon them. The party promises stated above do not call for a retention of 100 per cent tariffs upon woolen goods and do not oppose a reduction of these excessive rates. On the contrary, the platform declarations of both the Republican and Progressive Parties not only demand protective tariffs at a rate which meets the rule set forth in the platforms, but by equal logic and with just as much moral compulsion require a reduction of all rates which exceed that measure. The rates retained in the present bill upon the great mass of manufactures, as stated above, are fully equal to the measure set forth in the Republican and Progressive Party platforms. It behooves the vehement critics of some who voted for this bill to point out the great mass of items upon which its tariff rates do not comply with Progressive or even Republican Party promises.

As stated, it is charged that it is a Democratic bill. It is true that the bill was framed—principally at least—by the Democratic majority in the House and Senate, or by some alleged representatives of that majority. What of it? The question is not by what party the bill was framed, but as to the merits of the bill itself. The time has long gone by when the people of this country can longer be deceived by a sham war for the spoils of office between two caucus-dominated political organizations fighting political battles upon fictitious issues.

As pointed out above, the tariff policies of the great political parties of this country, as expressed in their platforms in most of the great tariff campaigns, have been identical, but, whether they are identical or not, the people are indifferent, and ought to be indifferent, as to whether legislation bears one party name or another. They are concerned in the effect of legislation upon the people and are not concerned, otherwise, with the triumph or defeat of political organizations. The time has long gone by when a Member of this body can justify his vote upon legislation here by the cry of party regularity. If the bill is bad, it should be defeated by whatever party it is proposed. If the bill is an improvement upon existing conditions, it should be supported regardless of the name of the party which proposed it. The truth of the case is, unfortunately, that in the eyes of many the theories of tariff platforms lose their force when the polls are closed, and in certain quarters an actual resentment is felt toward any attempt to make the schedules of the law square with the rule of the campaign pledge.

The time has long gone by when campaigns can either be won or lost upon rhetorical claptrap and campaign eloquence about good times and hard times, which, in many instances, are due to causes quite remote from tariffs. It is quite difficult to understand how the reduction of American tariffs can cause hard times in England, and yet, in campaign after campaign, it has been argued that a tariff bill, which slightly reduced rates and yet maintained a very high degree of protection, was the cause of a depression of business which extended throughout the civilized world. The farmers in this country have grown too intelligent and too well informed, partly due to the opportunities afforded by more plentiful literature and its free distribution by the rural-delivery system, to allow themselves to be taxed year after year exorbitantly upon every roll of fencing wire, upon every ton of coal, upon every agricultural implement or machine, upon their saddles and harness, upon every mechanic's tool, upon the cotton and woolen clothing, which they wear, and to pay this excessive and unnecessary tax contentedly because of a largely exaggerated benefit held up before their hopes in the shape of a tariff upon agricultural products. I, myself, believe that the farmer should have the same rate of protection upon his products that the manufacturer has upon his, but, nevertheless, the benefits which the farmer has received from a tariff are pitifully small and insignificant compared with the tributes which he has paid to manufacturers on this account.

The woolen, cotton, steel, tool, and farm machinery manufacturers in their several lines of business have agreements among themselves as to prices. In some of the more important instances the business is controlled by private monopoly, with the tariff as one of its foundations and factors. The farmers have never been able, and probably never will be able, in the very nature of things, to have any binding agreement among themselves as to prices. Tariff or no tariff, there is competition in agricultural products. The farmer has been compelled to compete not only with other farmers in this country but with the farmers of the world in the open markets, where we are compelled to go to find sale for the surplus products of our soil. In all the artificial advantages of tariffs used as a function of private aggrandizement of the scandalous carnival of overcapitalization and stock jobbery, of corporate abuses and the extortion practiced upon the people through the private control of the great necessary public transportation utilities, the farmer has been the victim, not the beneficiary; and when there is an opportunity not to destroy a great principle but to correct one of these scandalous abuses, the farmer can not be brought like the slaves of the South to arm and equip himself to fight against his own liberation by holding up before him the glittering but empty promise of high tariffs on farm products. The farmer has only been allowed what was left after special privilege had extracted "all that the traffic would bear"; just as with the laborer in the high-tariff industries, while tariffs were going up his wages were reduced all that life would bear.

The farmer, as well as every other citizen, will feel the benefit accruing from the tendency which this bill will have to reestablish an American merchant marine by reducing prohibitory rates and a slight discrimination in favor of American ships. A needed impetus will be given to the employment of American capital and labor in this great avocation of the human race, for which our people have a natural genius.

High protection has been made a fetish and worshipped as a sacred principle. The idea was more or less current that there could not be too much of this good thing. Of course, under such a notion no tariff commission was needed—no scientific classifications of articles, no nice estimate of rates. It was a grab for all that one could get. The notion was prevalent in certain high quarters that while the special beneficiaries might profit very greatly from extremely high rates, everyone would profit to some extent. The propaganda was put out that high tariffs were a burden to no one. It was an enchanted lamp in whose magic power to create wealth there was no limit, and which suffered no diminution of its virtue from the golden prosperity which it gave out. Of course, such a notion was the veriest superstition. As stated above, no political party ever declared such a belief; but, on the contrary, all parties, with the utmost care and with unanimity, laid down a limit, a certain carefully estimated measure, an authoritative rule to which every rate was to be adjusted, and it was recognized that positive evil, injustice, and injury would come from rates above that measure, while there would be a negative failure to secure benefits if the rates were placed lower than that measure. The trouble came not from any tariff policy declared by a political party, but from the perverted ideas and schedules of individuals in power, some superstitious worshippers of a fetish, some with premeditation and malice aforethought. To their excesses is attributable whatever losses the sane principle of a measured protective tariff may have suffered. In whatever degree certain rates in the pending bill may fall below a just measure of protection it is due to a reaction from tariff intemperance and intoxication. It is, however, as a whole, a step forward toward a normal condition and the rule of reason.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] are not present. I beg to say that I listened some hours ago with a throbbing heart and bated breath to the tremulous voice of the Senator from Michigan. The Senator from Michigan painted a sad and doleful picture of our country through the accession of the Democratic Party to power and through the adoption of the new tariff bill. It is a sad yet most remarkable fact, according to the dictum of the Republican side of this Chamber, that God in His infinite wisdom seems to have imparted to and confided in the Republican Party all the wisdom in legislation on questions of taxation and financial subjects. The Senator spoke in most glowing terms of the great revenues and the magnificent surplus which the Republican Party had gathered and garnered into our Treasury as a result of their tariff policy. I submit, Mr. President, that a highwayman might boast of his large revenues and income through similar methods with quite as much propriety.

The Senator from Michigan intimated very broadly that the President of the United States has driven the Democratic majority to this tariff measure. Far from it. The voice of an outraged and long-burdened people demanded relief through this measure, and under this Democratic measure they will get it.

We do not claim that this measure is perfect. Only a hand and mind divine could pen and frame a measure that would be perfect. But that this bill is a great relief to the burdened people of this land, to the toiler and the breadwinner, none will attempt to gainsay. It is hailed to-day with gratification by the toilers and breadwinners of our land. The only opposition that has come to this bill has been through the protected tariff barons.

Now, as to my neighbor just across the historic Delaware. Oh, the pictures of woe he has held up to us. He said something about a New Jersey goat; he dissertated very largely and very lengthily and very learnedly on the New Jersey goat. He said we had the tin-can variety, if I heard him aright.

There was a day, Mr. President, when the Jersey goat was a genuine fighting, butting goat, and we needed no aid or protection from anybody. But the Delaware sometimes goes dry, and there was a bounding across of the Jersey goat with the Pennsylvania goat that produced a sort of hybridized animal, and I regret to say the product is of a measly kind. So that may be a pardon, too, for the goat.

Mr. President, I have listened to our friend from Pennsylvania. I heard him talk to-day, and I admire him in a thousand ways. I think his religion would gee with mine. I know his sociability and social habits are largely mine. But God help his politics.

While he was discoursing to-day I had on my desk a paper from the great city of New York that has never leaned to us, the Journal of Commerce, and I thought, while he was talking and while he was drawing a picture of the sad and doleful condition of our land, I would copy from it. I find in the issue of the Journal of Commerce of October 1, 1913, this fact:

New factory for Hartford, Conn., Lovell Engine Co., capital $50,000 initial.

But he will tell me that is too far from home and too small. So I get back to my own Commonwealth:

The Pittsburgh Coal Co. will pay to-day, October 1, 1913, deferred dividends, $39.50 per share.

If your tariff proposition brought this magnificent prosperity, why in the name of God was that dividend deferred until the new sunlight came to the dawn of equality and justice under a Democratic tariff? So to-day with the hope and assurance that on the morrow or the next day the Democratic tariff will be in vogue, they declare a dividend of $39.50 a share.

You told us, too, that threatened free-trade tariff was sending emigrants from our shores. It may be this will not apply to you, but it has been the theme of your party that the Democratic Party was sending emigrants abroad. Let us see. I will have to quote from good authority, so I take a Philadelphia paper. A Philadelphia paper says:

The arrivals in September at the port of Philadelphia were 8,647.

This I copied out of to-day's Journal of Commerce:

This will increase the total over the last year. September, 1913, was the greatest in the history of the port of Philadelphia.

Pray God, why did they come here if desolation, poverty, and woe were to be their portion?

Mr. PENROSE. They are chiefly Italians settling in south Jersey.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Certainly; and they are scattered through middle Jersey, and many of them have cropped up in Pennsylvania in the rugged fastnesses of that State. I say to an Italian who may come to New Jersey and endeavor to carve his fortune out of New Jersey soil, "God speed you." If he is an honest, sober, industrious citizen, I am quite willing that we shall have multiplied sons of liberty of the Garibaldi type in New Jersey.

Now, let us see what else.

The glass workers ask more pay in Cleveland, Ohio. The workers ask more pay and ask from 13 to 14 per cent increase. It will affect 5,000 workers. President Newman predicted the acceptance of these terms.

How, pray Heaven, could they have the audacity, in the face of this cloud and gloom that you have predicted, to ask for an increase under this condition?

You tell us that Europe is growing happy and glorifying over our tariff. You told us a week or two ago that the Sharples separators were going to Germany and Heaven knows where else; that they were going to separate the milk of the Milky Way, and were going to depart from our land. Now, let us see. I quote from the same paper, October 1, that Lancaster, England, mills are to close. Why close, if we are going to be still?

But I read again:

Hope for woolen company.

How does that strike you?

I am not overenthusiastic—

Says the president of the woolen company—over the Underwood bill. Still, free wool will be of inestimable value to the manufacturers of the North and hence to the people.

That is all taken from to-day's paper. The Senator from Michigan is now here.

Outlook good in the West.

Chicago City Bank believes new tariff law will be most helpful.

But that is far away. Let us come back to the Keystone State:

PITTSBURGH, October 1.

Plate mills will resume operation.

Yet that will not do. I must go to Massachusetts:

Boston copper shares firm, reflecting New York's advance.

But that covers only a certain patch.

Now, let us go out to the great artery of trade and commerce, the Missouri Pacific Railroad. What are they doing? Are they discharging hands and shutting up shops because this Democratic tariff bill that they say was inspired by Wilson, but was in fact inspired before Wilson entered into politics? For 30 years we have pressed this tariff reform measure on every stump and hustings. Within my lifetime, since I was 18 years old, have I pleaded against the iniquities and wrongs of a system of taxation that was burdensome and onerous to the masses of the people and enriching a few. But what are they doing out in Missouri? I read that the Missouri Pacific Railroad ordered yesterday 20,000 tons of steel rails. Why in the name of God did they do that with this pall and gloom hanging over this fair land?

The Southern Railroad, the same paper says, made contracts for 6,000 tons of steel rails. Steel mills are much encouraged. Total orders placed this month will reach 550,000 tons.

The orders of the Pennsylvania and New York Central Railroads alone will reach 300,000 tons. Their export orders aggregate 20,000 tons. The New York Central has just placed an order for 75 first-class passenger cars, making, with other orders recently given, a total of 450 cars.

The United States Steel Co. have secured contracts for 300 boxes of tin for export to Canada. Still you claim that chaos, ruin, poverty, degradation, and woe are to be our portion. What would you tell us in face of this? Do you say that financial conditions are wrong and ruinous and that industry is stagnant and still?

In Pittsburgh, again, the People's National Bank regards the financial situation in this country as sound. The Murchison National Bank, of North Carolina, voted to increase its capital on yesterday to $1,000,000, and this in face of the stories you tell. I am willing to concede you are honest and believe them, but, great heavens, you have leaned so long on a crutch that you can not think of standing a freeman alone. What is in store for us when the Nashville Road has decided to buy some other road in Alabama?

Mr. President, I can not for the life of me understand what comfort and satisfaction Senators can get from depicting this scene of despair and poverty. I had always thought that it was the part of a patriot and a statesman in times of excitement, of panic, of alarm, or of gloom to pacify and calm the people by counsel and advice and not to inflame and alarm them; to hold out hope and anticipation, and not to picture gloom and disaster; rather to voice from the hustings and the great halls of legislation better days and brighter hopes.

That a shop or a mill here or there may close for individual reasons of their own, I do not deny; but that a general closing will ensue or is to-day in progress because of the passage of this bill, I do deny. Ah, no; a hundred million people blessed in this fair land can not, they never will stop. The anvils in our mills and throughout the land will still ring out the clarion notes of industry; the shafts and the spindles and the pulleys of our mills will hiss and grow hot with the busy whirl of industry, despite the forebodings of the Senators from the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. No spot on God's earth, Mr. President, is more blessed than the soil of that State; it fairly groans with undeveloped resources of iron and coal and oil and gas; its pure crystal-like waters flow through the valleys and meadows filled with sleek and fattening cattle; its hilltops at harvest time are crowned with golden grain. Surely the great God has bounteously blessed that fortunate Commonwealth. Yet amidst all these favors and blessings it is sad to contemplate that a Senator can be found in the Senate of the United States to rise in his place and sound the bugle blast of disaster, idleness, and poverty.

Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania knows, as we know and as the country knows, that this bill is practically a law this minute. Then cease the cry of "mad-dog" and help along the general weal. The people have spoken in thunder tones; the great Democratic Party has a mission to perform; the decree has gone forth; the fiat is spoken; and we shall press on to the goal of equal opportunity for all mankind—heart within and God o'er head.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, it is with some embarrassment that I proceed at this late hour to give a few facts, especially so when I am reminded of the circumstance that the Senate has been listening to the logic, the rhetoric, and the flow of oratory of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE]. So I shall not at this time enter into a general discussion of the merits of this bill. I have formerly called attention to some of the objectionable features and offered amendments proposing to change the provisions which, in my judgment, will do an injustice to the farmer of this country.

While I believe in the principles of protection, I have always maintained that it should apply to the industries for the benefit of the people who are most in need of protection. I have often said that I believed that any industry controlled by a monopoly or trust is in need of very little or no protection unless it be for the benefit of labor employed by such a monopoly or trust; but under the provisions of this bill those engaged in the production of the basic necessities of life, or, in other words, in the production of food products, are placed in open competition with the entire world.

Mr. President, I believe it is true, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] has just stated, that this is not a free-trade bill; but it is true that it is a free-trade measure so far as the basic necessities of life are concerned; it is a free-trade bill so far as the food products produced by the farmers are concerned. But, Mr. President, I have been reminded of the fact that the hour is getting late, and I do not wish unnecessarily to delay the Senate, so I shall offer to the Senate only a few brief remarks, especially touching upon the agricultural industries of the United States.

I emphasize what I have so often said—that the system of protection can not be maintained unless even-handed justice is extended to the industries and all the people of our entire country. This bill is protective in spots; it extends protection to certain industries, but denies to the industry which is the foundation of all our wealth the benefit of sharing in this protection.

I care very little what you call the tariff duties as applied to certain industries in this bill. The fact of the matter is that some of the industries which could easily be dispensed with are given a certain amount of protection. On the other hand the toiling millions engaged in farming, who produce the basic necessities of life, must content themselves with free trade.

I believe this an unjust discrimination against the farmer. I emphasize what I said before, that we are adopting a policy contrary to the policy of the leading nations of the world. In my opinion it is not a wise policy; it certainly is not giving encouragement to those who have been engaged in the production of the articles now placed on the free list, and the only excuse that can be offered will be to say that we believe it will not hurt them. But if it is not going to injure them, why take away from these most deserving people any of the benefits which they heretofore enjoyed? If the provisions of this bill will not be the means of reducing the price to the producer, then how is it going to benefit the consumer? The makers of this bill have maintained that it will not reduce the price to the producers; time will tell what benefit it will extend to the consumer.

Mr. President, the chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. SIMMONS] was kind enough to give to the Senate this afternoon an estimate prepared, as he stated, by the experts who have for years been employed to do this work of the receipts and expenditures of the United States for the fiscal year 1914-15. I find that the estimate of customs duties for 1914 is $270,000,000. I find in the Statistical Abstract of the United States for 1912 that the customs duties collected in 1909 amounted to $246,212,643.39; in 1910 to $289,933,519.45; in 1911 to $322,529,200.79; and in 1912 to $321,612,190.66.

Mr. President, I want some Senator on this floor to tell me whence this $270,000,000 estimated by your own experts is to come? Let us be perfectly honest about this matter. An effort has been made on this floor to mislead the people of the United States and to make them believe that from now on no customs or tariff duties will be collected. You admit in your own estimate that for the year 1914 you propose to collect under this very bill $270,000,000. On an average that will be a reduction only of about $50,000,000 from the amount which has been collected under the Republican administration.

The chairman of the Finance Committee—and I wish he were here, because I do not desire to make a misstatement—as I understood him, said that under this bill we will remit to the American public one-third of what has formerly been collected under our customs tariff laws. Mr. President, I am not able to understand how that computation is made. It can not be sustained under this bill according to the statement presented by the chairman of the Finance Committee, which he says has been prepared at the direction of the majority party; and which he claims to be correct. I am going to show in a few moments that more than one-half of this $50,000,000 will be lost from the revenue formerly collected under a Republican tariff law, which gave protection to the agricultural industry, just as the Democrats are giving protection in this bill to the manufacturing industries of this country.

I believe there is not a Senator on this floor who will deny that there is a discrimination in this bill against the toiling millions who live on the farm. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to read all the figures which I have here; I shall only give a few of them. But I will ask unanimous consent to have the table which I have here printed in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

The table referred to is as follows:

Estimates of receipts and expenditures of the United States.

	1914	1915
RECEIPTS.
Customs.....	$270,000,000	$249,000,000
Internal revenue (ordinary).....	305,000,000	305,000,000
Internal revenue (excise tax).....	38,000,000	39,000,000
Internal revenue (income tax).....	66,000,000	83,000,000
Sale of public lands.....	5,000,000	5,000,000
Miscellaneous.....	55,000,000	55,000,000
Postal service.....	290,000,000	290,000,000
Total.....	1,029,000,000	1,026,000,000
EXPENDITURES.
Civil and miscellaneous.....	175,000,000	175,000,000
War Department.....	178,000,000	178,000,000
Navy Department.....	147,000,000	145,000,000
Indian Service.....	20,000,000	20,000,000
Pensions.....	180,000,000	180,000,000
Interest on public debt.....	23,000,000	23,000,000
Postal service.....	290,000,000	290,000,000
Total.....	1,013,000,000	1,008,000,000
Surplus.....	16,000,000	18,000,000

Mr. GRONNA. One would imagine that from now on economy will be practiced; that the people of the United States will be benefited by an adherence to the principle of economy; but I find in this same statement that for the year 1914 it is proposed to expend $1,013,000,000 of the people's money; I also find that for the year 1915 it is proposed to expend $1,008,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States.

I am simply calling attention to these facts to tell the truth and to show to the people of this country that while it is proposed under the provisions of this bill to collect some $83,000,000 by what is called an income tax, it is also proposed to collect $270,000,000 under the old system of a customs tariff, which, according to Democratic doctrine, must be paid by the people of the United States.

I indorse the income-tax provision of this bill; and, if it were a separate measure, I should be very glad to vote for it. But as it is contained in this bill, which does an injustice to a class which has never unduly profited under the system of protection, and upon whom this burden should not be imposed, I can not vote for the bill.

Who will pay the $270,000,000? You have so often complained about the system of taking money from the pockets of the people under our Republican administrations. We have seldom, if ever, as I said, collected more than $300,000,000 a year. You are proposing, under this bill, to reduce this amount approximately $50,000,000. Will the ultimate consumer get it, or will it disappear in the pockets of those who, according to the platform pronouncements of Democratic campaign speakers, are now receiving too great a benefit from the tariff?

The campaign promises last fall of the Democrats included a tariff bill which should reduce the high cost of living. In the discussion of this bill the Democrats have attempted to justify the different rates assessed by holding forth the benefits to the consumer of the proposed rate. The advantage or disadvantage to the producer has apparently not occupied the Democratic mind, so far as the discussion in the Senate has shown, although echoes from the Democratic caucus have indicated that when Democratic Senators really spoke their minds they held the welfare of the manufacturers in their own States a matter of some concern. The justification of the measure which has been offered to the Senate and to the public, however, has been the benefit which the consumer was supposed to derive from it.

Now, if the tariff is to be revised so as to especially benefit the ultimate consumer, it would seem logical to reduce and remove the duties on the articles that the ultimate consumer buys—the finished products. Is that a distinctive feature of this bill? It is not. The greatest reductions have been made on goods that the consumer does not buy, but that the manufacturer buys, and out of which he manufactures articles that he sells to the consumer. The removal of duties on raw materials directly benefits the manufacturer who uses those materials, instead of the consuming public. Ultimately the consumer may receive some benefit from the cheaper raw material that the manufacturer gets, but at best it is problematical. In the case of hides, the best illustration which we have so far had of the result of placing the raw material on the free list, the removal of the duties does not appear to have benefited the consumer in the least. The price of shoes and harness increased instead of decreasing.

The noticeable feature of this bill is that it places raw materials, especially those produced by the farmer, on the free list, while retaining duties on the articles manufactured from those materials, and the benefit of these reductions, instead of going to the consumer, is more likely to go mainly to the manufacturer.

What is especially objectionable in this bill, however, is the unfair way in which the different classes of producers are treated. This bill is in effect protective to a certain extent, no matter what may be said about the principle on which it was drafted. It is protective to the extent that it gives the manufacturer a greater or less degree of protection—some of them a very high degree; as, for instance, the silk manufacturer—while compelling the farmer to sell most of his products in competition with the entire world.

It is estimated that the customs duties collected under this bill will be $50,000,000 less than the amount collected under the Payne law. At least half of this reduction will be on products that the farmer has to sell.

I wish at this point to insert in my remarks a table showing the revenues from duties on farm products under the Payne law and under the bill now under consideration. This table was prepared before the bill passed the Senate. The only material change which has been made, however, is the restoration of the House duty of 20 cents per bushel on flaxseed, which it is estimated will increase the revenue from this duty $300,000.

Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate to read and comment on this table, but I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Revenues from duties on farm products in 1912, and estimated revenues from duties on farm products under tariff bill as reported to Senate.

Article.	Imports, 1912.	Revenue, 1912.	Proposed rate.	Estimated imports.	Estimated revenue.
Horses.....	$335,684	$68,323	10 per cent.....	$475,000	$47,500
Mules.....	53,053	34,590	do.....	137,500	13,750
Cattle.....	4,486,306	1,214,481	Free.....
Swine.....	10,832	1,497	do.....
Sheep.....	123,832	20,326	do.....
Other animals.....	79,407	15,880	10 per cent.....	100,000	10,000
Barley.....	1,929,214	$30,542	15 cents.....	1,300,000	300,000
Oats.....	1,053,609	408,156	6 cents.....	945,000	162,000
Rice.....	4,185,086	1,323,338	Various.....	3,970,000	853,000
Corn.....	47,858	8,008	Free.....
Wheat.....	998,014	352,245	do.....
Rye.....	111,323	13,395	do.....
Broom corn.....	157,969	4,024	do.....
Buckwheat.....	15,967	3,025	do.....
Butter and substitutes.....	236,483	60,337	2½ cents per pound.....	325,000	32,500
Cheese and substitutes.....	8,683,947	2,760,900	do.....	11,000,000	375,000
Beans.....	1,456,656	371,252	25 cents per bushel.....	1,600,000	250,000
Beets.....	147,466	15,095	5 per cent.....	153,000	7,500
Hay.....	6,472,376	2,796,855	$2 per ton.....	9,000,000	2,400,000
Honey.....	51,706	16,284	10 cents per gallon.....	60,000	11,000
Hops.....	2,223,895	477,313	16 cents per pound.....	1,575,000	560,000
Onions.....	1,233,907	572,819	20 cents per bushel.....	1,350,000	360,000
Garlic.....	283,259	93,332	1 cent per pound.....	275,000	90,000
Peas.....	1,897,707	299,709	Various.....	1,661,500	116,070
Flaxseed.....	13,048,513	1,718,065	15 cents per bushel.....	11,000,000	900,000
Straw.....	56,891	15,402	50 cents per ton.....	75,000	7,500
Vegetables.....	1,035,163	252,633	15 per cent.....	1,505,000	225,750
Poultry.....	154,175	33,344	Various.....	156,000	18,000
Eggs.....	150,986	54,925	Free.....
Flax straw.....	6,990	853	do.....
Milk, fresh.....	6,283	986	do.....
Cream.....	923,787	56,012	do.....
Potatoes.....	7,175,376	3,434,535	do.....
Wool.....	33,141,408	14,454,234	do.....
Hair of Angora goat, etc.....	632,330	243,591	do.....
Total.....		32,026,266			6,739,570

Estimated revenue and estimated imports taken from tariff handbook prepared by Finance Committee. Fruits not included in above statement. Where the article is placed on the free list the handbook contains no estimate as to probable imports.

Mr. GRONNA. This table includes only such articles as the farmer actually sells and does not include fruits or sugar cane. On the articles included there were collected in 1912 duties to the amount of more than $32,000,000, while according to the estimate of the committee under the bill as reported to the Senate there would be collected on those same articles only about $6,700,000. With the rate on flaxseed raised to 20 cents per bushel, this would increase the duties to $7,000,000. While on all products the duties have been reduced from, in round numbers, $300,000,000 to $250,000,000, on such products as the farmer has for sale the duties have been reduced from $32,000,000 to $7,000,000.

In other words, while the duties to be collected from farm products under this bill are only 22 per cent of the duties on the same products under the Payne law, the duties on other products will amount to 90 per cent of what they were under the Payne law in 1912. Is it necessary to go any further to show the unfairness of the treatment of the farmer by the framers of this law?

I am not opposed to the reduction of a number of the rates contained in the Payne law, and I have offered amendments to this bill further reducing some of its duties, which amendments have promptly been voted down by Democratic Senators. What I am opposed to is the unfair treatment accorded the agricultural interests in this bill. There are parts of this bill which I could heartily support if standing alone. I am glad to see the income tax finally made a part of our system of raising revenues, and would vote for it if it were a separate measure. There are many rates in this bill which I believe to be preferable to the rates in the Payne tariff law. I do not feel, however, that the fact that certain features appeal to me would justify me in voting for the bill as a whole when those features are coupled with such a glaring discrimination against the American farmer as this bill embodies.

When a Republican President, by offering the Canadian reciprocity agreement, proposed to make the American farmer sell his products in competition with Canada, while he was still compelled to do his purchasing in a protected market, I felt it my duty to oppose such a policy. In the course of the consideration of the pending bill I have felt it just as much my duty to oppose the same policy when presented by a Democratic administration, even though the duties on the products which the farmer buys have been reduced somewhat. The slight benefit which the farmer may derive from the reduction of duties on what he buys will not begin to be a compensation for the losses which this law will make him suffer.

For the reasons stated I shall vote against the bill.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed as an appendix to my remarks certain extracts from the Washington Post and also an editorial from the Washington Star.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Saturday, Sept. 27, 1913.]

PROMISES CHEAP BEEF—EX-PRESIDENT OF PERU SAYS 10 CENTS WILL BUY POUND—CANAL TO AID IMPORTERS—AUGUSTO LEGUIA SEES BIG SAVING BY CUTTING 4,000 MILES OFF COMMERCIAL LINES TO HIS COUNTRY—WANTS TO INTEREST SECRETARY HUSTON IN BREEDING NEW TYPE OF HORSE.

Augusto B. Leguia, former President of Peru, has arrived in Washington bearing a message of hope to the American people. He is going to reduce the high cost of living. He is going to see that the American people get beef at less than one-third what it costs to-day.

Beef will sell in this country for 10 cents a pound, according to former President Leguia, when the Panama Canal is opened. "When the canal is opened," he said last night at the Shoreham Hotel, where he is stopping, "the commercial line between the United States and Peru will be shortened by at least 4,000 miles."

TALKED TO EXPORTERS.

Before the American Manufacturers and Exporters' Association in New York Thursday night Mr. Leguia made the same contention. He said there is enough pasture in Peru to comfortably feed cattle for the entire consumption of the United States.

Mr. Leguia will remain in this city for at least three days. During that time he will visit many officials of the Government in an attempt to strengthen relations between this country and Peru. It is understood that he will call upon Secretary Bryan this morning. He also will try to see President Wilson.

It is also understood that Mr. Leguia will call upon Secretary Huston and try to interest him in the production of a new breed of horses on the grazing lands of Peru. The former President owns more than 400,000 acres of grazing land and wants to obtain a thoroughly American type of horse for his country.

CANADA PRODUCTS SHIPPED.

ST. PAUL, MINN., September 26.

Canadian butter and farm products are being shipped to commission men here and held in bonded warehouses under the prospect of the tariff, which it was expected would lower the duty approximately $1,000 a carload. Several large shipments of produce also are being held on the Canadian side of the border.

[From the editorial page of the Washington Star, Tuesday, Sept. 30, 1913.]

REVENUE AND EXPENDITURES.

Chairman SIMMONS's latest statement concerning the new tariff contains two very interesting points—(1) a surplus of $18,000,000 will be produced, and (2) the Government will be well provided for.

Some weeks ago an estimate given out fixed the surplus at only $2,000,000. That was drawing the line pretty fine—too fine. It was not advisable to leave the matter in that shape. A slump in customs receipts for some unexpected reason might cause embarrassment. Never a deficit when avoidable. The larger figure makes things safer. There is a fair leeway in eighteen or twenty millions.

That the Government would be well supported was to be expected. The Democratic Party, for all its charges of waste against the Republican Party, would not dare signalize its return to complete control by a policy of skimp. There is too much at stake. The Government's needs are too apparent and too pressing. In the 18 years that have passed since the Democracy controlled both the Presidency and Congress Uncle Sam has grown considerably, and it takes a good big sum now to fit him out properly.

There are Democrats—Mr. BAILEY, of Pennsylvania, is one—who are on record on the economy issue, and, having charged extravagance on the Republicans so long and so severely, are in earnest about applying the pruning knife; but they will find it difficult, if not impossible, to bring a majority of their party friends around to their point of view. With many others the economy cry was but a campaign cry, forgotten as soon as the campaign ended; and now they would have Mr. BAILEY and his friends "forget it."

What the effect will be on the electorate when it is discovered that the new tariff, whatever its merits, has not revised the cost of living downward, and that the Democrats in power can not redeem their promise of reducing appropriations $300,000,000 a year, is a question. "Never prophesy unless ye know." Never promise unless you have reason to believe you can redeem your promise.

The Democracy's danger is in the extravagance indulged in last year by its flamboyant stump speakers, who, with a great wealth of language and nothing else, went from State to State promising all things to all men and committing their party to utter impossibilities. Hundreds of thousands of votes were obtained in that way, and a reckoning approaches. A billion-dollar session of Congress? Terrible! And yet here it comes under Democratic auspices. Say what you please, the world do move.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when this bill came over from the House it had in it a provision as follows:

That all goods, wares, articles, and merchandise manufactured wholly or in part in any foreign country by convict labor shall not be entitled to entry at any of the ports of the United States, and the importation thereof is hereby prohibited, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary for the enforcement of this provision.

When the bill was in the Senate I offered the following amendment:

That all goods, wares, articles, and merchandise manufactured wholly or in part in any foreign country by convict labor, or by children under 14 years of age, or by children under 16 years of age employed for more than 8 hours per day or 48 hours per week, or by boys under 18 years of age or women over 16 years of age employed for more than 9 hours per day or 54 hours per week, shall not be entitled to entry at any ports of the United States, and the importation thereof is hereby prohibited; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to provide such regulations as may be necessary for the enforcement of this provision.

The Committee on Finance of the Senate offered, in lieu of the House amendment, an amendment which I shall not take time to read, but which I shall ask to insert in the Record in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

That no goods, wares, articles, and merchandise—except immediate products of agriculture, forests, and fisheries—manufactured wholly or in part in any foreign country by convict labor, or principally by children under 14 years of age in countries where there are no laws regulating child labor, shall be entitled to entry at any of the ports of the United States, and the importation thereof is hereby prohibited. Any shipment consigned for entry at any of the ports of the United States of goods, wares, articles, and merchandise—except immediate products of agriculture, forests, and fisheries—manufactured in any foreign country, Province, or dependency, where the industrial employment of convicts is not prohibited by law, or of children not regulated by law, shall be accompanied by an affidavit of the shipper of such merchandise, or his legal agent, to the effect that the merchandise covered by the invoice has not been manufactured wholly or in part by convict labor or principally by children under 14 years of age, the form of the affidavit to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, who is also authorized and directed to issue such further regulations and to collect all information pertinent thereto through cooperation with the Consular Service of the United States, as may be necessary for the enforcement of the provision.

Mr. BORAH. After the bill went back to conference the amendment which was adopted in the Senate, although an emasculation of the amendment which I offered, was cut out, and the conference report goes back to the original provision as it came over from the House; so that the bill as it now stands has eliminated from it everything in regard to the subject matter of the importation of goods made by child labor.

When I offered this amendment I was perfectly aware, of course, that it was considered radical, but I did think that the amendment as adopted by the Senate certainly could not be considered radical by anyone. Nevertheless, the conference report has eliminated even that, so that the matter stands exactly as it came from the House in the first instance. I think this is a mistake. I think it was an unwise and an unjust thing to do.

I perfectly understand the general theory by which some people figure that we can get cheaper goods into this country. They believe that we can have cheaper goods and cheaper living without cheaper labor—a consummation devoutly to be wished.

I perfectly understand, also, how desirous we all are of having the things which we buy cheap and the things which we sell dear—a rather difficult problem in practical economics, but a theory of perennial charm.

I understand, also, that there is a class of people in this country, growing more and more every year, who desire foreign-made goods even at the same price in preference to home-made goods. There seems to be an exhilaration about the touch of the foreign-made cloth that the home weave fails to excite. They belong to the class of people who prize the acquisition of a foreign accent above all earthly things.

I can know of these things, and I can comprehend them; but I can not understand the calculating, insatiate greed which would have things a little cheaper from the hands of the unhoused, unclothed, and almost unfed children who work in the hell holes of Europe.

The conditions which exist there, I presume, are unknown to a great many who have not had occasion and time to go into the condition of affairs. There can be no ground for cutting out this amendment with reference to the importation of child-made goods other than the hope that we may have the goods a pittance cheaper. We therefore advertise to the world that we, a great Christian Nation, are willing to live, to save, and to garner at the expense of those who, though still children, are old, sad in face, broken limbed, and broken hearted, the miserable annual spawn of this age of avarice and greed. These children eat and sleep and live and die in places where those who would benefit by their labor would not kennel their dogs. Yet we take the position that we prefer to have the goods under those conditions rather than not have them at what is supposed to be a little higher price.

Some call this economy, and we may flatter ourselves that it is twentieth century statesmanship—and I rather think it is—but whatever we call it, it is in fact nothing but narrow, selfish, inhuman, brutal greed, the base and groveling instinct of a wealth-grabbing, pleasure-hunting era.

But there is another influence which we have always had to contend with in the matter of child-labor legislation, whether at home or abroad. We have in this country a class of manufacturers, particularly in the cotton industry, though not all of them, who are in every instinct of their sordid natures slave drivers and slave masters. They would not hesitate, if they had the power to do so, to weave the flesh and blood of the children of the poor into cotton fabrics. As a fact, figuratively speaking, they do do so. I have in my office photographs of scenes in these mills, from Puritan New England to the Gulf coast, showing how these children, mere children, tug and toll by day and by night, literally being worked to death in order to swell the already swollen dividends of the operators.

To my mind, there is nothing so pathetic, neither is there anything so menacing to the citizenship of this Republic, as the fact that this happens here in our country continuously, year after year, and there seems no sufficient appreciation of the evil.

Mr. President, this influence, sinister and selfish and overshadowing, is always alert for just such proposed legislation as this.

They regard any legislation in whatever form it appears as an attack upon their citadel of brutal greed and selfishness, and therefore they oppose it though it related alone at this time to foreign importations.

So, Mr. President, we have had to deal not only with the importer who flooded Congress with telegrams the moment this amendment was offered, and who seems to be a power in the land in these days, but we have to contend with this unnatural combination which would work unto exhaustion and for a mere pittance the children of the Republic.

I do not think that the defeat of this amendment will give any particular gratification or satisfaction to the Members of Congress after they have come to consider it. I do not think that they will feel very proud to say to their constituency, the manhood and the womanhood of America, "we have possibly given you some cheaper goods, a pittance cheaper if it reaches you and is not taken up by the middleman; and if you will go with me I will show you a photographic view of those from whom we take the goods to make them cheaper."

Mr. President, I have no sympathy nor no tolerance with that rule or principle of legislation which regards the human being as so many foot-pounds of mechanical power to be worked out at the highest pitch and then cast like a hulk upon the refuse heap.

Every law which a Republic writes should have in it not only a principle of economy, but it should have in it also the principle of humanity, a consideration not only for the economic well-being of its citizens, but a consideration for the manhood and the womanhood upon which the Republic has to rest. There is a soul and a human heart, as well as a stomach and a sensitiveness to hunger, in this being to whom God has given dominion over this earth.

If there is any one thing going unnoticed, and unchecked, and unchallenged in this Republic it is the undermining of the manhood and the womanhood of this country by destroying the children—making them old in their youth—upon whom the Republic must rest in the future if it is to rest substantially at all. How happy, oh, happy, we will be to go home to our constituency and say we think we have gotten something cheap from Europe, and while it may wear the stain of a child's tired and feeble touch, it will bring great comfort, no doubt, to you. You greatly mistake your constituency—they want no such goods.

Now, what would have been the effect of this amendment? The effect would have been to either make them conform to humane laws with reference to the employment of children or to stay out of our markets. They would not have stayed out of our markets. They would have complied with the humane laws which we requested them to comply with and would have come into our markets anyway. They would not have stayed out. We would have, simply by refusing to share with them their infamy, compelled them to share their profits with their employees by giving them better hours and employing under more humane conditions. It was a just thing to do. It was a moral thing to do. It ought not to have required any courage, only an ordinary sense of decency, a common touch of human sympathy.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I recognize the impropriety of detaining the Senate at this late hour, and I assure my colleagues that I have no intention of so doing. I simply want to call the attention of the Senate before this bill is finally voted on to the fact that burlaps are left on the free list while grain bags receive a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem. An article used throughout the South is free. An article essential to the farmer of the Northwest and the Pacific coast is put upon the dutiable list. Both are similar articles.

Mr. SHIVELY. Will the Senator allow me right there?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. SHIVELY. Does the Senator refer to cotton bagging as free?

Mr. PENROSE. I refer to burlaps.

Mr. SHIVELY. Well, that is cotton bagging. I understood the Senator to be making the point that there was something sectional about the bill in that respect.

Mr. PENROSE. It seems to me it is largely sectional in that respect.

Mr. SHIVELY. Burlaps are just as free to the northern farmer—the wheat raiser and the wool grower—as burlaps are free to the southern cotton raiser.

Mr. PENROSE. I know, but it is used primarily by the southern cotton grower.

Mr. SHIVELY. Burlaps?

Mr. PENROSE. I think so. The great consumption of burlaps is in the South; I think the figures will show that; while grain bags, which are an exactly similar article, and are used by the farmer in the Northwest, are put on the dutiable list.

Mr. SHIVELY. If the Senator will reflect a moment he will see that both are placed on an equality in that respect. The farmer will get his burlaps free if he sees fit to make his own bags just as the cotton raiser gets his burlaps free to sew on his cotton.

Mr. PENROSE. The differential is much larger in this bill than in the present law. I know the question of burlaps is a sore one with the Democratic Party, and I do not intend to press it or to get into a controversy this late in the evening. All I know is that the granges, in the grain district especially on the Pacific coast, universally condemn this 10 per cent duty on grain bags, while cotton bagging is free, and they have written to me quite numerously.

Another evidence of the sectionalism of the bill is the 1 cent per pound on rice, while wheat is on the free list. If that is not sectional I do not know what is. Perhaps the Senator from Indiana can explain how that affects the rice fields of Pennsylvania and North Dakota.

Mr. SHIVELY. I presume the Senator knows that in one instance the article is an article of import from which the Government receives substantial revenue, and in the other case the article is export and the Government receives practically no revenue.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator means wheat?

Mr. SHIVELY. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. I think the Senator understands that there will be plenty of importations of wheat under this bill.

Mr. SHIVELY. What is the Senator thinking about? The last year 143,000,000 bushels of wheat were exported.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] were here, I would ask him if we are likely to produce enough wheat this year for the consumption of the American people.

Mr. SHIVELY. Does the Senator say we are not likely to produce enough wheat? Is the Senator banking on starvation?

Mr. PENROSE. No; we will be importing Canadian wheat.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. I have looked into that matter quite closely, and I am free to state that so far as spring wheat is concerned there will be no spring wheat exported from the United States during this year.

Mr. SHIVELY. Does the Senator mean by that that there is a short crop; that there is a scarcity?

Mr. GRONNA. I do not state that there is a scarcity, but there is a short crop. Last year we had a surplus.

Mr. SHIVELY. There is a scarcity of wheat, and therefore the Senator concludes that there will not be a large exportation.

Mr. GRONNA. That is the statement of the Senator from Indiana. I say that the crop is shorter this year than it was last year. It is an average crop. The yield is an average yield.

Mr. SHIVELY. I was curious to arrive at the philosophy of the situation.

Mr. PENROSE. All I state is that the product of the South receives a duty of 1 cent per pound and the product of the North is on the free list. I also maintain that with the machinery in use rice can be produced as cheaply in Arkansas as wheat in Minnesota, with the added cost of flooding the rice fields by pumping. This cost is but a small fraction of the 60 cents a bushel imposed upon rice in this bill.

I have already referred to the duty on the hair of the Angora goat, and I will not enlarge on that subject.

I observe with very great regret that the Senate conferees were unable to agree to the House provision on the anti-dumping clause in the House bill. This imposed a duty not exceeding 15 per cent additional on foreign goods sold here below the foreign market price. It was cut out at the request, apparently, of the Senate conferees on account of their objection to it.

Anyone who is familiar with tariff legislation knows that many of these duties are not prohibitive or protective, but serve in the capacity of a dumping provision. They are only nominal. If you include the free list, the average rate in the Payne law is between 17 and 18 per cent. There are many duties which simply act as an antidumping provision. The duties in the pending bill are very greatly reduced, and no dumping clause is added, and it should have been added.

I also observe with great regret, Mr. President, that the 5 per cent reduction on goods brought here in American vessels in the House bill and stricken out in the Senate was not put back in conference. It is said that this was done because the treaties must not be impaired. It seems to me that is a judicial question, and we might well have taken this step in the interest of American shipping and ascertained later on whether it would hold or not.

Mr. President, in addition to the sectional features of this bill, I want here to assert to the Senate, with all due solemnity, that since the inauguration of the civil service in the Federal Government there never has been a more unscrupulous, a more radical, or a more vicious invasion of the civil-service principle than the paragraph in the bill which opens the way for some 1,000 employees who will be permanent, in violation of the civil-service law, and legislates so that the appropriation can be increased any year, thereby increasing the number. The conference agreement provides that these men eventually may take the places of the other employees in the Internal Revenue office when not engaged in their own work.

Mr. President, when the civil-service associations of the different States of the United States and the vast body of good citizens all over the country who are pledged to civil service become conversant with this outrageous and flagrant violation of every principle to which the Government is committed, they will hereafter look with scorn and scoffing on the high moral professions of Democracy.

Mr. President, the complete departure from the traditional economic policy of this country which the party temporarily in power has made in framing the pending tariff bill, a policy that has been indorsed by a majority of American voters at nearly every opportunity which has been presented for the last 50 years—and I include in this generalization the national election of 1912—leads me to say a few words by way of review, first, of the manner in which the bill was prepared for introduction; secondly, the way it was handled after it was introduced; and, thirdly, of the merits or demerits of the measure itself. This program may seem formidable, but I shall make my remarks brief. The friends of this bill have been eloquent in pointing out the care with which it was prepared and have claimed that ample opportunity was afforded to all parties interested to be heard, both manufacturers and importers, and that it was after hearing both sides and considering the interests of both, not forgetting, either, the interests of the ultimate consumer, that the rates which appear in the bill were selected. Now, I do not need to be told of the impropriety of criticizing the actions of the other House of Congress, nor do I intend to transgress the rule, but certainly a review of the career of this bill from the beginning would be defective if it did not deal with the feature of the hearings which were held prior to the introduction of the bill.

The reports of the hearings themselves, as well as the many statements, oral and written, which have been submitted to me show that before the tribunal which conducted the hearings one set of suitors was received with open arms and courteous treatment, while the other set met with a chilly atmosphere and treatment that sometimes bordered upon the discourteous. American manufacturers pleading that their business should not be destroyed by legislation met with sardonic smiles and caustic cross-examinations, while those who represented importing interests seeking for a reduction or removal of duty, entirely indifferent to the effects of such action upon the interests of any persons but themselves, were received and welcomed as if they were public benefactors, as were certain sectional interests asking for certain protective duties. This striking difference in the demeanor of the majority toward the two classes of interests was reflected strongly in the bill which was subsequently reported. It is true that, owing to bungling, some of the rates in the present law have been, through misuse of language, raised, yet the bill represents sweeping and enormous reductions in duty; the rates are even lower than those proposed in Democratic tariff bills of recent years, and the general impression one receives from a perusal of the measure is that where there was not deliberate discrimination shown there was a lack of intelligence exhibited.

However, the bill, such as it was, passed the House of Representatives with the aid of the enormous Democratic majority there, and in view of the fact that the House had its mandate direct from the people and that the bill which the House passed was the bill that was favored by the one man who seems to have more power than both Houses of Congress combined, it would seem that that was the bill that should have been enacted into law. Strange to say, however, not only did not the Senate fail to pass the House measure, but they kept it in committee for over two months and made in it no fewer than 676 amendments. Six hundred and seventy-six amendments to a measure which was passed by an overwhelming majority of the Democratic House of Representatives and which had the delighted approval of the Executive! Many of these amendments were made by the Finance Committee; many more were made by the party caucus, which was resorted to for the first time in the history of the Senate; and still more were made on the floor of the Senate. In fact, the tinkering continued up to the very last moment before the bill was put to a vote, and it may not be amiss to call attention to the fact that a large number of these amendments were made necessary by crudities in the bill which escaped the notice of those who framed the bill and passed it through the Senate, and who acted only when their attention was invited by Republican Senators. It is no wonder that a bill produced under such auspices is what it is, namely, a mass of sweeping and unreasonable changes in duty, involved phraseology, and senseless discriminations.

It can not be said that the efforts of the conference committee resulted, upon the whole, in any improvement to the bill. Their action did not go deep enough for that.

All through the bill we find persistent reductions of duty in the face of increasing importations under the present low rates and in the face of the heavier manufacturing costs of American production. Granting, for the purpose of argument, that some of the present low rates could be reduced without serious disadvantage to our own interests and to the benefit of the Government's revenues, what sense is there in heavy cuts in rates that are already competitive and under which large importations are being made? Yet, that is just what has been done, and there are even instances where, notwithstanding that the imported goods have already more than half the market, the rates have been reduced.

In some remarks which I had the honor of making on the chemical schedule during the course of the debates I pointed out the inconsistencies, incongruities, and palpable discriminations in the great chemical industry, and I regret now to find that the conference did not utilize its opportunity to correct them. In spite of all that has been said showing the inapplicability of ad valorem rates to chemicals, the faint effort which the Senate made to substitute specific rates was abandoned in conference. A little bit of logrolling in connection with the placing of cyanides on the free list here comes to mind. It can not have escaped observation that the Senators who requested this action represented States in which wool raising and beet-sugar production are important industries. Was the free listing of cyanide, which they consume, a consolation to them in view of the free listing of the wool and sugar, which they produce? I fear that when these Senators take the sense of their constituents on the subject they will realize that the people will not approve the exchange.

In Schedule B the conference accepted the action of the Senate in free listing cement and asphalt, but rejected amendments intended to secure a consistent classification of china and glassware. The bill is that much worse. I notice, however, that the relatively high rates on fluorspar and mica were not lowered.

Of all the industries marked for slaughter, apart from lumber, sugar, and wool, those represented in the metal schedule of the tariff law have suffered the worst. Pig iron has had all the duty removed. I know that the statement has been frequently made—so that some people now think it is true—that no duty on pig iron is necessary because of the cheapness of its production in this country; but the stubborn fact remains, and the figures prove it, that pig iron is produced even in England at a price that will undersell American pig on the Atlantic seaboard and for some distance into the interior.

This metal schedule has peculiar interest for me, and I find in scanning it what would be called by the opposition a joker if found in a Republican tariff bill. Paragraph 522 of the free list enumerates wrought iron among the other products there made free of duty, and yet in paragraph 105 of the dutiable list provision is made for the various commercial forms of wrought iron. What will the customs officers do? Wrought iron clearly does not belong on the free list. It is a machine-shop product, can be made only in small quantities, and the labor cost in it is considerably higher than in the production of steel. The steel paragraph, 112, presents another anomaly, and ingots, slabs, blooms, and billets made by the Bessemer, Siemens-Martin, open-hearth, or similar process not containing alloys are made free of duty, while steel castings made by the same process are dutiable. What facts or figures have you to justify this discrimination? Steel products made by other processes or containing alloys are covered by a duty of 15 per cent, and I am not sure that the differences in origin of the steel can be revealed by mere inspection. A comparison of this last-named paragraph, 112, with paragraph 115 reveals another anomaly. Steel bars, dutiable at 15 per cent under paragraph 112, are to be admitted at 10 per cent under paragraph 115 if they have been "cold-rolled, cold-drawn, cold-hammered, or polished in any way in addition to the ordinary process of hot rolling or hammering." It is not my purpose to go further into detail, but it is evident that the revision of the metal schedule has proceeded in utter recklessness of its consequences to domestic interests and without any intelligent effort to balance the rates between raw material or semifinished products and the finished products. One curious fact I notice is that, in spite of the long speeches made here denunciatory of the Aluminum Trust, the rate carried by table, kitchen, and hospital utensils of aluminum is among the highest in the metal schedule and is higher than the rate carried by the basket clause of the metal schedule. There are many curious provisions in this schedule, but there are two to which I wish to call particular attention. They are paragraphs 155 and 164. The former deals with various lead products and articles, including pig lead, sheet lead, lead pipe, and lead wire and levies an ad valorem duty "on the lead contained therein." Paragraph 164 deals with zinc-bearing ores and levies an ad valorem duty "upon the zinc contained therein." The question that comes to my mind is, What is the value upon which this ad valorem rate is to be levied? Is it to be upon the value of the lead or the zinc as it is in the condition imported mixed with or in company with other material, or is it the value of the lead or the zinc after it has been segregated from the other materials? It is manifest that there would be a great difference in these relative values. It is equally manifest that an ad valorem rate of duty levied in this manner is preposterous.

SCHEDULE D.

I shall pass over the wreck of Schedule D, wood and wood products, with the remark that while the patriotic attempt to encourage and extend the use of Maine box shooks by enlarging the preference granted to them when imported filled with foreign fruit seems to have failed, some vestigial phrases of the proposed amendment have been left in paragraph 174 with the effect of making it unintelligible. It is clear enough that the sides, tops, and bottoms of the boxes will be free of duty, but what of the end pieces?

SCHEDULE E.

On the subject of the sugar schedule, while deeply sympathizing with the people of Louisiana and our other sugar-producing localities in their misfortune, it seems very singular to me that the Democratic majority gave this industry what it denied to all others, namely, some time to adjust itself to the new conditions placed upon it. This is additional evidence of the sectional discriminations which disfigure the pending tariff bill.

SCHEDULE F.

While it is true that no changes were made in the tobacco schedule, it is proper here to point out two new provisions in other sections of the bill which have a bearing upon the domestic cigar and tobacco industry. I refer to paragraph B of section 5 and to the new matter added to paragraph M of the same section. The former establishes absolute free trade in cigars and tobacco from the Philippine Islands. The latter permits the importation of foreign tobacco in bond, its manufacture into cigars in a bonded manufacturing warehouse, and the postponement of the payment of the duty upon the tobacco and the internal-revenue tax upon the cigars made from it until the cigars are withdrawn from the warehouse. The former provision means destructive competition and ultimate annihilation to the leaf-tobacco growers and the cigar manufacturers in the North, West, and East. The latter provision is a boon and a great privilege to cigar manufacturers in Florida, and it will add to their prosperity.

SCHEDULE G.

Under the head of the agricultural schedule it must at least be said for the Senate that it succeeded in correcting the aberration that made food animals dutiable and meat free, oats dutiable and oatmeal free, wheat dutiable and flour free, poultry dutiable and canned and preserved poultry free. Nevertheless the various provisions relating to agricultural products constitute the bill a monument of indifference to and outrageous disregard of the rights and interests of the millions of our fellow citizens who are engaged in agricultural pursuits. This is not a good time to discriminate against the farmer, and every principle of sound policy, fair play, and square dealing cries out against such action.

The best interests of the Nation, now perhaps more than ever before, demand that every possible encouragement be given to agriculture. We are closely approximating—if, indeed, we have not already arrived at—a period where great changes in the conditions under which agricultural production must be carried on are imperative. Farming will now be more than ever an intensive pursuit and will require quite as much ability, ingenuity, and patience as manufacturing occupations require.

Rough treatment has been accorded to the products of the farm. On the free list have been put broom corn, buckwheat and buckwheat flour, corn, corn meal, eggs, flax straw, hemp, milk and cream, potatoes, rye, rye flour, cattle, sheep, swine, wheat, wheat flour, and wool—all of them products of the farm and all of them subject to severe competition from contiguous countries, and especially from our northern neighbor. The placing of these products on the free list and the wholesale reductions on barley, oats, butter, cheese, hay, and fruits, and vegetables generally, fall heavily on the farmers of the North, Northeast, and Northwest; but rice, surely a food product of the masses, continues to bear a heavy duty. This discrimination is most unfair, unstatesmanlike, and exposes the majority to deserved criticism. I do not like to raise the cry of sectionalism, but I do not propose to ignore that which is plainly to be seen, and it can not be denied that duties which are plainly protective are retained on many products mined, grown, or made in the southern sections of this country, such as barytes earth, mica, zinc ore, sugar, tobacco, coarse cotton cloth, Angora goat hair, and tops and yarns of Angora goat hair. The same selfish partiality and discrimination are exhibited in the transfers made to the free list. The bagging which is used for covering bales of cotton and the metal ties or bands that secure the bales, for both of which the southern producer receives the price per pound of cotton, are made free of duty. So are the press cloths that are used by the rich cottonseed-oil producers of the South. Yet the making of bagging, cotton ties, and press cloths are important industries in the North and East and give employment to large numbers of men.

SCHEDULE I.

The cotton schedule of the new bill was certainly made by the rule of thumb. It is a mass of conflicting provisions, doubtful constructions, and verbal puzzles, whereby in some instances, possibly unknown to its authors, rates are actually made higher than those in the present law. Here, too, we find evidences of the same baleful policy of discrimination, for fine fancy cottons have been subjected to the same measure of reduction as the coarse simple weaves. The former are, even under the present law rates, the subject of large and growing importations, and a reduction of duty on them is not good business sense from the revenue standpoint, while of the latter few or none is imported.

The explanation is that the former are made in New England and the latter in the Carolinas and Georgia. In this schedule, too, certain industries which are largely followed in the State which I have the honor to represent in part have received what will in some instances prove a mortal blow. In Philadelphia the manufacture of tapestries and other woven figured upholstery goods had attained a high degree of perfection under the fostering influence of the present law. Beautiful fabrics, equal in design, coloring, material, and finish to those made in Europe, have been turned out in large quantities to beautify American homes with a combination of good taste and a small expenditure. Quite naturally in this class of work the labor costs here are materially higher than in Europe, for they include the compensation of artists and designers who can be had very cheap in France and Germany, but who command high wages in this country. Yet, without regard to any of these considerations and to the advantage of no human being whatsoever excepting the foreign producer the duty on these goods has been reduced 30 per cent, and all the effort which has been expended in building up the industry goes for naught and the men who have been trained to make these fabrics must seek other employment.

The item of hosiery furnishes a striking example of the advantages to the consumer brought about by an active domestic competition made possible by a protective duty. Never before has hosiery been better or cheaper than it has been under the present law, and the domestic industry has been fairly prosperous. Yet the importations have been very large and there has been at all times active competition between the foreign and the domestic product. It would seem that the existence of these facts provided no reason for the extraordinary reduction of duty which has been made on hosiery, but it is perfectly apparent that reason had no place in the lucubrations of the majority. It is idle to say that the consumers will get any benefit from these reductions. Stockings will be sold no cheaper. Already, I am informed, the German manufacturers have been quick to absorb the benefit of the reduction in duty and have raised their prices accordingly. This, I may say, is not peculiar to hosiery, for I have information from many lines of business that the same action is being taken by foreign exporters. My friends of the majority will find that the promises they have made to the people of reductions in the cost of living will not and can not be made good.

SCHEDULE K.

It is difficult to review with moderation or patience the action taken in reference to the wool schedule of the tariff law. The changes and reductions made in it are utterly senseless and unjustified upon any economic or political theory. All duty has been taken from raw wool, and yet manufacturers of woollen goods are protected by a duty. This is opposed to what passed for Democratic doctrine. On the other hand, the reductions in duties on the manufactured goods are out of all proportion to whatever benefit the manufacturers may realize from free wool, and what duty is left is totally inadequate to enable them to compete with foreign producers. This is opposed to Republican doctrine.

The throwing away of the large revenue received from importations of wool is opposed to the doctrines of those who favor a tariff for revenue purposes. In this schedule, too, we find one of the most glaring of the many instances of discrimination that is characteristic of this bill. Wool and the varieties of goat hair that are suitable for spinning have been treated alike for tariff purposes for a great many years. They are used for the same purposes and they closely approximate each other, it being a fact that in some varieties the distinction between hair and wool is not very well marked. Any wool which is raised in a great many States in this country, chiefly in the West, North, and East, is put on the free list, while Angora goat hair, the bulk of which is raised in a single congressional district in Texas, is protected by a duty of 15 per cent, although it is a raw material as that term is generally used. This action is indefensible. This duty is purely a protective duty because the revenue to be derived from importations of this material is as nothing compared to the revenue which the wool duties bring in now. It is an exhibition of the rankest favoritism, and it is wholly unworthy of the representatives of a great party. To make matters worse, notwithstanding the placing of a duty on the raw hair and corresponding compensatory duties on the tops and yarns made therefrom, an enormous reduction in duty has been made upon the plushes and other fabrics which are made from Angora goat hair. The result is disaster to an industry which has been built up in this country entirely by reason of protective duties. Many years ago one of the largest of the English houses established a manufacturing branch in this country which now employs several thousand people, but whose activities will be very materially curtailed. It is quite impossible for manufacturers of such fabrics to compete with England and continental manufacturers under the conditions imposed by this bill. I have information that a very large manufacturer remarked some weeks ago that he expected to reduce his weekly pay roll by about $10,000 in consequence of the transfer of the manufacture to England. That remark was made during the stage of the bill when Angora goat hair was on the free list along with wool. The action of the conference, of course, puts this man in a more unfavorable position than ever and seems likely that the curtailment he mentioned that time was an underestimate.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I simply desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question relating to shipping, but I do not see him present. I should like to ask if any of the other members of the conference committee on the part of the Senate can tell me how many countries there are with whom we have no treaties that would be affected by the provision inserted by the House. I know the chairman of the committee has a letter giving the countries with which we have no treaties, and I should like to have that letter inserted in the Record. I will ask permission, Mr. President, to have that letter inserted in the Record when the chairman of the committee comes in and I can get it. That will answer the question I desire to have answered and which I want to appear in the Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent to have a certain letter incorporated in the Record. Is there objection? There being none, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR,
Washington, October 1, 1913.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to your letter of September 30, 1913, addressed to the Secretary of State, requesting certain information relative to treaties concluded between the Government of the United States and other nations, which may be affected by the enactment into law of the paragraph in the pending tariff act providing for a discount on importations brought into this country in American vessels, I beg to invite your attention to certain treaty provisions which it would seem pertinent for you to consider in connection with the proposed legislation. As you of course understand, the interpretation of treaties between this Government and other countries is a judicial question, and the department therefore is not in a position to give you an authoritative answer as to the matters referred to in your letter.

Nearly all of the so-called commercial treaties between this Government and other nations contain provisions securing for the citizens and subjects of each of the contracting parties reciprocal equality in the matter of duties imposed on the cargoes of the vessels of each country in the ports of the other. The following is an example of a comprehensive provision of this character:

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY, August 27, 1829.

ARTICLE III.

"All kinds of merchandise and articles of commerce, either the produce of the soil or the industry of the United States of America or of any other country, which may be lawfully imported into the ports of the dominions of Austria, in Austrian vessels, may also be so imported in vessels of the United States of America, without paying other or higher duties or charges of whatever kind or denomination, levied in the name or to the profit of the Government, the local authorities, or of any private establishments whatsoever, than if the same merchandise or produce had been imported in Austrian vessels. And, reciprocally, all kinds of merchandise and articles of commerce, either the produce of the soil or of the industry of the dominions of Austria or of any other country, which may be lawfully imported into the ports of the United States, in vessels of the said States, may also be so imported in Austrian vessels without paying other or higher duties or charges, of whatever kind or denomination, levied in the name or to the profit of the Government, the local authorities, or of any private establishments whatsoever, than if the same merchandise or produce had been imported in vessels of the United States of America."

Provisions similar to that quoted above are found in treaties concluded between this Government and the following-named countries: Argentine Republic, July 27, 1853, article 6; Belgium, March 8, 1875, article 5; Bolivia, May 13, 1858, article 4; Colombia, December 12, 1846, article 4; Denmark, April 26, 1826, article 3; Greece, December 22, 1837, article 3; Hanseatic Republics, December 20, 1827, article 1; Italy, February 26, 1871, article 5; Japan, February 21, 1911, article 8; Liberia, October 21, 1862, article 3; Mecklenburg-Schwerin, December 9, 1847, article 1; Netherlands, August 26, 1852, article 1; Paraguay, February 4, 1859, article 6; Prussia, May 1, 1828, article 3; Spain, July 3, 1902, article 8; Sweden and Norway, July 4, 1827, article 3.

Presuming that the effect of the enactment into law of the provision granting to importations in vessels of the United States a discount of 5 per cent on the duties levied by the act would be to permit the entry of goods imported in American vessels at a lower rate of duty than that charged on the same kind of goods imported in foreign vessels—a judicial question—then there would seem to be no question that the result would be a violation of treaty provisions, such as those above referred to, obligating this Government not to impose on the cargoes of the foreign vessels higher or other duties than those imposed on the cargoes of its own vessels.

I beg further to invite your attention to certain treaty provisions which appear to have a narrower scope than those to which attention has been called. Article 2 of the convention of commerce and navigation, concluded between this Government and Great Britain July 3, 1815, contains the following provision:

"The same duties shall be paid on the importation into the United States of any articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of His Britannic Majesty's territories in Europe, whether such importation shall be in vessels of the United States or in British vessels, and the same duties shall be paid on the importation into the ports of any of His Britannic Majesty's territories in Europe of any article the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, whether such importation shall be in British vessels or in vessels of the United States."

You will observe that this provision appears to guarantee to the contracting parties equality in the matter of duties only on such articles of commerce as are the "growth, produce, or manufacture" of each country; and that in the case of the British Government, the stipulations of the treaty apply only to articles having their origin in British territories in Europe.

Provisions which appear to be of the same scope and effect as that in the British treaty are found in the following treaties: Costa Rica, July 10, 1851, article 6; Honduras, July 4, 1864, article 6.

I have not referred above to the commercial convention concluded between the United States and Cuba December 11, 1902. I understand that the pending tariff measure specifically provides that nothing therein contained shall be so construed as to abrogate or impair the effect of the provisions of this agreement.

The following countries which have diplomatic representatives in this country do not appear to have any treaty provisions which would be violated by the enactment into law of the paragraph under consideration: Brazil, Chile, China, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, France, German Empire, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Persia, Peru, Portugal, Russia, Salvador, Siam, Switzerland, Turkey, Uruguay, and Venezuela.

It should be observed that while no commercial treaty has been concluded between the United States and the Government of the German Empire, agreements of this character, concluded with certain of the independent German States which now form parts of the Empire, as indicated above, are regarded by each of the contracting Governments and by the central Government of the Empire as being still in effect.

Trusting that the above may answer your inquiries satisfactorily, I am,

Yours, very sincerely,

JOS. W. FOLKE, Solicitor.

Hon. F. M. SIMMONS,

United States Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I present to the Senate some telegrams and one letter which I have received to-day protesting against certain features of the conference report; also a telegram directed to the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate. It was given to me by his secretary with the request that I present it to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin presents certain telegrams and a letter and asks unanimous consent to have them incorporated in the RECORD, the Chair understands.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that they be presented to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And read at the desk?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The telegrams and letter will be read, as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

NEW YORK, September 30, 1913.

Hon. R. M. LA FOLLETTE,

Washington, D. C.

Proposed glucose rate victory for starch and glucose trust controlling 80 per cent of entire domestic business; not 1 pound of potato glucose made here; proposed potato dextrin rate a victory for incompetency of domestic tapioca dextrin makers who enjoy free tapioca starch clause conflicts with tapioca clause, tapioca starch, and flour cassava starch, and flour both used as starch in dextrin making and also in the sizing of textiles and by many others using same as starch; all these proposed duties are for the big interests and the incompetents. Where is the promised consideration for the consumer who uses these superior products?

CHAS. MORNING STAR & CO.

APPLETON, WIS., September 30, 1913.

ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,

Washington, D. C.

We are advised woven-wire cloth schedule has been canceled by House and duty placed at 15 per cent. We protest vigorously against reduction to below 30 per cent. We have produced figures to show that difference in wages in United States and abroad entitle us to at least 30 per cent protection. Fifteen per cent ruinous to Fourdrinier wire-cloth industry.

LOUIS A. SCHROEDER,

President.

C. E. MAESER,

*Executive Board Wisconsin Division,
American Wire Weavers' Protective Association.*

APPLETON, WIS., October 1, 1913.

Senator ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,

Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: We beg to call to your attention the action taken by the House September 30 on paragraph 116, H. R. 3321, referring therein to Fourdrinier wire cloth. Ways and Means Committee had cut from 45 to 20 per cent, Finance Committee raised it back to 30 per cent, House yesterday reduced it to 15 per cent. If you will investigate, you will find this unfair. Read Schedule C, No. 5, metals and manufactures of, for our brief; also CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 1, page 782.

Yours,

C. E. MAESER,

American Wire Weavers' Protective Association.

APPLETON, WIS., September 30, 1913.

Senator ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,

Washington, D. C.

We are advised that 30 per cent duty on woven wire cloth recommended by Senate has been cut to 15 per cent by House. American wire weavers receive about three times as large wages as wire weavers abroad, and only 15 per cent duty would be a severe blow to our industry and work great hardship to our workmen. We have facts and figures to show that we are entitled to at least 30 per cent protection. We urge 30 per cent can be restored.

APPLETON WIRE WORKS.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., September 30, 1913.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,

Washington, D. C.

Am advised that an ad valorem duty is proposed on cheese. I believe that duty on cheese should be made a specific one, no matter how high, as an ad valorem duty will lead dishonest importers to make crooked declarations. Will you kindly use your influence?

H. B. STANX CHEESE IMPORTING CO.

NEW YORK, September 30, 1913.

Senator R. M. LA FOLLETTE,

Washington, D. C.

Ad valorem on cheese invites fraud; must be specific.

REYNOLDS & CO.

NEW YORK, September 30, 1913.

Senator R. M. LA FOLLETTE,

Washington, D. C.

Ad valorem on cheese invites fraud; new tariff no material reduction.

O. ROTH & CO.

SPOKANE, WASH., September 30, 1913.

Hon. WILLIAM LA FOLLETTE,

Washington, D. C.

Representing Spokane Business Property Association, I respectfully request use your influence with conferees tariff bill; have provision income-tax law stricken, which authorizes lessees deduct tax certain rentals. It is only fair and right that owners should pay net income tax direct, same as any other corporation or individual.

R. F. HANKE, Secretary.

NEW YORK, October 1, 1913.

Hon. R. M. LA FOLLETTE,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Income-tax proviso re collectors contains clause that employees when not employed on income-tax work shall be employed on general internal-revenue work. Would allow packing service with politicians by avoiding appointments through examination for two years. Can it be shown up in Senate?

ROBERT W. BELCHER,

National Civil Service Reform League.

AMERICAN SWISS FILE & TOOL CO.,

New York, September 30, 1913.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

